MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GROSVENOR having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. BARNES, one of his secretaries.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I shall claim the attention of the committee for a few minutes, and that on a certain kind of discussion. I am unwilling, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to pass and fail to put on record the facts and the history connected with the prosperity of the South that made it possible for the [illegible] gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] to tell the country that he [illegible] "The story of the South." Mr. Chairman, I concur in every word that the gentleman from Illinois said relative to the prosperity of the South, taken, though, as he said it was, and made up by the work of [illegible] and the people of [illegible]. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that this prosperity had [illegible] and foundations that come from the growth of the great manufacturing, agricultural, mineral, and other interests of the South.

I say I believe that these facts are better [illegible] and understood by referring to those statistics taken from [illegible] purpose. No man on this floor responds more [illegible] than I do to the loyal, noble, and patriotic sentiments that the accomplished gentleman so sonorously uttered when he said that he was glad to know that the bitterness and animosity that were produced years ago by our great civil conflict had passed away. That sentiment finds a hearty response with the people of the South. I stood, not many months since, upon that [illegible] battlefield of the South—the battlefield of Chickamauga—and I read there the beautiful and patriotic inscriptions that the different States of the North and South had made, commemorative of the magnificent and glorious deeds of their noble sons, and I wondered if there was a patriotic American who could read those inscriptions and not feel a proud inspiration that it was a splendid tribute to American courage.

I believe in that sentiment, and I say now to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois that the "story" of the prosperity of the South has been whispered for years into the hearts of the wonderful, patient, and long-suffering people of the South and given to them a [illegible] and hope that [illegible] never realized before. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to discuss the hackneyed and worn subject of the race problem, save as logically connected with the industrial growth of the South. I believe even now that too much has been said on that subject of a sectional partisan character. "Let us [illegible] the South, and so far as the logic of our industrial progress and its [illegible] and development is concerned we will settle [illegible] great question. I hope there is no gentleman on [illegible] this Chamber who feels otherwise than that this question, called the "negro problem," ought to be settled [illegible] with due regard to the material interests of the South and the peace of the country at large. That which I will [illegible] me to believe that the progress, development, and growth [illegible] trial interests of the South is fast settling that question.

No man doubts [illegible] minority in the South [illegible] shops, the mines, and the cultivation of the soil, [illegible] step in the direction of settling the so-called "negro problem." Now, what are the facts about this? What is it that has contributed an important part to this wonderful prosperity, present and future, in the South? I am glad, Mr. Chairman, yes, I rejoice, to be able to stand here and say that in my humble opinion the South to-day stands upon the threshold of a greater growth and prosperity than the most favored section of the world has ever realized.

We feel it in the atmosphere. We see it in the unexcelled opportunities and advantages that the South holds out to the world for profitable investment. The attention of the whole country—yes, even of the world—is fixed on our section. This means immigration will follow, and has now set in. All of this points to commercial supremacy. The first significant fact that I call the attention of the committee to is this: Go to the last census, and what startling fact do you find there? There were 34,000,000 acres of tillable land in the South that was cultivated in the twelve months preceding the publication of the census.

How was it cultivated? Who did it? It speaks more than volumes can tell of the wonderful changes that are going on in our industrial interests in the South. Out of that 34,000,000 acres of tillable cotton land, white men cultivated and raised cotton on 14,000,000 acres of it; 5,000,000 were cultivated by what were known as "managers" who employed negro labor. Is not that a significant fact? Is it not more than a whisper in the ear as to the progress and development of the South, a wholesome change in our [illegible]? The idea and theory that worthy, good, intelligent and respectable white people will not and can not cultivate and raise cotton and that negro labor alone can make cotton cultivation a success is [illegible]. The South is [illegible] tended to disturb the friendly relations between the white people of the South and the negro. We welcome this movement [illegible] auspiciously commenced to have white people cultivate the farming lands of the South. We say this in no spirit of hostility.

It is a change the significance of which ought to attract the attention and approval of every patriotic man, North and South. And, as suggested just now, we of the South have that question in our own hands. We are more interested in the peaceable and honest solution of it than any other section of the Union. In that connection, I will take occasion to read a few extracts from great and prominent northern newspapers that indicates what the trend of public opinion in the North is on this subject-matter. It shows how public opinion is working on it. I read from the Philadelphia Record, a conservative, able, and leading newspaper, published in the great "City of brotherly love"—Philadelphia—and no soul can be more loyal and patriotic than the sentiment of the people that it gives [illegible] to utterance. Listen:

> The [illegible] upon distran- [illegible] Appomattox if, [illegible] or [illegible] protect themselves against African intrusion.

That is ominous, yet how true! "Take measures to protect themselves against African intrusion," says the Record. I do not say in any spirit of levity that the trouble heretofore on this subject with northern people is that distance gave enchantment to the negro. The question is drawing near to them now, and when it does they will solve it in the best way for the interests of themselves, their families, and their States, just like the South is doing to-day.

Why, then, should the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] complain so lustily, as he did in his remarks on the floor yesterday, about the constitutions of the different States in the South in seeking to protect themselves from that very element of citizens of which the Record says, "Our heavy negro vote is already a political misfortune, contributing potentially toward the continuance of misgovernment." Learn first to pluck the beam from your own eye, and then you can see more clearly to pluck the mote out of your brother's eyes. I say this in the kindliest spirit. This is a question that we ought to discuss free from partisanship or prejudice.

Now I will read another paragraph. I admit, Mr. Chairman, that the people [illegible] that we can never fully repay until the last old antebellum negro in the South has disappeared. We feel that and recognize it. Here is another item from the Pittsburg Dispatch. This, too, is a powerful public organ in shaping public opinion and in reflecting it:

> [illegible] majority of the negroes, especially those raised in the North, are [illegible]

> "His temperament leads him into a recklessness and flagrancy of crime that has few parallels," etc.

Why, Mr. Chairman, what severer criticism could I make on the negro than that? I refer to it simply to show that there is a drift of public opinion on this subject that will soon relegate the negro question to the shades of the rear.

These are the sentiments coming from the leading newspapers of the North, and my judgment is that to-day we represent [illegible] the conservative public sentiment of the North [illegible] dispose of it for itself. They realize that they have in the North a problem to settle far greater than the South has in the settlement of the negro problem.

Mr. BOUTELL. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. With pleasure.

Mr. BOUTELL. I would like to ask whether in the opinion of the gentleman the tide of European immigration that almost always follows great prosperity in any section of the land will not naturally tend to the South, and perhaps, as we all hope, in a few years settle this question naturally.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I say that it not only tends to go there, but it is actually going there now; and I am [illegible] day so doing more as an immigration agent for the South than in any other capacity. I believe that when the white people commence to raise cotton and explode the old idea that nobody but a negro can raise it—that when that takes [illegible] grant a will come bountifully into the South.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. There is an immigration coming into the South, but it is coming mainly from the [illegible] and the Northwestern States. In [illegible] immigration of Europe, mainly from [illegible] Italy. They have [illegible] much more out of the land for everybody, as well as for themselves, than the incoming negro population has ever been able to do. We do not apprehend very much from the European immigration generally. We expect that other immigration among [illegible] negro population. But [illegible] from Iowa, Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio, and these men, I am glad to say, within two or three years after they get there, whether Democrats or Republicans, are Southerners to the backbone, and more ultra than are our own people in the South [illegible].

Mr. BOUTELL. Why we not hope to encourage the European immigration?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. So that we get honest, good, patriotic, intelligent citizens for our country, let them come from wherever they may. I will tell you the fact, Mr. Chairman, in reference to these white men [illegible] acres in the South, has been to drive the negro to the cities and towns and there to [illegible] criminals. No man will understand me as including all negroes in that class. It would be untrue and unjust for me to do so. We have a large number of worthy, intelligent, respectable negroes who spurn and condemn the vagrant and criminal class of their own race and do not associate with them. This class of negroes are respected by all the people of the South.

It is for that reason that the [illegible] such a strenuous position on the subject of vagrants [illegible] to vote.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, does not the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] believe that the [illegible] a large per cent of the population in the [illegible] driven away, in point of fact, the [illegible] by law against the citizenship of the colored man is one of the strong obstacles in the way of the coming to the South of the immigration that has been coming to this country that is valuable [illegible] Now, [illegible] so forth into the South are going there, are they not [illegible] velop your resources with their money; and is it not a fact that the population coming from these States, which the gentleman has enumerated, into the South [illegible] many things—timber, coal, and iron—as in the State of Alabama, and all that?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Do they not go as laborers for the northern capitalists who are developing their [illegible]?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. They come there, the great majority of them, for the purpose of buying small farms and cultivating them themselves. That is preeminently the case in the Tennessee Valley, that I have the honor to represent on the floor of this House; and not only that, but these men that come there from Ohio and from North and South Dakota and from other Northern States. [illegible] voted for the new constitution of Alabama which disfranchises, as you say, the negro.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] will excuse me, in further answer to the question of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], I would state that there are whole towns of these people. They are forming colonies, like, for instance, [illegible], Ga., and Highland, Miss., and several others; and that the people go there to live, not merely to invest capital.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Yes; they are forming colonies in some of the counties in my district. They have a magnificent colony in Cullman, in the district just below me, and that is taking place all over that section of the South. They are purchasing farms, and our own native white population are buying and cultivating small farms.

Mr. WILEY of Alabama. If the gentleman will excuse me, I would like to make a statement.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Certainly.

Mr. WILEY of Alabama. I want to say that in my district in Baldwin County, there is a large colony of gentlemen, composed [illegible] from Ohio and Illinois. They [illegible] California. They have small farms, and [illegible] best parts and a [illegible] of our citizenship, and we welcome them to our [illegible].

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman will allow me, I want to say that I ask these questions only for information. I have no opinion on the subject.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Certainly; and if I can answer any questions I will do so cheerfully.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have been answered, and I am [illegible] and it is the most hopeful [illegible] I am [illegible].

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. And [illegible] tion—just what we say it will do. Let us alone. Do not [illegible] and stand in dread of the South [illegible] States. That [illegible] I say that I would [illegible] of Representatives of the American Congress who wants the race question settled otherwise than peacefully and without sectional friction. Take the South away. What [illegible] Congress [illegible] of Lowland under that [illegible]. We are not building up a growth and prosperity that [illegible] nation and wonder of the world. Why is it, then, that people think we want disturbance and conflict? Let us alone and we will settle the question and settle it to the strength and glory of the American Union. [Applause.]

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman to yield just one more time. I dislike very much to interrupt him.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Not at all; I am glad to be interrupted by the gentleman.

Mr. BOUTELL. I want to revert just one moment to something that seemed to be insinuated in the remarks made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] that there was some sinister purpose on my side in the South. Now, we all know [illegible] flows along its channel [illegible]. I would like to have back some of this house join hands [illegible] northern Italy and southern Germany and southern France that they will find no [illegible] similar to their own, to go to their [illegible] Republic.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I think that is the truth.

Mr. BOUTELL. [illegible] that is preventing that sort of [illegible] at work [illegible] here on the floor of the House [illegible] to it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. What we need is [illegible] against anything that would operate in this way as a discouragement. I believe [illegible] expressed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL] are the [illegible] of his heart, that he believes that whenever [illegible] take the place of the negro and the negroes are [illegible] throughout the [illegible] settlement of the negro problem, and make it in a proper way. We do not object to that disposition. It will be a [illegible] for the Northern States to take some of the negro population. The sentiment will then be understood. More opposed to a wholesale colonization of the negroes of the South.

Now I [illegible] further in reference to the beautiful "story" that [illegible] from Illinois [illegible] in such eloquent and [illegible] words [illegible] on the floor of this House [illegible] yesterday [illegible] story to which I listened with a great deal of interest.

Let us look and see what the South is really doing. It is a matter [illegible] to a page above [illegible] study it; it creates the [illegible] when [illegible] the question and [illegible] in a comparative manner. I have taken occasion, in the short time that I have had to look into the matter, to find out some of the facts. Of course, I can only refer in a limited way to statistics. In considering this question no fair-minded man will pretend to deny that the South only got on its feet, was only in a position to do [illegible] for itself about the year 1880—I will not go back, because it would look as if I were seeking political purposes. I will not go back to compare Democratic administration in Alabama or any other Southern State [illegible] Republican administration [illegible] the war and during reconstruction. Is there a man on this floor of this House who would say for a moment that the South to-day would be [illegible] prosperity and [illegible] for a contemporaneous and [illegible] in any of the Southern States [illegible] would be invested there. The fact that the [illegible] conservative [illegible] are administering the affairs of those States [illegible] about our [illegible] and guarantees and insures an unlimited prosperity in the early future.

Twenty years ago the South manufactured in her mills [illegible] Last report. We [illegible] In that short space of time [illegible] our Republic. She to-day [illegible] cent of the cotton [illegible] What does that mean? What does it signify? Nothing [illegible] nothing more than this—simply. The northern man, like the southern man, [illegible] has been investing and [illegible] upon the money that he invests. We have the advantage, we have a [illegible] advantages superior to the North for the [illegible] That shall that it means. Listen to this. It [illegible] then the gentleman from Illinois can tell it and [illegible] can. I take it from the Manufacturers' Record:

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Does the gentleman desire further time?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will five minutes be sufficient?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I should like longer time than that.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, how much time is [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts in the chair). One [illegible]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Very well. I yield [illegible] minutes more to the [illegible]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I am much obliged to the [illegible]

[illegible] about to say, of those 110,000,000 spindles, the South [illegible] which has begun? Do you [illegible] who have put money in these enterprises will sit [illegible] down and fold [illegible] No, sir.

It is just such facts as these that will enable the North to better understand the South. That is what we need. These are the facts that will break down the walls of sectional feeling and misunderstanding.

Take the town where I have the pleasure to live and a few years since we had but one [illegible] Lowell, Mass., will, when it comes to a [illegible] bring there, as has been conservatively estimated, a population of 10,000 [illegible] I just received the news the [illegible] be erected there at Birmingham, Ala. [illegible] these also are large enterprises. All the mills [illegible] prosperity.

Just before I left home an estimate was made of the [illegible] value of the products of the cotton mills at that place. [illegible] that way want to be disturbed in their ordinary [illegible] and business by assuming the population on so [illegible] and quietude that capital de[illegible]

[illegible] more reason or inducement in the South to observe the law and do what [illegible] Not in humiliation, not in recognition of anything that is unbecoming to us as men of honor and courage, but to advance our own interests, to advance our pecuniary welfare; and in doing that we shall find, if [illegible], a solution of this vexatious problem about the negro. We shall find it peacefully and quietly settled.

Now, Mr. Chairman, [illegible] sir, [illegible]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will five minutes be sufficient?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I should like longer time than that.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, how much time is [illegible]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Very well. I yield [illegible] minutes more to the [illegible]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I am much obliged to the [illegible]

[illegible] about to say, of those 110,000,000 spindles, the South [illegible] which has begun? Do you [illegible] who have put money in these enterprises will sit [illegible] down and fold [illegible] No, sir.

Just before I left home an estimate was made of the [illegible] value of the products of the cotton mills at that place. [illegible] that way want to be disturbed in their ordinary [illegible] and business by assuming the population on so [illegible] and quietude that capital de[illegible]

[illegible] more reason or inducement in the South to observe the law and do what [illegible] Not in humiliation, not in recognition of anything that is unbecoming to us as men of honor and courage, but to advance our own interests, to advance our pecuniary welfare; and in doing that we shall find, if [illegible], a solution of this vexatious problem about the negro. We shall find it peacefully and quietly settled.

Now, Mr. Chairman, [illegible] sir, [illegible]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Does the gentleman desire further time?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Yes, sir.

There is one thing else that I desire to call attention to and express my views upon. I have often said that I do not believe that Congressmen were paid enough, and I heard a distinguished gentleman from Maine, whom I do not see on the floor now, not long since make a very truthful remark. He said when he was at home he could touch a bell and one or two bell boys would answer it; but here, in his representative capacity as a Congressman, they touch the bell, and he had to answer, [illegible] the duties and the burdens that we labor under as Congressmen.

The question of mileage is what I refer to. While I say that I do not believe that we are as well paid as we probably we ought to be, I believe that the Executive branch of the government is paid enough, and under the act of the last Congress I voted to increase their pay, but I do not want to touch or have anything connected with it that has stood it the taint of [illegible]. Now, I am governed in my opinion, as every other lawyer will be, according to his own construction of the statute. I would not have mentioned it, because I never would have shown of it if it had not been brought up on the floor of the House. I hope [illegible] any other Member of the House, by my own [illegible], to my constituents, who, I think, would give me that credit for honesty in any vote I would cast here. Section 17 of the Statutes at Large of the United States, Twenty-ninth Congress, volume 14, page [illegible], reads as follows:

Now, I admit, Mr. Chairman, that I am great stress upon the word "regular." I understand that it has been done in the extra session called by President McKinley, as well as in the extra session called by President Cleveland. The sessions adjourned before the regular session commenced. Where the Constitution says that at least one term of Congress shall meet each year, the implication is very strong, as a matter of course, that after their session can meet, and when it meets and adjourns before the regular session shall commence the Members would be entitled to mileage. But when they meet, as we did on the 9th day of November, and glide quietly and softly out of that, without any line of demarcation or distinction, into the "regular" session, in my humble view, I do not believe that I am entitled to the mileage provided for in the urgent deficiency bill.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Certainly.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. There are two methods of meeting by Congress.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Both are fixed by the Constitution. The Constitution provides that Congress shall meet on the first Monday of December.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Then there is another provision of the Constitution providing that on extraordinary occasions the President may convene Congress. Now, both of these methods of meeting are by virtue of the Constitution itself. Now can we construe any session of Congress called by the President in pursuance of that constitutional power, or meeting itself in pursuance of the Constitution, anything but a regular session?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I admit that there is a hazy line [illegible] along there, and the fact that [illegible] in my opinion, is that we did not meet. It was a continuing session. We did not adjourn.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I ask the privilege of extending my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I will ask that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time is under the control of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I think [illegible] will be satisfied for me to give the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I wanted off in my answer. I admit that there is a hazy line [illegible] under the ordinary construction of statutes there is a great difference [illegible] the meeting of Congress to receive the President's message [illegible] and in favor of the [illegible].

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. While I may agree with the gentleman that, under the present construction of the law in reference to this question, the Congress which met here in last voting the mileage, I have not the slightest doubt that extra sessions of Congress are regular and by law technically we have the right to make the appropriation.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Then you believe it is the law for us to get that mileage?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I believe we would be entitled to it technically under the law, but under existing conditions I think it would be unwise for us to vote it, and I would rather forego it than pass the appropriation under those conditions.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I do not intend, Mr. Chairman, to take money that I would have to accept technically.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do not either.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I want to get it absolutely legally, but I am not criticising anybody's views or opinions. I have as much respect for the gentleman's opinion of law as any man on the floor of the House, but I am giving my own construction of it.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I have not any doubt about that, but there are gentlemen who think we are entitled to this as a matter of law, of right, and of morals. I agree with those gentlemen that we have the right to take this mileage under the law, that we have the right to take it morally. But it is a question of question to vote money to ourselves. I think, under the existing circumstances, that in the interest of economy and to avoid the appearance of wrong, that it is best to resolve the doubts and all equities in favor of our constituents and not vote for the mileage. I am simply disagreeing with the gentleman's views of reasoning.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I frankly say to my friend from Tennessee that if I believed that I had a right to it legally I should vote for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LAMAR of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with considerable interest and with profound attention to the discussions on this floor for the past three months, and especially did I listen with interest to the gentlemen this morning on the other side of the House. But they need not worry about the dissolution of the Democratic party; neither need they worry themselves with invitations to us to come over and join their ranks. The death of the Democratic party was predicted a century ago; Federalism was to dispatch it, but Federalism died and was buried with the elder Adams.

After that the Whig party, perhaps the purist and best opponent the Democratic party ever had, was its decreed executioner; but the Whig party did not survive its great leader, Henry Clay. For a century the Democratic party in this land has been the champion of individual liberty and personal rights and has stood as a bulwark between the aggressions of concentrated wealth and power and the rights of the people, and when those principles which the gentleman espouses and that party of which he proudly boasts have been relegated to oblivion and are only remembered among the reminiscences of what once had an existence the Democratic party will still live. Democracy contains within itself the indestructible elements of perpetuity, and so long as free government and free institutions live the Democratic party will continue to exist. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I did not intend to and would not have referred to this but for the fact that the gentleman from Mississippi appeared so much troubled over our impending political dissolution, and the invitation so many times repeated by him for us to disband and join the Republicans.

You ridicule us because we exercise individual opinions; because the Democracy is made up of men who choose to think for themselves; because no one man among us can usurp to himself the power and authority in advance of a convention of the people representing all our party to name a candidate for the Presidency or to make a platform in all its details. The Democratic party is not the subservient tool of any one man or coterie of men. And I say to the gentleman now that out of this conflict of individual opinion and [illegible] and the intelligence of the Democratic party will construct a platform and nominate a man which will before next November lead him to change his ideas as to the decadence of the Democratic party.

I have listened attentively to the discussions and debates of the House and have been much interested; but the reasoning and logic displayed by the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber appeared [illegible] to me the exact position they occupy. They [illegible] that the present tariff law must not be interfered with; that any modification of existing rates would imperil the prospects, and perhaps the existence, of many of our industrial concerns; would close the furnaces, shut down our factories, stop the wheels of our mills, and bring in its train all the evils [illegible] tribe; and especially they say it would result in throwing out of employment, or reducing the wages of the poor laborer, for whom they express such apparent concern. When any reduction or modification of duties on the necessaries of life is mentioned, they immediately associate much of [illegible] with the pauper labor of Europe, and tell us such a reduction would ruin us, and that our manufactories are unable to meet such competition. I quote here from an article from the American Economist of December 25, 1903, the organ of the American Protective Tariff League, in reply to an editorial in the Springfield Republican. The editorial is as follows:

[illegible]

The reply to that from the Economist is this:

[illegible]

And this is the burden of the argument of the other side on this floor, that without protection, solely for protection's sake, without reference to any consideration of the revenues of the Government, our industrial system could not stand; that it can not, unaided by its protection, unsheltered by prohibitive tariff, withstand the flood of cheap goods from foreign factories with which our markets would be overwhelmed, and we are told they are "too wise to revise the tariff on the eve of a Presidential election," and that they are "standing pat," and that they "hold the ace," which [illegible] many assets.

Since the [illegible] the debate on the Cuban bill, I was surprised at some of the admissions made by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], the leader of the majority on this floor. Ever since I can remember Republicans have been trying to teach the people in my State, first, that "the tariff is not a tax at all," and, secondly, that "if it is a tax, the foreigner pays it," and to intimate that it is a tax, which the consumer must and does pay, would there be considered by all good Republicans the rankest kind of heresy, and for a Republican to admit it, treason even of a worse sort than the "Iowa idea."

Yet the distinguished gentleman from New York said in the course of the debate, to which I have referred—alluding to the tariff on sugar, "and so it is we put the rate of duty higher on sugar than was absolutely necessary, because we could get this splendid revenue from the sugar duty; a revenue that came from the people of the United States, who used it in their households." Verily, it is then true, as we have so long contended, that the consumers of this country pay, in the increased cost to them, the duty on the almost innumerable articles of daily necessity and consumption, and which in most instances does not go to the Government to enhance its revenue, but into the coffers of some trust to enable it to declare a larger dividend on its watered stock, while at the same time reducing the wages of its employees. You admit that the increased cost, by reason of the tariff, on reapers and mowers, and plows, and hoes, and rakes, and harness, and wagons; on wire and nails, and sewing machines, and cutlery; on shoes and clothing, and china and stone ware, and on the thousands of articles of necessity which enter into the millions of homes throughout this land, is paid by the consumers, and that this species of toll—for it is a toll—is collected from all, for all use and consume some of these articles; is taken from the earnings of one class, by virtue of this species of legislation, and given to another class.

Our Republican friends are remarkable for the modesty of their claims. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is full of figures and statistical tables and comparisons of the present condition of the country as contrasted with that of ten, twenty, and thirty years ago. If they find more people here now, it is due to the Dingley law. If they find more mines and farms and factories and railroads than we had two or three decades back, it is, according to their logic, due to protection. If a benificent Providence has sent the sunshine and showers and seasons to bless the industry of our farmers with good crops, they sing praises to the Dingley bill and not to the Almighty. If our population has increased and multiplied, they, by some process of reasoning satisfactory, I suppose, to themselves, give credit to the Republican party and not to that blessed class of American women who prefer rearing children to leading a poodle dog by a string. [Applause.] Neither supply and demand, nor failure of crops, nor foreign wars, nor famine, as they reason, have any effect on prices. If mules raise in price on account of foreign wars, blessed is the Dingley law. To them it is "the source from which all blessings flow."

In a circulation statement issued by the Treasury Department January 1, 1904, the average circulation per capita for the United States on that date is given at $30.38. And because the average per capita circulation is greater than at some period in the past, because there is more wealth in the nation to-day than there was a decade ago, we are to lose sight of its distribution, lose sight of the question of whether the people who produce that wealth receive their just share of it, but are told we must "stand pat" and "keep on letting well enough alone" on the simple proposition "that because the country as a whole is increasing in wealth we must assume that the laws are just and equitable and need no alteration or modification." No one denies that the country is increasing in population, in wealth, and in power, but the vice in this line of reasoning lies in averaging the wealth.

By the same system of reasoning it can be demonstrated that a pauper and a multimillionaire, on an "average," are both millionaires, but the one is several times a millionaire while the other has nothing. The trouble is it is only in figures and averages, and it requires quite a stretch of the imaginative faculties, even of a Republican, to imagine the equitable distribution among the people who produce it and from whose pockets it has been extracted of the millions and billions of dollars owned and controlled by these tariff fostered and tariff shielded trusts and which go into the average of the wealth of the country. These "average" circulation statistics and "average" property statistics are perhaps all right as "averages" on paper; but the truth is the wealth has been diverted by class legislation from those who produced it to the favored class, many of whom "toil not, neither do they spin, yet Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these."

Their modesty is remarkable. If the price of an article is increased—under their logic—it is the Dingley law; if wages are higher there is no possible explanation or reason to be given for it than the protective system. A year ago, when stocks and securities were high, all this prosperity was the outgrowth of Republican policies; but when the bubble bursts—when stocks go down, when wages are cut, and men are thrown out of employment—then we are gravely told that the Dingley law has nothing to do with it.

I desire here to read an editorial from the Springfield Republican, and a reply from that same paper to which I referred a moment ago; the American Economist. The Springfield Republican says this:

Mr. HANNA stood up before the Republican national committee yesterday [illegible] "

[illegible] destructive war?

Replying to that editorial, the Economist has this to say:

[illegible]

Here the great champion of protection, the most ultra "standpatter," the organ of the tariff league, the paper that strenuously opposed the Cuban reciprocity bill as a breach in the protective fortifications, the mouthpiece of protection, admits that the Dingley law has nothing to do with the price of cotton, nothing to do with the reduction in wages of the thousands of cotton workers in the mills of New England, nothing to do with the conditions which have resulted in idleness of a hundred thousand men, nothing to do with the consumption of foreign and home products, nothing to do with the decline of industry and the real necessities. Had the opposite occurred our friends would have loudly proclaimed that their policies and laws caused it all.

We have been trying for years to combat this theory—that "the tariff is not a tax," and "the foreigner pays it," and that it costs the consumer nothing, and have called hard and long and patiently to the people that we were mistaken, and now it is rather gratifying to hear the distinguished gentleman admit it. That statement, that the tariff is a tax, which the consumer pays, coming from the distinguished leader of the other side admits a fact which Republicans have denied and Democrats asserted for so long "that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary." This interesting admission overturns the whole protective theory into the sugar declaration of taxation of all the consumers for the benefit of a few protected interests. But without conceding the soundness of this doctrine, even if protection were necessary for the profitable employment of our mills and factories, let us examine the collected facts and see how it, without the tariff, or at least with a material modification of many of its schedules, they could not still operate at a profit, and if the shelter it affords by preventing competition does not enable them to practice extortion upon the great body of American consumers.

I quote here from pages 15, 16, 17, and 18 of the last Republican campaign text-book:

This statement also was used almost verbatim by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAMAR] in a speech delivered in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 16, 1903. On December 20, 1903, an article appeared in the St. Louis Republic, written by the correspondent of that paper in the United States [illegible] I think Mr. Frank G. Carpenter—and I desire to copy that article in my remarks at this point.

Ah, gentlemen, [illegible] sion of the question. It may be all [illegible] will [illegible] to construct, repair, and operate railroads, they must [illegible] of [illegible], and do charge the people more who use them. You [illegible] not [illegible] They are [illegible] out of employment, and in the next tell us these same [illegible] our [illegible] of [illegible]

The soil of South Africa, Australia, and Japan is turned by American plows, shipped there under the Dingley law, and sold, after paying the freight, in competition with the trade of the world. Yet the American, over whose field perhaps floats the smoke from the very factory making these plows, must pay 20 per cent, or one-fifth, more, not to the Government, but to the implement trust, for the plow he follows. The clatter of American harvesters shipped there, you tell us, under the Dingley law, and sold, after paying freights, in competition with the world, may be heard in Europe and in Asia and wherever [illegible] or Iowa farmer who buys a [illegible] must pay 20 per cent, or one-fifth, more into the till of the "international harvester" trust.

The hum of the American sewing machine may be heard along the banks of the Bosporus, the Danube, and [illegible] sold in competition with the trade of the world. Yet the poor American seamstress who lives under the very shadow of the factory where they are made must, when she buys a machine, if she is so fortunate as to be able to own one, pay a higher price than is paid by the German peasant on the banks of the [illegible]

[illegible] adelphia draw the crowned heads or royalty over European hills, and that the [illegible] silent solitudes of the Siberian desert are awakened [illegible] shrill whistle of the American engine, running over [illegible] carry the grain and live stock of America's farms [illegible] on; that these American manufacturers are [illegible] and [illegible] oriental potentates cheaper and better and [illegible] say that [illegible] that the American who consumes [illegible] for their benefit.

You tell us "American shoes have captured the favor of Europe, and the foreign makers are hastening to import our machinery that they may compete [illegible] and in L[illegible] shipped there under the Dingley law," and yet the American shoe manufacturers must, by legislation, be permitted to extort from the earnings of the American purchaser of shoes from 25 per cent to 45 per cent increase in cost to protect these same manufacturers from competition with the European shoe manufacturers, and the very man who drives a peg or stitches a seam in the shoe in the factory where they are made must contribute his share of this bonus, or tribute, to the shoe trust, under this unholy schedule. Such are the blessings of protection.

"We are shipping cutlery to Sheffield," yet the American housewife must pay from 40 to 60 per cent more for her table cutlery—her knives and forks—her dishes, her china and glass and earthenware, that the tariff barons may enjoy the beneficient results of protection. You say, in your campaign book, and I assume it was prepared after deliberation and with consideration, and you ratify and confirm it on the floor of this House, "In the list of our triumphs we would find that American exports have not been confined to specialties nor limited as to markets. We have been successfully meeting competition everywhere." If you can pay [illegible] and meet competition there, why can't you do it here, with such incidental protection as a strictly revenue tariff would afford, when the burden of the item of freight rates would be lifted from you and added to the selling price of that competitor who can't meet your prices on his own ground. If he can meet your prices when you pay the freight, how under heaven can he undersell you when he pays the freight.

I want to insert at this point a table showing domestic and foreign prices on a number of articles:

I [illegible] it may be said that some of [illegible] of [illegible] for supposing that similar prices and differences [illegible]

[illegible] Figures and schedules are to most people very dry reading. My deliberate judgment is that it is only because of the insidious and deceptive methods by which this system of legalized extortion is carried on that it has been tolerated this long. No man knows or can tell at the end of the year the precise amount he has been forced to pay by reason of it in increased cost to him of the articles he purchased during the year. And it would require a vast amount of study and labor to find out. On some things there is a specific duty, on some an ad valorem, on others both, and on others a graduated rate, varying on different classes of the same article.

The Spanish war revenue law suggested a thought to me. If under the revenue laws articles were priced at what the cost would be without the tax, and then the purchaser had to pay a revenue stamp representing the amount of the tax, instead of the duty; if the farmer could buy his plow, his mower, his reaper, his feeding stove, his nails, his harness, his shoes, his clothing, and his furniture at what they would cost him if there were no duty, and then were forced to add the amount of the tax in the form of a revenue stamp to be purchased by stamps for a specific amount, to paste on the article, if the good housewife could buy her calico, her linen and household necessities for what they would cost less duty, and then had to expend one-third more for a revenue stamp to be purchased, pasted on the article, and cancelled before she did it, and then had paid for the stamps out of her pocket, the Government Treasury, but would it be the answer some of our friends insist, if this or any other system equally bad were used the people would fully know just when, how often, and how much was extracted from them that the manufacturing promoters now by stealth at the expense, there would not be that one universal cry against any and all protective systems of legalized robbery which should be revised and reconstructed along the lines of a strictly protective basis.

You talk about the "dinner pail and the workingman," and on while you are working Democrats are forging laws and all employment and the cost of living as the wise men know it has gone far, far above 9 of this, that has increased since January 1, 1897, more than 40 per cent. Here is that statement in detail:

in the Treasury, and during this decade an occasional interest charge. From 1890 to 1900 [illegible] in the Treasury of the United States and from [illegible] were [illegible] partly in the banks and partly in the Treasury.

Now, then, gentlemen, I believe it ought to be all put in the banks and not withdrawn from circulation, so that it might be used and not hoarded up.

I believe it would be wise to change the law and permit that to be done. But I [illegible] between the [illegible] and the [illegible] or in it, which seems to be [illegible] I am glad that [illegible] in the policy of the [illegible] party. [illegible] and has referred to the Ways and Means Committee a bill of its own as an alternative proposition.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Not as an alternative proposition to the Aldrich bill.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Well, as a substitute proposition for the present condition of things, and I ask the gentleman what is the [illegible]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It is meant to strike [illegible] that is now existing, that is all. It does not pretend to be a comprehensive banking and currency measure at all.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. It was certainly introduced for some purpose. Now, what is the purpose and [illegible] That fund in three months the [illegible] States should be put up at auction to the highest [illegible] to be passed on call or to be placed on time. [illegible] Republican or Democratic side any policy [illegible] gerous use of the Government funds. [illegible] of the Aldrich and [illegible] I was opposed to it. Our funds are now secured by United States bonds. A proposition was introduced at the last session of Congress to have them secured by miscellaneous securities.

Now, I want to show you the retrograde [illegible] since that came in. Under that bill Government deposits could be secured by State bonds which had not defaulted on their interest, the bonds of certain dividend paying railroads, and the bonds of certain cities of a hundred thousand population. What happened? Certain gentlemen rose up and stated that the bonds of their cities were just as good as if they had a hundred thousand population, and down went the limit of population to 50,000. Another gentleman rose and said: "I live in a city where the population is only 15,000, but our bonds are absolutely good, as good as those of the city of New York," and down went the limit again. Down went the limit on railroad bonds.

Then it came to county bonds, and nobody knows where it will end if the door is once opened. And [illegible] I see a very distinguished gentleman sitting here right before me whose acquaintance I enjoy and appreciate, yet in this session of Congress he has introduced a bill by which he proposes to permit the United States to make an absolute investment of its surplus money in miscellaneous bonds, county bonds, State bonds, etc., to be bought and sold in the markets. The United States Treasury on Wall street, think of it. That is not all. In another end of the Capitol we have got a bill for the use of these same miscellaneous bonds to secure national bank circulation, and thus in the way we have gone since that original proposition of the Aldrich bill was introduced. There is where we have gone and there is the tendency, and, gentlemen, I must confess that this proposition is still more dangerous than anything I have seen.

Now, could it be [illegible]? No. It is absolutely impossible, with safety to the country. And if anything was accomplished it would be wholly in the opposite direction from that which the distinguished gentleman expected. Now, why? The Aldrich bill possessed the same [illegible] that this bill does. That had been carefully considered and [illegible] one day a telegram came from Chicago, a [illegible] by the officers of every bank in the city, protesting against its passage. Why? Because the effect of it, gentlemen, would have been exactly the same as this would produce, namely, to strip every Government deposit from every country bank throughout the United States and concentrate them in Wall street; and I do not believe that is what the gentleman from Mississippi intends.

Now, let me demonstrate it. In making a comparison of this bill [illegible] is bill if the plan of the gentleman from Mississippi [illegible] cent, would take [illegible] an annual loss of interest [illegible] when that purchase was made.

Now, you would get [illegible] from that $2,000 interest on your [illegible] would be out of [illegible] per cent money and interest [illegible] 4 per cent on your [illegible] and an [illegible] your b[illegible]

If n[illegible]

Y[illegible] there is but one 2 per cent market in the United [illegible] that is Wall Street, with money on call. There is [illegible] How would the Wall street banker [illegible] He would buy a 2 per cent bond with 2 per cent money [illegible] that [illegible] 2 per cent bond, without [illegible], would be 1.67 per cent, and the Wall street banker with a 2 per cent market could bid [illegible]

Now, figure that out in the same way with the reserve required and you will find that a 6 per cent banker in the country could [illegible] every three [illegible] one hundredths of 1 per cent, while the Wall street banker, with a reserve of 25 per cent instead of 15 per cent, with a 2 per cent money market could bid 1.39, and [illegible] whole country of these deposits and put [illegible] in Wall street.

Now, how does this bill differ from the Aldrich bill? In this respect, that the Aldrich bill made a minimum limit at which the Secretary without receiving bids could put out the money at [illegible] per cent, and you make no minimum at all. The Aldrich bill provided for any amount the Treasurer could loan and for any [illegible] and you put it up at auction in amounts [illegible] equal of a bank. There is the difference between your bill and the Aldrich bill. They would work absolutely in the same way and [illegible] the country [illegible] in Wall street. [illegible] every bond speculator and broker in the United States [illegible] forward with delight and gleeful [illegible] to the passage of that bill.

Now, take a municipal bond. I know gentlemen here are apt to think that [illegible] so with a 4 or 5 or 6 per cent bond. There is a profit in it unquestionably, but the profit is the greatest in the lowest rate of interest market. There is an apparent fallacy there; but yet, when you come to figure it up, you find it is absolutely so, because you start on the proposition of the higher your rate of interest the more you have got to lose in the bond purchased for security, and that loss must be deducted from the interest received from loaning the Government deposits.

The higher the rate of premium, the more still you will lose. Let me show you how that works out on a municipal bond. Take, for instance, Columbus, Ohio, and compare the 6 per cent and 2 per cent rates.

Investment in a Columbus, Ohio, bond at 110½ and paying 4 per cent [illegible] interest, $6,645. [illegible] per cent margin required by the [illegible] $75,000 [illegible] 15 per cent reserve, [illegible] 6 per cent [illegible] net loan [illegible] gain on transaction.

The same deposit on the same bond, with a reserve of 25 per cent instead of 15 per cent, would show, as a 2 per cent [illegible]

Now, who could afford to make the highest bid? The country [illegible] Wall street one?

The PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. [illegible]

Mr. PRINCE. I think in the gentleman's remarks he referred to a bill that I had introduced, wanting to invest one hundred millions of the one hundred and sixty-eight millions now in national depositories, for which the Government is getting no interest.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. PRINCE. The Secretary of the Treasury placed that money in the hands of the national depositories, did he not?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. PRINCE. Now, let me read, if you please, for a moment, what the Secretary of War has done with reference to money that has come into his hands as a result of the sale of the Philippine [illegible]

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I understand, and I will state now that [illegible] money is not a particle one at all. That is money which [illegible] have got to keep as a gold reserve to maintain the parity of their silver currency. They must keep it. It is a particular fund, [illegible] only to drafts in case there is a demand for gold. The parallel does not exist at all between that case and our condition. We ought not to have a surplus in the banks of the United States. I am free to say that I admit it. But if we are to have it, and so long as it continues, it ought to be there on business principles, ready to be drawn on at sight, not loaned out, for governments to borrow, but do not lend.

Mr. PRINCE. Just let the gentleman answer this, after I have read it. It is on page 15 of the report of the Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs. It is as follows:

[illegible] $1,000 certificates were sent to New York by two representatives [illegible] here would have been a profit of $3,188.65 on this issue at the [illegible] of this second sale.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I will ask the gentleman this question, whether he believes it is the function of government to take money from the people by taxation and then to loan it out to them at interest?

Mr. PRINCE. I do not.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Well, that is the fundamental principle of the whole thing.

Mr. PRINCE. But let me suggest to the gentleman that we have to-day one hundred and sixty-[illegible] which we can not pay the bonded indebtedness for some twenty-three or twenty-five years to come. We tried within the last year to [illegible] the face value of some sixteen millions of bonds and we [illegible] something like twenty-two millions. In other words, we paid a premium of 37½ per cent.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I admit all that the gentleman says. I simply repeat again that it is not the function of the Government to take money from the people by taxation and loan it out at interest.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Is it the function of the Government to take the money away from the people and then give it back to them, or, rather, lend it to capitalists without interest?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. It is the function of government to [illegible] the expense. The effect of your proposition, and of all of these kindred propositions, whether they are Republican or Democratic in source, will be to lower the standard and mark nearly we will get back to where we were in the late [illegible] so efficiently some time ago by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL], when the United States Government took its money and divided it up among the States pro rata.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, I want to ask the gentleman in this question: The gentleman says it is not a part of the function of government to lend its money at interest on call.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Not to.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But he admits it is quite excusable to give its money away on call. Now, then, as I understand [illegible]

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Of course I do not admit anything of the kind.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman admits that the present system is quite excusable.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I admit that the present system is [illegible] check, and would [illegible]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Let me go ahead a moment further. I want to ask the gentleman if money deposited at interest on call is not just as much subject to the gentleman's check, or, in this particular case, to the Government's check, as money given away on call or deposited without interest on call?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Perhaps so.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Are the deposits on call not subject to exactly the same power to check whenever you please, whether at interest or not?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Unquestionably in theory.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, one further question. The Government has now, I believe, about $150,000,000, in round numbers, deposited in the national banks.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. One hundred and sixty-five million dollars, I believe.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Well, then, we are going to build a Panama canal; we can pay for it by checking upon these banks. [illegible] want to do [illegible] I ask the gentleman whether it would not produce a panic in this country.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I think it would; and that would be precisely the result which would be accomplished under the terms of the bill if you shifted those deposits [illegible] months to the highest bidder.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It being true then that if we should check for the whole of these deposits, now bearing no interest, it would produce a panic in this country, it must be true also that the Government can not practically check for that amount to-morrow if it is wise as a Government; it must be true also that it will not do so; and then it must be true also that this is a sort of permanent loan, and if it is, why should not the Government receive whatever rate of interest the money is worth to the parties who have the use of it and are using it?

And if that be true, why is it not Republican and Democratic doctrine that this way of doing business should not be confined to the national banks, or to the Government, [illegible] beyond the peradventure of doubt that he will pay the money?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I thank the gentleman for that suggestion, for it only shows the downward course we would be pursuing if this policy should be followed by the Secretary. The Treasury and the Treasury should become a one-man bank to loan out the funds of the Government, he alone under the statutes being the judge of the collateral.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, will the gentlemen tell me [illegible] I [illegible] necessary to [illegible] government which [illegible] taxes the people, because there ought not to be a good government [illegible] be any surplus at all, except a working margin, and that [illegible] ought to be in the subtreasuries of the Government. I am [illegible] ing a condition, not trying to establish a new order of [illegible] will the gentleman point out a single evil that could come out of [illegible] money should go to banks on interest that does not exist where you deposit the money on call in the banks without interest?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I have been trying to explain to the gentleman that under the present law with Government money [illegible] and I am willing to go no further. I am [illegible] than Government bonds as security for Government money, it is impossible for me to do it, unless you [illegible] all your deposits in a [illegible] market, and there is but one such in the United States, Wall street.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I do not wish to take too much of the gentleman's time. But the question I have asked and the question I should like the gentleman to answer is this: Under a system of loaning Government money without the credit of the Government, in banks [illegible] that would not also exist under a system of loaning the Government money on some the notes of the Government to banks, without security?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I think the difference is in the method. As I said before, there is not a bank in the United States, by a one-man power, [illegible] at least five directors to [illegible] with its [illegible] Any man [illegible] in a [illegible] what is called a [illegible] does the whole business, [illegible] out the advice of the board. The [illegible] Aldrich bill [illegible]

Now, by this process of loaning out Government funds on promiscuous securities, you are making the Treasury of the United States a one-man bank, with the largest fund of any bank in the world, to be loaned out on promiscuous security at the discretion of one man. I say it is absolutely vicious. Rather than adopt such a system I would abandon any interest for a century; and no man can deny the correctness of this principle.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. One other question. How is the present system—leaving it to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury to select the banks to serve as depositories without interest—better than a system which would have him to select—not in his discretion, but according to their bids—the persons or institutions who would receive these deposits at interest?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Was it simply for this reason that Congress has prescribed the security and that it shall be Government bonds.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But this bill does not change the security now prescribed by law. On the contrary, it leaves the security just as it is to-day.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I admit it; but I have tried to tell the gentleman that I do not know that it is especially important to change the security from United States bonds to the present law. I am present system of security [illegible]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That is another question.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut (continuing). Would be to strip the whole country of the deposits and would not result as he expects it would [illegible]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman disagrees with me there, but that is another question. That is not what I am on now. The thing I am on now is, will you tell the House now, if the Secretary of the Treasury had to select the depositories banks—and I have [illegible] to a question made to the Ways and Means committee—which would expect a bonus for the security now required by law [illegible] for the benefit of interest, why that would be any more open to the charge of being a one-man-bank's scheme than the present system, which gives the Secretary of the Treasury, under our laws, guiding law, with the own discretion, to select banks which he chooses. And leaves the money without interest?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I understood I had forty-five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. There are only five minutes remaining to that side of the House, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] said he wanted five minutes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. How much time has this side of the House?

The CHAIRMAN. That side of the House has fifty-nine minutes.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Do I understand that I have the courtesy of the gentleman to proceed? Do I have any more time?

The CHAIRMAN. Not on the Republican side.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The House by unanimous consent has fixed the time at which this debate is to close.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I will pursue this line at some other time. There are some few things in reply to it that I would like to bring to the attention of the House, but I will [illegible]

Mr. HEMENWAY. I have but five minutes remaining, and I yield [illegible] the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. HASKINS].

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman move that the committee rise for a moment?

On motion of Mr. HEMENWAY, the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TAWNEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10429), the urgent deficiency bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

[illegible] AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HITT, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. 10[illegible]) [illegible] for the [illegible] June [illegible] was [illegible] ing report [illegible] to the Committee of the Whole [illegible]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve all points of order on this bill.

The CLERK. All points of order are reserved.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. HEMENWAY, the House again resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, Mr. TAWNEY in the chair.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. HASKINS].

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, owing to the fact that yesterday I was engaged in committee I was not present during the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK]. This morning, however, my attention was called to what he stated with reference to the constitution and laws of Vermont touching the question of suffrage. I read from his remarks:

I respectfully invite the attention of the distinguished gentleman and of the House to the provisions of the constitution of Vermont, framed by a convention composed of [illegible] citizens, who are of quiet and peaceable behavior, and who have the approbation of the board of civil authorities, shall alone be permitted to vote; the most far-reaching franchise law ever adopted in any state, North or South.

Mr. Chairman, the original constitution of the State of Vermont was adopted in 1777. Its framework was the constitution of Pennsylvania of 1776. However, in this particular they did not agree. Pennsylvania placed her suffrage provisions upon taxpaying; Vermont based her suffrage upon manhood only, supplemented by an oath, which we designate as the "freeman's oath," which is taken by the "first voter." Now, that there may be no misunderstanding or misapprehension hereafter as to the constitution and laws of Vermont, I desire to have them incorporated in the RECORD. They are very brief. I read first from the "Declaration of rights of the inhabitants of the State of Vermont," chapter 1:

ART. 8. That all elections ought to be free and without corruption, and [illegible]

I now read the plan or frame of government, chapter 2, section 21; and this was the provision of 1777:

[illegible] admission, shall be entitled to all the privileges of a freeman of this State.

Then follows the freeman's oath:

[illegible] frage touching any matter that concerns the State of Vermont you will do so as in your conscience you shall judge will most conduce to the most good of the same, as established by the constitution, without fear or favor of any man.

Then comes section 42:

SEC. 42. The declaration of the political rights and privileges of the inhabitants of this [illegible] in any [illegible]

These are the provisions only in the constitution. I now read from the law, the statute of Vermont, fixing the rights and the qualifications of voters:

[illegible] 21 years of age or more, having resided in the [illegible] the day of the election [illegible]

Now, the election officers under our law are the justices of the peace and the selectmen and the town clerks of the several towns and in the cities [illegible] the peace. [illegible] of the peace are [illegible] ally. The question as to a man's politics, to be elected a justice of the peace or a selectman, never enters into the election at all.

Now, so far as the approbation of the board of civil authority to a claimed voter taking the freeman's oath is concerned, the inquiry is simply confined to the question of citizenship, residence and age. The provision of the statute in this respect is to guard against fraudulent registration and voting by persons who have never taken the freeman's oath, and who are known as "first voters."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Georgia to read the Vermont law.

Mr. HARDWICK. Section 66 of the Vermont law, code of 1894, reads:

No person shall be admitted to take the freeman's oath or to vote in any election [illegible] approbation of the board of civil authority of the town in which he resides.

Exactly what I stated yesterday. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HASKINS. If the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. He has only a minute, and that has expired.

Mr. HASKINS. He has only occupied half a minute.

Mr. HARDWICK. [illegible]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. His minute has expired, and if it has not, we must go on.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I think in view of the fact——

The CHAIRMAN. The minute has not expired. [Laughter.]

Mr. HASKINS. For forty years I have been one of the [illegible] officers in my town, and I never heard the question as to a man's politics or as to his good behavior raised whenever he had offered to register or to present his vote.

Mr. HARDWICK. I have made a statement about the law and not about the practice.

Mr. HASKINS. That is the practice.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I will not have time nor do I desire to reply to the gentleman from Connecticut in extenso. After I shall have used five minutes, please "call me down." Now, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Connecticut does not understand the difference between the word "and" and the word "or" in the construction of a statute is totally beyond my comprehension.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. That may be.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, what would the difference be as to these words when put in this statute: "The Secretary of the Treasury shall require the associations thus designated to give satisfactory security by the deposit of United States bonds 'and' otherwise?" It means, with the word "and" there, that in part the security has got to be in United States bonds, and with that out, and if the statute should read, with the "security by the deposit of United States bonds 'or' otherwise," that would mean that no part of it would be required to be in bonds of the United States.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Could it be all United States bonds; under your construction of the language could it be United States bonds?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It could be all or part, either one: it could not possibly be all of anything else and no United States bonds. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has attempted laboriously to prove, through some arrangement of figures which I could not follow in my head, that in a country where money lends for 8 per cent the people could not afford to bid as much for United States deposits as in a country where money loans for 3 per cent——

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. My five minutes will not allow me to yield. And the only thing I caught when you were explaining it was this, that you said that a man would have to sacrifice 8 per cent money in the purchase of United States bonds, but you forgot that after the man had sacrificed 8 per cent money in the purchase of United States bonds upon which he would draw 2 or 3 per cent, then he would begin to use the money, and use it in an 8 per cent money market.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Certainly, I agree with you.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi (continuing). And that is absolutely what the gentleman did not mention, or at least failed to mention——

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Will the gentleman yield——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No, I can not. Now, the gentleman says that I would have a "public auction" take place "once in three months" for people to bid for United States deposits. Well, under the present system, you have a public auction "once in three months" for people to bid to the Secretary of the Treasury to be given United States deposits, because I have quoted in the bill the language of the present statute when I say that "it is hereby made the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury on the 1st day of July, on the 1st day of October, on the 1st day of January, and on the 1st day of April of each year" to do certain things, namely, to deposit the money on interest in a certain manner.

The present law is that it shall be deposited at those times in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury with a perfect right to select his personal or political friends, if he chooses to do it, all over this broad country, and to give that immense amount of money which they could use in either a 4 per cent or a 6 per cent or an 8 per cent market without their paying a cent. The word "auction" means nothing; the law now simply gives an "auction" once in three months under the present system without anybody having to pay anything except compliments, flattery, good graces, and perhaps promises to the powers that be, whereas under my system they would have to pay some cash.

The gentleman forgets when he makes that comparison, too, that under the ruling of the Secretary of the Treasury, where he simply wiped out the word "and" and puts in the word "or," that the security would not have to be confined to United States bonds any more than now. The bill provides that the security given shall be the same security as is now required by law, and of course it is subject to the same regulations and construction under the present Administration.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Will the gentleman pardon just a word: That rule that provided there should be a margin of 25 per cent puts the financial transaction on the same basis as Government 2 per cent bonds, and consequently makes my mathematical calculations exactly correct.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the mathematics which can convince me that a man who can use money at 8 per cent can not pay as much to get money as the man who can not use it at over 3 per cent will never be discovered. The mathematics can not be found that can convince me of that proposition. Now, Mr. Chairman, United States banks throughout this country deposit their reserve up in New York banks and the New York banks pay 2 per cent for it. Why can not the United States Government be paid 2 per cent?

Now, I am a good-natured fellow, and instead of making that a public bid and giving it to the highest bidder, I think it would be an improvement over the present plan if you would require them to pay, say, 2 per cent, and make it fixed. Let us [illegible] Government [illegible] to put out to highest bidder among banks, State and national, first furnishing absolutely self-sufficing security for repayment, would be better. Why? Because that would carry the money to those parts of the country which need it most for productive enterprise and home development, and not to the great centers where small interest prevails and where it is used chiefly for speculative purposes on 'change.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WILEY].

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HEPBURN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 903. An act providing for the purchase of metal and the coinage of minor coins, and the distribution and redemption of said coins; and

S. 792. An act to aid in the erection of a monument or memorial at Point Pleasant, W. Va., to commemorate the battle of the Revolution fought at that point between the colonial troops and Indians, October 10, 1774.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. WILEY of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, at an early day of the present session I had the honor to introduce into this House a bill (H. R. 10429) for the erection of a monument, in the city of Washington, to the memory of Jeremiah O'Brien, upon which shall be inscribed the words:

Erected to the memory of The gallant Irish American,
Who commanded the first vessel
Which captured and sank
A British man-of-war
During the Revolutionary War
The British schooner Margaretta.

Congressman Dan Burke has [illegible] characterized as the father of the American Navy. I am [illegible] that a similar bill has already been introduced in this House, [illegible] the creation of a commission of our beautiful national capital, to keep fresh in our memories the [illegible] who helped to make our country, first in peace and [illegible] in war, and to make honorable and glorious the present and future development of the American Navy, the most powerful of all the [illegible] ever chosen for the benefit and advancement of the human race. All honor to his memory!

[illegible] a just tribute to the man whose [illegible] our Navy, let us not forget to do honor to [illegible] O'Brien, who fought the first naval battle in the cause for freedom and struggle for independence [illegible] Liberty.

[illegible] our noble [illegible] in the [illegible] of dary [illegible] a [illegible] under its leadership, [illegible] the wonderful [illegible] of the [illegible] History does not record the name of a hero who has [illegible] in [illegible] and in uncomparable patriotism the immortal [illegible] of a [illegible].

[illegible] men from [illegible] and [illegible] our nation's flag and [illegible] the [illegible] in which are inscribed the brilliant events that have [illegible] during the past one hundred years in the "[illegible] of our [illegible] and [illegible]." The white angel of peace has [illegible] upon the [illegible] of Maritime in the State of Maine and [illegible] her glories. But not so in the memorable month of May. [illegible] Then the tocsin of war was heard on her streets and [illegible] in every household. A wondrous change has [illegible] the spirits of her inhabitants and happy [illegible] the faces of [illegible] women. The same firmness of purpose and [illegible] ing and blessing over the turbid and [illegible] which [illegible] the lines of carnage and death in the first sea fight of the Revolutionary war.

The story runs like this:

The news of the battles of Lexington and [illegible] Sunday morning. It was the [illegible] of May [illegible] There was an armed [illegible] town [illegible] two of Massachusetts's [illegible] ps to Halifax.

The young men of the little village, fired by the story of the deeds of their kinsmen, gathered and [illegible] to lend [illegible] to [illegible] but what could be done? The guns on the [illegible] were [illegible] and [illegible] in the [illegible] and [illegible] were a fine [illegible] but the [illegible] were [illegible] and all the gunpowder was locked fast in the [illegible] and their [illegible]. There was powder in Jonesport [illegible] but no man dared go to get it for fear of [illegible].

And so it happened that Mary Chandler, a young girl of 17, [illegible] from the [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] pounds of powder back through the woods [illegible].

The [illegible] was His Majesty's [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] and grew [illegible] Scotsman, [illegible] boast, "Britannia rules the waves."

The Spartan band, under the skillful generalship of the gallant O'Brien, rushed, as it were, from the very summit of the mount of defiance and quickly seized and unloaded one of the heaviest [illegible] and equipped her for battle, arming her with the old guns dragged from the blockhouse, and [illegible] away in her hold the powder which Mary Chandler had [illegible] through the maze of a thick forest.

If [illegible] country upon the map of nations which challenge our sympathy more than all the rest that country is Ireland. This lovely island, rising from the bosom of her own [illegible] beautiful waters, staggering under a governmental policy which [illegible] to the people, was for many long and [illegible] years [illegible] by the songs of her native bards nor stirred by the eloquence of her impassioned orators. The blighting hand of [illegible] had laid her low, stripped her of her verdure, and [illegible] a [illegible] land, [illegible] from oppression [illegible] and religious and political action for the downtrodden children of Erin is beginning to appear in the east and to flood with light of gold the earth and skies and seas.

Prosperity is at last coming to their homes. "A hewer of wood and a drawer of water" on his own soil, the Irishman, under every sun and in every clime, outside of his own country, wherever and wherever the door of hope and [illegible] nity has not been closed [illegible] him, has [illegible] strated a [illegible] for work and a [illegible] to the [illegible] and [illegible] him to the [illegible] in every profession, vocation, occupation, and [illegible].

We are wont to [illegible] those who have served in the public service; to those who have been benefactors to the human race; to those whose endeavors in the arts and sciences, letters and learning have exalted them among their [illegible]. We have built [illegible] at Gettysburg, Chattanooga, Gettysburg, Nashville, Mount Pleasant, Cedar Creek, Bull Run, Manassas, Arlington, Winchester, and on a score of other fields. These silent cities of the dead are surrounded by costly stone fences, adorned with trees and parks, and everywhere ornamented with headstones of marble or monuments of granite to point out the last resting places or to mark the green graves of those who "died on the perilous edge of battle."

Washington is a city of monuments, and it is meet that these memorials should adorn our place in every park and commons, on every street, along every highway, and be every public ground of the nation consecrated. Father Ryan, with rare and wonderful words as sweet as celestial fruits or the breath of flowers from Paradise when he poured these radiant lines:

But it may be asked, Why should I from the far South feel such [illegible] from the motive which prompts [illegible] "Know ye [illegible] liberty? [illegible] civil war between the [illegible] country is over. Our swords have been beaten into plowshares and our spears into pruning hooks. The South and the North alike will hold their dead in tender memory forever. The South is proud of the men who wore the [illegible] on Lookout Mountain, on the fiery trail from Dalton to Atlanta, on the rolling [illegible] on the red hills of Georgia, and in the valleys of [illegible] and Tennessee. The North very justly feels a [illegible] more enduring than [illegible] and to tell posterity the glorious deeds of her [illegible] Lee and Grant, Jackson and Thomas, Stuart and [illegible] country is as all.

It will commemorate the glory achieved by American valor and do honor to one "whose remembrance will, to ears and tongues, be theme and hearing ever." [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I now yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. RIDER].

Mr. RIDER. Mr. Chairman, since the beginning of this session of Congress, to the delight and entertainment of its Members, we have heard [illegible] concerning Canadian reciprocity, good roads, currency, the tariff, the rural mail service, and, indeed, a resume of the civil war by several [illegible] Members on the floor. The Republican Members have pointed with pride, and the present prosperity of [illegible] to the [illegible] the [illegible] the present prosperous [illegible] of this great [illegible]. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words in relation to the construction of the Panama Canal.

[illegible] concerning the violation of the Panama treaty, the policy of the Government [illegible] the new Republic of Panama, it is [illegible] that the [illegible] the Isthmus has brought us to a point where we can realize the hopes and ambitions of the United States for many years and [illegible] the East and the West as they have never been realized before. [illegible] and will be [illegible] among the [illegible] of Congress. It is too late to discuss the [illegible] or [illegible]. The present Administration may be [illegible] of this great nation it is, "My country—may she ever be right; but right or wrong, my country!"

For four hundred years men have dreamed of piercing this wall, [illegible] the Spaniards [illegible] the Spanish [illegible] "The [illegible] of [illegible] I count for [illegible] Lake Nicaragua and the route [illegible] which [illegible] upon it." In 1826 Nelson attempted to [illegible] and [illegible] by aid of a land force, but was prevented by the [illegible] of the Spaniards. At the time that the question was discussed of the cession of Louisiana to the United States by France [illegible] Panama [illegible] day it will [illegible] in navigation, [illegible] around the world will be easier than the longest [illegible] route. Louisiana will be on the line of this new route, and its possession will be of inestimable value. Don't give it up."

The subject of this interoceanic canal is of world-wide importance. Many nations have interested themselves in it, many men have given themselves to the study of its many problems, have been [illegible] and many have been sacrificed to it, and many millions of gold have been spent on it. Over no portion of the earth's surface has the [illegible] been so repeatedly run, and now what ages have wished and [illegible] is about to witness. When the pioneers of Columbus failed to find that of [illegible] as a [illegible] It is beyond the range of possibilities to foresee the [illegible] commercial [illegible] from this New-World [illegible] of the [illegible] Isthmian canal will be the most [illegible] the [illegible] of America [illegible] and will reduce the size of the earth at the equator by [illegible]. No other [illegible] ever constructed [illegible] can compare with it in economy in [illegible].

[illegible] to Canton the Suez saves 3,300 miles and to Bombay 4,[illegible] the Panama Canal will save from 5,000 [illegible] between London and [illegible] between New York and [illegible] miles. President [illegible] said: "An interoceanic [illegible] between the [illegible] and [illegible] the Atlantic [illegible] United States, and [illegible] the [illegible] and the world." The [illegible] miles of [illegible] Europe. [illegible] great [illegible] and [illegible] flow of its [illegible] and [illegible] the most important [illegible] the world and its [illegible] with the most important [illegible] is a great [illegible] from Chicago and [illegible] down the Mississippi to the Pacific.

In 1825 Henry Clay, then Secretary of State, said: "The execution of this work will form a great epoch of the affairs of the whole world." From New York to San Francisco by way of Cape Horn it is 14,840 miles; by way of the Panama Canal it will be only 4,760 miles, a saving of over 10,000 miles and over fifty days' time by freight steamers between those two points, with a corresponding economy to other points on the two coasts. Where two-thirds of the time and distance is saved, there is a corresponding saving of value of repairs, insurance on vessels and cargo, of interest on investment, wages and provisions, and also a two-third cost in saving of transportation; but its saving to existing commerce is by no means all. It will create a vast amount of new commerce. It is impossible, commercially speaking, to transport freight of any sort beyond a point where the cost of transportation exceeds the value of the cargo to a point where it is brought.

ARTICLES OF COMMERCE.

The canal, therefore, by reducing the distance increases the number of articles of commerce. The exports from the Pacific coast are for the most part raw material and will not bear long carriage—for example, lumber, in which the far Northwest is so rich, and the supply of the Eastern States being practically exhausted. Chile has attempted to import Pacific coast lumber, but found it too expensive. As soon as the canal is cut lumber for building purposes will become an exceedingly important article of commerce between the two coasts. It is estimated by lumbermen that the opening of the canal will add $2 to every thousand feet of lumber standing around Puget Sound. The forests of Washington alone contain 175,000,000,000 feet of uncut yellow and red fir.

LUMBER.

The estimate referred to being a reasonable one, the value of the forests of Washington alone will be enhanced about $350,000,000. The supply in Oregon, British Columbia, and Alaska is much greater. W. H. Seward said of this region: "It seems destined to become a shipyard of supply for all nations."

WHEAT.

When the limit for transportation of wheat from the Pacific coast is reduced twenty-five days steamship it will become a merchantable transaction with daily assured profits. At the present time, with a voyage of four or five months around the Horn, taken in relation as to the possible rise and fall of prices which make trade, it is as much a gamble as any hazardous game of chance. Distances on the Pacific coast around Cape Horn are somewhat greater to New York than to Liverpool, and the rich trader of the west coast of Central and South America chiefly goes to Great Britain and Germany, but with the opening of the isthmian canal all this will be changed. The distance will be then from twenty-seven hundred to thirty-five hundred miles in favor of New York, which, with our facilities for manufacture, will give us the market of that coast.

THE SOUTHERN STATES.

The Southern States will have a much greater advantage, as New Orleans is 713 miles nearer than New York to the canal, and the almost inexhaustible coal mines of Alabama, so easily worked, can be landed on shipboard at Mobile at $1.25 a ton.

COAL.

Attention is called to the fact that there is but very little coal, and that of inferior quality, on the Pacific coast, and steamers passing through this canal will require 2,000,000 tons per annum, and that will be furnished by Alabama.

PIG IRON.

In Alabama and Tennessee pig iron is produced more cheaply than anywhere else, and in and the markets of the Pacific iron will be in increasing demand for many years to come.

COTTON.

Japan, the greatest manufacturing nation in the Far East, imported some $[illegible] worth of raw cotton during the past year, and in the same year China imported cotton goods valued at $80,000,000. When the canal is cut ocean steamships can load cotton at the river and gulf docks and sail direct to the Orient, which will enable us to successfully compete with Indian cotton.

FOOD.

Statistics show that with 5 per cent of the world's population we produce 25 per cent of the world's food. The Mississippi Valley is our great granary, and the new waterway will connect it with more than half the population of the globe. Thus the Panama Canal will give the Pacific coast access to the European markets, and our Atlantic and Gulf coasts access to the Asiatic markets. New York is 150 miles farther than Liverpool from Cape Horn. This fact, of course, makes Liverpool 150 miles nearer than New York to all the ports on the eastern shore of the Pacific. Liverpool is as much nearer to all points on the west Pacific coast as Liverpool is nearer than New York to Gibraltar, which is about 2,000 miles; that is to say, that the Pacific, commercially speaking, is now an English ocean. The effect of cutting through the Panama Canal will be to bring New York 2,748 miles nearer than Liverpool to its eastern entrance.

The advantage to the commerce of New York City via the Panama Canal over that of Liverpool via the Suez Canal is best illustrated by the following table of distances:

The Panama Canal is the gateway to the Pacific, and opens upon 500,000,000 of people, whose imports last year were approximately one billion and a half of dollars. The commerce of the Pacific will increase indefinitely and the United States will command a greater part of it.

The Hon. Archibald Colquhoun, an engineer and traveler, in speaking of the canal wrote that—

[illegible]

Our entrance into competition for the world's markets, access to those markets, makes it imperative that this canal should be completed in the earliest possible time. With the United States, washed by two great oceans, directly connected by this waterway, the nation will be midway between the markets of the world.

POLITICAL BEARING.

The political effect, obvious of the construction of this canal, will be in uniting our coast lines and bringing the most remote portions of our territory into closer relations. Mr. Colquhoun says:

It will bind together the remote sections of that country, assimilate its diverse interests, and go far toward solving many difficult problems and make the United States still more united.

President Hayes said in one of his messages:

"A part of this [illegible] of the United States," and a portion in which we [illegible] and protect it. [illegible] the defenses of the United States—

Says Commodore George W. Melville, of the Navy—

[illegible] be turned upon the foe, whether he shall come from the east or the west.

The building of this canal will bring the western coast of South America, which has for a long time seemed very much out of the world, into closer relation with the eastern coast of North America. The principal ports on the western coast of South America will be from sixteen hundred to seventeen hundred miles nearer to New York than San Francisco. These regions of South America have rich undeveloped natural resources and a sparse population, but they will be brought by the canal into close relation with the richest and most densely populated portions of the United States. A large part of the superfluous and rapidly increasing capital of the latter country will find opportunity there. The isthmian canal will give to the West Indies a commercial importance which will involve great political consequences. For hundreds of years these islands were a source of the tropical products, and during the Napoleonic wars furnished Great Britain with one-half of her [illegible] but misrule, vicious and tyrannical, and other causes have paralyzed their industries and depleted their commerce, until now it is insignificant. The canal will focus the commerce of the world in the Caribbean Sea. Toward it flow three great rivers, the Hudson, the Mississippi, and the Amazon, and as its tributaries to the canal they will pour their commerce through this sea, whose islands will become ports of call.

Capt. A. T. Mahan says:

In the cluster of island fortresses of the Caribbean is one of the great nerve centers of the whole body of European civilization; and I refer to the archipelago as the very domains of the sea power, if ever a region could be called so.

He continues:

Control of a map [illegible] is insured primarily by a navy, secondarily by positions, suitably chosen and spaced one from another, upon which the navy rests and from which it can exert its strength.

It is important, therefore, in this respect that we should consider the extension of our possessions in the Caribbean Sea, provided they come to us by righteous means. If through an expression of the majority of the people of Cuba that the island should come to be a part of our nation in the future in its relations to the construction of the canal, it will prove of incalculable benefit to us. But let that new Republic be bound to us only by the strongest of bonds—the ties of obligation, respect, and love.

INLAND CANALS.

Bearing a direct relationship with the construction of the Panama Canal there is the improvement and extension of the inland waterways of this great nation. Inland waterways tend to cheapen the cost of carriage and to develop industry, and ought to emphasize strongly the economic importance of inland navigation. They cheapen the rate of transportation not only for the products of the farmer, but to the manufacturer as well. Since 1882 there have been biennial appropriations made for improving our inland waterways. As this is a matter of such vital importance to the people, this policy should be changed and annual appropriations made. These water routes have to a large extent made possible the development of our iron industries. The richest iron regions of the United States, those of northern Michigan and Wisconsin, are nearly 1,000 miles distant from the great coal fields of Pennsylvania, but with a waterway connecting them, on which freight rates are a little over 1 mill a ton-mile, the two mining regions are brought closer together.

The distribution and consumption of coal, both for manufacturing and boating purposes, have been largely increased on account of inland transportation through the Ohio River and the Great Lakes. The improvement and extension of the water routes of the Great Lakes, the Mississippi River system, the Missouri, the construction of the ship canal between the Mississippi River and Lake Michigan, of a lake ship canal from Pittsburg to Lake Erie, of a lake ship canal to St. Paul and Minneapolis, will tend to further distribute coal at a cheaper rate and greatly widen the present commercable limits. The inland waterways are likewise of great importance to the consumer and producer of lumber in the United States. Thus far railroads have been able to transport east from Washington only high-grade shingles to the Mississippi Valley. Farther inland, waterways enable home industries to compete more easily with foreign producers, not only by decreased cost of transportation on articles destined for export, but also by making raw material cheaper. The development of the inland navigation of the United States will assist us in maintaining a high standard of life in competition with Europe.

THE FLORIDA CANAL.

In this connection I desire to call the attention of the House to a measure—House bill 9487, now in the hands of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors—providing for a survey or surveys to be made to determine the feasibility of a canal between the waters of St. Johns River and the Gulf of Mexico. The construction of this canal is not only of vital importance to the State of Florida but to the nation at large as well. It means the lessening of time for freight traffic by coasting and steam vessels between all points on the eastern coast and those on the Gulf and Pacific by over [illegible] miles. To the shipping interests it would mean a saving of two days in point of time, 600 tons of coal for steamers, lessening freight rates; to the shipper the decrease in both freight and insurance rates, and quicker delivery. Seventy-five per cent of the manufacturing interests shipping their goods to Pensacola, Mobile, New Orleans, and Galveston at present do not insure, for the reason that the insurance exceeds the freight rates.

To the consumer the construction of the canal means a lessening of the cost. One hundred steamers operating between the ports of New York, New Orleans, and Galveston during the year 1903 shipped 18,000,000 tons of freight. The importance of this measure may well be understood when this is taken into consideration. Every southern city, as well as all the ports along the eastern coast of the United States, should be vitally concerned in regard to this matter. The wreck coast of the United States for years has been the southerly part of Florida and the tortuous channels of the Florida Keys. No private or corporate interests should be permitted to interfere with the passage of such a measure. The line of the canal suggested would be through the St. Johns River, Doctors Lake, and the Waccassie River on the Gulf side. The cost of construction is comparatively small when the fact is taken into consideration that valuable deposits of phosphates, which are salable as fertilizer, are to be found along the proposed line, and also that the lands are heavily timbered. This is one of the many projects of a similar nature which should receive the attention of the National Legislature.

THE WATERWAYS IN AND ABOUT NEW YORK CITY.

The improvement of the waterways in and about New York City, the commercial center of the country, means to a great degree enhancing the prosperity of the entire nation. The commerce of New York, as given by the Bureau of Statistics, Department of Commerce and Labor, show imports, $374,066,584; all other ports in the United States, $409,507,602; aggregate exports, New York, $558,388,935; all others, $889,625,613. This expressed in tons, foreign commerce, New York, 17,398,058; coasting trade, 20,000,000; making a total of 37,564,108 tons. The customs revenue in the city of New York is 65.01 per cent of the total collected in the United States. The improvement of the Harlem River Ship Canal and the Harlem River and Bronx Kills to the deep waters of the Sound and the ocean mean much toward increasing the commerce of the metropolis.

Not only these improvements, but the measure, House bill 9280, providing for a survey or surveys to be made to determine the feasibility of a canal between Flushing Bay and Newtown Creek, county of Queens, State of New York, has an important bearing on the development of the various channels in and about New York. The fabulous sums expended in blowing out Hell Gate in order to open up a channel for passing vessels have not as yet achieved the object sought, and the money spent at Hell Gate would have been more than sufficient to construct the Newtown Creek and Flushing Bay Canal, and provide a broad and clear channel for vessels from the East River and the Sound. All Long Island and the East River section would be immensely benefited by this canal, and it is for this reason that it possesses a national character and that Congress may rightly and properly authorize an expenditure for its construction.

New York is the greatest seaboard terminus and port for international trade for the world, and any project which gives increased value to this port materially benefits every section of the United States. This canal is a scheme which originated with DeWitt Clinton, who saw in the future that the trend of population in this great center of the western world would be toward what are now known as the boroughs of the Bronx and Queens, and that the food supply and material for the well-being of the people would necessarily be delivered at a cheaper rate by the construction of such a waterway. The cost of this work is comparatively small, as the Geological Survey shows an alluvial soil along the entire route and that no blasting will be required.

Enormous sums have been expended by the United States Government in dredging Newtown Creek in the endeavor to maintain an 18-foot channel for a distance of about 2½ miles. With every recurring tide, debris and refuse are deposited and the channel becomes rapidly shallower, and it is now estimated that the work done by the Department of War, and declared practically completed by that Department, June 30, 1903, has failed of its object to such an extent that the channel is only 14 feet at the present time. There is no stream of its size in the United States where such a quantity of freight is handled as in Newtown Creek. The estimated amount is in excess of 2,000,000 tons annually and consists mainly of coal, building materials, oils and chemicals.

The construction of this canal would mean the constant flushing of the creek and the maintenance of a channel of proper depth with little or no cost to the United States Government, and at the same time would greatly enhance the value of the commerce of New York City.

The project proposed is analogous to that of the canal or waterway across Keweenaw Point from Keweenaw Bay to Lake Superior. This canal was purchased by the United States September 16, 1889, and deepened from 13 feet to 20 feet at an outlay of $[illegible] up to June 30, 1902. During the season of navigation in 1901, 2,114,385 net tons of freight were carried through the canal, valued at $57,876,480. This waterway, uniting Portage Lake and Lake Superior, is under Government control. The increasing congestion of traffic on the East River, causing an increase in loss by collision and accidents or arrests in the movement of the waterway, will eventually compel the deepening and extension of every outlet, including the Newtown Creek. The damage done by the sinking of a vessel or two every week or so in the course of a short time amounts to far more than the total expense necessary to construct this canal and to make and maintain the channel. A farsighted policy would, therefore, dictate some means which would prevent a recurrence of such losses in commerce.

While considering this particularly interesting subject, I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that, despite the statement that has recently been made that "the United States Government is not in the canal building business," the following canals are directly maintained or were constructed by the United States Government, and the gross amount of tonnage compares in no wise to that which would pass through the canal mentioned in the preceding parts of this address.

All of these projects are worthy of the most careful and earnest [illegible] our waterways is a matter of the greatest importance, not only to the people living near the waterways as well. It means a lessening of the cost of marketing products and conserving prices. In the words of the Cullom Commission:

Already in every part of the world [illegible] of the United States is using [illegible] is made on the part of the National Government [illegible] commerce without any [illegible] means [illegible] of the entire people. The building of canals, the improvement of the Erie Canal, improving the Hudson River, the Oswego Canal, the Fox and Kaskaskia, the Newtown Creek and Flushing Bay Canal, [illegible] the waters of the Delaware River with the Chesapeake Bay, the improvement [illegible] of our great inland waterways [illegible] to our people in that they act as a check on the greed of corporate interests in railways, [illegible] the cost of freight, and be of great and lasting benefit.

Signs of the times indicate that this nation is about to play a part which it has never taken before in the [illegible] of the world, and that is [illegible] Every effort tending toward improving the internal [illegible] will increase the power of the nation. Through the [illegible] and by forced marches, there will be carried to the nations of the world a [illegible] of liberty and freedom that will prove an [illegible] toward a higher and better world life. Our flag will then represent in government what the cross of Christ represents in religion—all that is highest and noblest and best. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, does any gentleman on that side desire to consume any time now?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] has consumed all of his time.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then I yield such time as remains to this side to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER]. I believe it is fourteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] is recognized for fourteen minutes.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago, on one of the three occasions when gentlemen from the great State of Ohio annoyed the general counsel in response to the general or those questions, [illegible] of Judge Gorman, of Cincinnati, I made an impromptu statement because my reply to the gentleman's remarks was [illegible] and entirely unrepresentative. I said then that in the city of Cincinnati, governed by George B. Cox, that impromptu statement which has been so highly extolled three times upon this floor during the last few weeks, that in that city and under his administration [illegible] the real property [illegible] the landholders [illegible] of Mr. Hemenway—that there were sixty-four votes registered from one room in which sixty-four men could not stand erect.

It appears that I have overstated the case, and as I have no desire to place the matter in any other light than is warranted by the facts, because we are always told when these charges are made that it is an outrage to reflect on the fair fame of Cincinnati. You must not say anything about corruption; you never must say anything about wrong; you never must say anything about misgovernment; you must not discuss the question of illegal or fraudulent registration, because if you do the fair fame of that city has been assailed.

It appears from the statement that I hold in my hand that so far from sixty-four men being registered from a room [illegible] as I then said, there were forty-five men registered on the last registration day in last October. Investigation reveals the fact that 13 rooms [illegible] of two rooms one a fair square and the other somewhat smaller. The only pieces of furniture in these two rooms were two chairs without any backs and an old cannon stove. So that even under the correction of the statement made here, it is probable it was true when I said it was not possible for sixty-four men to stand erect in that room.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to take up the time of the House. It is of no interest. I am sure, to my Republican friends, but they will ignore it; but I shall ask unanimous consent to insert as a part of my remarks a letter from Mr. Benton S. Op[illegible] a statement by him [illegible] I spent 23 years and [illegible] I spent in this city, [illegible] composed of Republicans and [illegible] Democrats.

I also ask permission to insert two speeches delivered by the gentleman from Ohio [illegible] on the 12th of October, 1903, and the speech which he made on the 13th of October, 1903, in which he [illegible] the Republican party [illegible] George B. Cox, boss of the Republican party, and [illegible] an city of Cincinnati.

I also wish to insert a few remarks, a part of an article written by Frank Hatton in 1892, written by a gentleman who is well known here as a correspondent of one of the Washington papers, as well as [illegible] very lucid [illegible] B. Cox, who [illegible] He [illegible] as to the class of candidates [illegible] that he [illegible] who shall be [illegible] in the city of Cincinnati. [illegible] are you going to give to [illegible] in a gruff voice. The [illegible] said and told Mr. Cox, "[illegible] I wanted to [illegible] fast for [illegible] I will give him eight votes." [illegible] of Cincinnati to these assembled gentlemen [illegible] "I will give him eight votes." Without consulting [illegible] two terms," says Mr. Cox. "After his first [illegible] he gave me no credit [illegible] his nomination."

Then he gives some details unnecessary to repeat. He then says Mr. Storer came to him and explained, and he told Storer, "No matter what differences there are between you and me, it is [illegible] congressman a second term and I shall not [illegible] that."

That's George B. Cox, the boss of the Republican party, the party that boasts of being the party of Abraham Lincoln. All right. Mr. Storer goes away. Mr. Cox complained that he (Storer) had presided over the Republican convention, but [illegible] him (Cox). Mr. Storer [illegible] and told him it was all right—he would be nominated. He took the advice of those friends and did not [illegible] upon Cox, showing [illegible] "I was willing to ignore me." What did George B. Cox do? The Cincinnati [illegible] P. [illegible] and [illegible] by a [illegible] That is the act of the real governor of the great Republican city of Cincinnati.

Mr. [illegible]. I ask permission to insert these in the RECORD.

Mr. PALMER. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to insert the matter named in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. PALMER. I object.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, I give notice right here and now that hereafter there will be [illegible] of remarks in the RECORD. [Applause.]

Mr. [illegible] of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order against the objection that the gentleman did not object by rising in his seat.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman insists on that point of order the Chair will have to sustain it. The gentleman did not rise and address the Chair.

Mr. BAKER. Is my time used up, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The time has not expired. The gentleman has seven minutes remaining. The Chair will [illegible] of the gentleman from New York. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the matter to which he has referred. Is there objection?

Mr. PALMER. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] is entitled to time to say a few words, and I ask unanimous consent that he may have that leave.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri may have leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I would ask that permission for all gentlemen who have addressed the House to-day be included.

Mr. [illegible]WAY. Within what time?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. About two days.

The CHAIRMAN. The request was addressed to the gentleman from Georgia [illegible] The request [illegible]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I beg to say that it has been done ever since I have been in the House—for two years on [illegible] the gentleman [illegible]

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Very well; I withdraw the request.

The CHAIRMAN. As a matter of fact, under the rule it is [illegible] the Committee of the Whole has power to [illegible] members.

Mr. [illegible]. I [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. The [illegible] in the [illegible] Is [illegible]

Mr. [illegible]. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a parliamentary [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. [illegible] from New York [illegible] for him to [illegible] permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD, as requested.

Mr. BAKER. Then I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. PALMER. My objection was to putting in two speeches made by [illegible] I object [illegible] own remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The request for unanimous consent has been made before the committee twice, and objection has been made.

Mr. BAKER. I have no desire to incorporate this article in my remarks, but simply to incorporate two paragraphs [illegible] not inflict upon the House. That is all. I [illegible] about four-fifths of the way through.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has yielded the floor and is not in order [illegible]

Mr. HEMENWAY. [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. The [illegible] that the committee do now rise.

[illegible] and the Speaker having resumed the [illegible] Mr. [illegible] the W[illegible] H[illegible] had [illegible] H. R. [illegible] bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Memorial.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

Your memorialists, the Council of the Massachusetts Historical Society, acting under its instructions, would respectfully call the attention of your honorable bodies to certain facts connected with the United States frigate Constitution.

That vessel is now lying at Charlestown, Mass., in a dock also used by the steamships of the so-called White Star Line, she is dismantled, out of repair, and [illegible] Your memorialists further represent that in the American national [illegible] as in the Constitution such as ought to be [illegible] except perhaps the Senate house, Independence Hall, and the Liberty Bell of Philadelphia. This vessel was launched in 1797, and it was the only one which, in the [illegible] war of 1812, appeared upon the high seas in the service of the infant American navy, and [illegible] the American flag. Under Commodore Bainbridge, Decatur, and other officers, such as the British frigates, the Constitution was [illegible] to the British forces on the seas, and [illegible] bright gleam in the darkness of a long and disastrous war. It was the first frigate built with the Western Line of Congressional appropriation. The [illegible] was [illegible] and the sum of [illegible] was put in expressly for a limited number of years, and [illegible] the Western navy, and [illegible] to have [illegible] the Western navy, and [illegible] to New England, and [illegible] it was still [illegible]

[illegible] that the Massachusetts Historical Society, already in 1812 [illegible] more than twenty years in existence, now [illegible] the [illegible] to be [illegible] speaking through her [illegible] in the [illegible] New England. [illegible] to enter into the earliest and most [illegible] which was [illegible] "belonging to people" of the first [illegible] in the memory of the present [illegible] United States. [illegible] the President [illegible] with [illegible] during the [illegible] revolution, and [illegible] which were at all times [illegible] the Revolution [illegible] of [illegible] Constitution. [illegible] that the Constitution is thus [illegible] with [illegible] [illegible] United States, no less an interest and sentiment attach to the Constitution than in Great Britain attach to the Victory. The Constitution in the days of

He also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. [illegible]) for the relief of [illegible], reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. [illegible]) to place on the retired list of the Army the name of Major Wesley Merritt, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

ALFONSO ZELAYA.

Mr. PROCTOR. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 34) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive Alfonso Zelaya, a citizen of Nicaragua, into the United States Military Academy at West Point, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUISIANA PURCHASE EXPOSITION.

Mr. BURNHAM. In the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Printing, I report for him with a recommendation the amendment of the House of Representatives to [illegible] to the concurrent resolution [illegible] and ask for its present consideration.

The amendment of the House was, to strike out all after the resolving clause and to insert:

[illegible]

Mr. BURNHAM. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BURNHAM introduced a bill (S. [illegible]) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FORAKER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,000 to pay the superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia the balance of his salary due from July 1, 1902, and from July 1, 1903, as fixed by the amended code of law of the District of Columbia, approved June 30, 1902, intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. HANSBROUGH submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

[illegible] and that the [illegible] be [illegible]

LAND IN ST. AUGUSTINE, FLA., FOR SCHOOL PURPOSES.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3479) [illegible] provision for conveyance in fee certain public grounds in the city of St. Augustine, Fla., for school purposes.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Education and Labor with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That [illegible] conveyance heretofore or hereafter made by the mayor of St. [illegible]

The amendment was agreed to.

The [illegible] was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENCE RELATIVE TO PANAMA, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution [illegible] by Mr. CULBERSON, requesting the President to inform the Senate whether all correspondence, etc., between the Department of State and the legation of the United States at Bogota has been sent to the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Mississippi has yielded to me for a few moments.

Mr. President, in the discussion yesterday something was said in regard to what occurred in the Administration of President Cleveland, and it was attempted to make that a precedent for a refusal to pass this resolution. That was an entirely different case. I read from the Journal of the Senate, which shows the view, and what was the subject-matter of the controversy there. Here is a resolution that was passed by the Senate on the 18th of February, 1886. It was reported by Senator Edmunds:

Resolved, That it is, under these circumstances, the duty of the Senate to refuse [illegible] of whom [illegible] of a Department [illegible] deemed necessary by the Senate and called for in considering the matter.

That shows the gist of the contention at that time. Now, I read from Mr. Cleveland's message of March 1, 1886, on page 350 of the Journal of that time. I will read only a few extracts, simply to show what was the contention:

While, therefore, I am constrained to deny the right of the Senate to the [illegible] is vested in the [illegible] That [illegible] When [illegible] of the people and [illegible] of [illegible] a familiar [illegible] every other right of intercourse with [illegible]

[illegible] which assembled after the adoption of the Constitution [illegible] the independence of the Executive in the matter of removals from office was fully sustained.

Now, about the law of 1867, Mr. Cleveland said:

> The first enactment of this description was passed under a stress of partisanship and political bitterness which culminated in the President's impeachment.
> [illegible] provided that the Federal officers to which it applied could only be suspended during the recess of the Senate [illegible] overwhelmingly and bitterly opposed [illegible] the exercise of this power [illegible] the President [illegible] the expiration of the session [illegible] the President "to report to the Senate" [illegible] the evidence and reasons for his action [illegible]
> The Senate [illegible] overwhelmingly and bitterly opposed [illegible] the exercise of this power [illegible] the President [illegible] the expiration of the session [illegible] the President "to report to the Senate" [illegible] the evidence and reasons for his action [illegible] cation of any pretended constitutional right.

Mr. President, this is not that case. There is no parallel between them. That was in regard to removals from office. That was the main contention. I am far from any desire to encroach upon the constitutional prerogatives of the President. I believe that the prosperity of our Republic and of our Government will depend upon keeping the different branches of the Government separate and distinct. That the legislative branch should not encroach upon the executive branch nor upon the judiciary, nor should either of them encroach upon the rights of the legislative branch.

Mr. President, under our Constitution the President has the right to remove an incumbent from office, and we can ask him no questions about it. That has been determined from the beginning. But when it comes to a finished act, in which the concurrence of the Senate is necessary, the Senate has a right, a constitutional right, to all the papers and documents pertaining to that question. I do not think there can be any question about this.

I was very much astonished that the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] took such a broad position in regard to it. I say we have no right whatever to inquire of the President to demand of him anything in regard to an unfinished matter. If he is about to negotiate a treaty, we have no right to inquire what he is doing. We have no right to do anything of the kind. But when he has negotiated a treaty and that treaty has to be ratified by the Senate before it becomes effective, and we have to advise and consent to its ratification, we then have a right to know why he did it and what are the papers in regard to it. That, I say, is a clear right, and I do not believe there is any President who will refuse it.

This resolution is not for the purpose of casting any reflections upon the present Executive. There is no such intention. It is simply that we ask what are all the papers now in regard to this transaction. There is nothing upon the record which shows that the President has transmitted all of them. He has not said so. We do not know whether there are any not transmitted or not. If there are any, we should like to see them. Such a request never has been refused, I believe, in a solitary instance. The information can be given to us, and it must be confidential. The resolution asks that it be given to us in confidence—that it be given to the Senate in executive session.

Now, where is the harshness when such a request has been refused? Suppose it is a very important matter; have we not had precedents in the past? Have we not had them here? Have not Senators now upon this floor seen a case in which a paper was sent here in confidence, and afterwards it was found where it had to be found upon any rumor? It is not upon our records here. It is not in any printed publication. It is not in any one of the numerous communications that were made to the Senate in regard to the transaction in question which it was furnished us. There are other instances in the history of the country.

If there is anything that the President does not think at this time it would be prudent to make public, he ought to communicate it to us. He can send the original paper here and we will treat it, as it always has been treated when such communications have been made to us, in the strictest confidence, and no record will be made of it.

This is not an encroachment, in my judgment, upon the rights of the Executive in any shape, manner, or form. If it were I would not support it. I believe the distinction is clear and must be apparent to anyone who will examine it. We have no right to make inquiries when it is a matter that is being negotiated—when we are not called upon to do or say anything about it.

But when the act is consummated, when the treaty is agreed upon, and it can not become effective until we have advised and consented to it by the requisite vote in this body, we have the right, then, before we give our advice, before we give our consent, to know the whole transaction in regard to it; and if any of the papers are of such a character that it might not be wise and prudent just at this time that they should be made public, let them be communicated to us in confidence, as has been done heretofore in matters of very great importance and of a very confidential nature.

Therefore, I shall support this resolution without the words the Senator from Illinois has proposed to insert in it. I do not think that they are at all necessary.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I ask the Senator from Missouri a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. Conceding that this is not a parallel case to that under the Cleveland Administration, and I concede that it is entirely different so far as that is concerned, conceding that it is a different case, can not the Senator from Missouri conceive of a case where we have a right to call upon the President to furnish papers where it might not be consistent with the public interest to furnish the papers?

Mr. COCKRELL. I will say that probably in nine-tenths of the cases in which Congress might call upon him it would be eminently proper to insert the words "if not incompatible with the public interest." But this is not one of those cases. We are not discussing that kind of a case.

Mr. MITCHELL. Can not the Senator see that even in the consideration of a treaty in reference to which the papers are called for, as in this case, there might be certain papers covered by the resolution that it might not be proper to furnish?

Mr. COCKRELL. I have said that there might be such a case, and I have shown the Senate two cases, practically—I have not named them, but you are all familiar with them—where information was called for, and it was thought by the Executive proper to give it out, and yet the paper itself was sent here. We had it here for inspection, and no record was ever made of it.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator from Missouri admits that we have a right to call for these papers, and he admits further that there might be a case where it would be improper and not consistent with the public interest to furnish certain papers.

Mr. COCKRELL. No.

Mr. MITCHELL. Why not then insert the amendment of the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. COCKRELL. No; I did not say it would be improper to furnish them. I say it is right that he should furnish them; but he can furnish them as has been done heretofore. He can send a paper here to the Senate and let the Senate examine it, though he does not want to commit it to a record which may be made for future reference. Let it be sent here and examined and be considered confidential if there is anything in it which is of a confidential nature. We have a right, I say, as a part of the executive authority in completing our part of this treaty, to the information which the President has, and if he does not want to communicate it in a public way he has precedents—several of them—for sending the information to us here in a confidential way and letting us examine it.

Mr. MITCHELL. But would it not be the more courteous and appropriate way to first insert in the resolution "if not inconsistent with the public interest;" and then if the President——

Mr. COCKRELL. No. I do not think it would.

Mr. MITCHELL. If he thought that there were certain papers, then——

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think it is discourteous at all to pass a resolution calling for such information as we have a right to have. If it were anything that was not completed, if it were [illegible] But there is no necessity for the language to be inserted here. It is tweedledum and tweedledee so far as the practical effect of it is concerned. Why are Senators stickling so over this matter? Whatever the facts are, we should have them, simply because it is a constitutional right the Senate enjoys and it ought to assert it. It is no disrespect to the President when we do assert it and pass something that is clearly within our constitutional power, without any intention to reflect, directly or indirectly or remotely, in any shape, manner, or form upon the President of the United States.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. If this is a mere matter of tweedledum and tweedledee, I can not understand why such strenuous objection should be made to putting in the resolution the phraseology we usually do.

Mr. COCKRELL. This is our resolution, and you are trying to force this amendment upon us.

Mr. SPOONER. Your resolution!

Mr. COCKRELL. And this is your amendment. If the resolution goes through it will be a resolution of the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. I supposed it was a Senate resolution; that it was no more yours than ours.

Mr. COCKRELL. You say "yours" and "ours." This is not a political question.

Mr. SPOONER. No.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no politics in it in any shape, manner or form; but we of the minority have been recognized as offering the resolution, and although we have the right, the constitutional right, and when we have told you that it is no reflection on anybody, that it is in pursuance of that constitutional right, yet you try to force an amendment here, for which I see no occasion in the world.

Mr. LAURIN. Mr. President, I shall endeavor to put the ideas I have in reference to this resolution in as few words as possible, in order to make myself intelligible to the Senate. I must submit at the outset, however, that I am not familiar with precedents which have been discussed by Senators during the consideration of this resolution. I have gotten more information as to these precedents from this discussion than I have from any reading of the precedents themselves.

I will say further that I do not think it proper for a Senator, in discussing any resolution in open Senate, to give expression as to how he is going to vote on the treaty when it comes to its final action in the Senate. That is a matter for executive session, and as much as one of the secrets of executive session as anything else.

Before proceeding to a discussion of what I consider the real question contained in this resolution, I want to make an observation in reference to what was said yesterday by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], that this resolution was submitted apparently for the purpose of obtaining some party advantage. It was not introduced for that purpose. I am free to confess that, so far as I am concerned, I am glad when any transaction in the Senate, or in the other House of Congress, or in the executive department redounds to the benefit of the party to which I belong—the Democratic party—but I subordinate all considerations of party interest to my official duty to the entire country.

I can not conceive how there can be anything obtained of advantage to the Democratic party by this resolution, unless there is something behind, as the Senator says has been intimated—I do not think it has been intimated—unless there is something behind that the executive department is not willing for the Senate to know. Assuming, as I do, that there is nothing of that kind in any secret corner, I assert that the best service that can be rendered to the executive department is to give the President the opportunity to make public everything that has been done in reference to the establishment of the Panama Republic if there has not been anything improper done between the officers of this Government and the alleged officers of the so-called Panama Republic, and I assume that there has not been any improper thing done by any officer of our Government.

If the effort were on the part of the Democratic caucus to obtain advantage, the best way to thwart that effort, if there is nothing wrong in the conduct of the Administration in this matter, which I assume, the course is to make everything public, without reference to the judgment of anybody, and that would be the best answer to any suggestion by anybody or any imputation upon the conduct of any officer of the Administration in connection with either the Panama or the Colombian Government or the Panama or Colombian Republics.

I want to make some observations in reference to the statement that was made yesterday by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that this resolution was a command to the President. It is not a command, but is cast in most respectful language, and in order to show that I will read the resolution entire:

> Resolved, That the President be requested to inform the Senate whether all the [illegible] between the Department of State and the [illegible] and notes to the Senate in executive session.

So there is no suggestion of a command, but a request. If our position is correct, we request the President to grant to the Senate not a concession, but that to which the Senate is entitled. There can be no suggestion of discourtesy in the Senate's passing its judgment upon whether it wants that to which it is entitled or not; whether it ought to be sent or not, and not leaving it to the President to decide, because he is not asked to make public information that is in possession of the executive department of the Government, not asked to make any document or anything that has transpired between the executive department and any of its officers either in Colombia or Panama public, but to send it to the Senate in confidence, because when it is sent to the Senate in executive session it means to send it in confidence.

I resent the imputation of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] that the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations should have possession of any information from the executive department to which every Senator in this body is not equally entitled. It is the Senate and every member of it that is entitled to the information that is contained in the archives of the executive department. Every Senator is as much entitled to the information in question as is the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations or any other Senator. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, when it comes to advising and consenting to the ratification of a treaty or the rejection of a treaty, has no more power and no more authority in this body than any other Senator.

The suggestion was made yesterday—I have not read the RECORD this morning—by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] that probably there are some things transpiring now that we should not have, as they would throw no light on the situation. If they would not, no harm would be done, [illegible] would know of it except Senators. But it [illegible] of law that circumstances and transactions [illegible] shed light upon the real matter in question [illegible] cedent and contemporaneous transactions and circumstances.

The desire of the Senate is, or ought to be—it surely is the desire of the Senator who introduced this resolution and a number of others of us—that we should have [illegible] mation in reference to this matter [illegible] and which may have operated upon his mind in the negotiation of this treaty.

The question is not, as was stated by the Senator from Wisconsin, whether the President would be justifiable in denying to the Senate, or at least in [illegible] secret service of the executive department of the Government, or whether the President would be justifiable in denying to the Senate, and denying to the public, his plan of military campaign in case of war. That is not the question. It can be granted that in case of anything of that kind the President would pause whether it would operate against the interests of the public service for him to make the matter public; but the question here is whether or not in this case the Senate of the United States is entitled, in passing upon the question as to whether it will advise and consent to the treaty which has been made, to the information which the President had and which operated upon his mind. If the Senate is entitled to this information in confidence, as the resolution requests—although the Senate has no power to enforce its request, as has been suggested, it can make the request predicated on its own judgment. It is impossible if the Senate keeps faith by holding the communications in confidence, for any harm to thereby come to the public interest. To put the amendment, therefore, is not only idle, but implies that the Senate may divulge that it receives in confidence. It does not have shown with reason that it would operate against the public good to send any information to the Senate in confidence, and that is what this resolution requests.

I say the simple question is whether the Senate is entitled, in confidence, to all the information the President had and which may have operated upon his mind, so that the Senate can determine whether it was wise for him to make the treaty and whether, therefore, the Senate will advise [illegible]

There is a question of the propriety of the secrecy of the secret service of the executive department. Nobody proposes to do that. The question is whether the Senate is entitled to the information in confidence. If the body is entitled to the information, and this body, which is to pass upon the treaty, says it wants it, it is no discourtesy to the President to request him to send in here that which we are entitled to have in passing judgment upon the treaty. That is the question, and the entire question. As I have said, it is dissociated from any proposition to expose to the public the secret service; it is dissociated from the proposition to expose to the public a plan of military campaign of the President of the United States.

The President has the power to make treaties by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Whenever the Constitution confers upon the President of the United States any power, it carries with it a duty of that officer. When it confers upon the Senate of the United States a duty it implies the means and power to intelligently discharge that duty. It is the duty of the President of the United States, as much as it is in his power, to make treaties by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States. It was understood by the framers of the Constitution that it would be in the interest of the Government of the United States that treaties should be made with foreign governments, and it conferred that power upon the President, and that power infers the duty of the President to make treaties.

Where that power limited the power, and therefore limited the duty to the advice and consent of the Senate. When it did that, it made it his duty, this confidential relation existing between him and the Senate, in making a treaty to consult all the information that he was which [illegible] but it is not to be supposed that this body would desire any information that was not pertinent to the matter in hand. It was, then, the duty of the President to function his advisers, who are to advise and consent to a treaty to be negotiated, and the information he had, in order that the Senate may judge of the wisdom or folly of the treaty proposed to be made, and the competency he had for judging of the treaty. Where the property of the treaty is to be the point of [illegible] of two [illegible] national interests it seems to me to be [illegible] to argue that one of them is [illegible] to information [illegible] to the other. If the Senate is entitled to this information [illegible] as is admitted, it seems to me to be a [illegible] as to whether it ought to be given to any body, even the President.

The Senate [illegible] to pass this [illegible] and [illegible] to any other power or any other [illegible]. The Senate may make a treaty [illegible] but the Senate itself [illegible] to be [illegible] y. It can not make [illegible] any other [illegible] of any other body, whether the House of Representatives, the Supreme Court of the United States, the President of the United States, or anybody else. It must [illegible] the [illegible] of the Senate. The [illegible] of the Senate. How can the Senate judge of the wisdom of it when the President has asked for [illegible] the opinion, but the advice, of the Senate—when the President refuses to consult a [illegible] body, who are given and entrusted by laws, the information that is in his possession which this body desires for deliberation on the treaty?

I am not going to discuss the treaty. I am not going further than to say that the very first article of this treaty is a declaration of war against Colombia, if Colombia does [illegible] to assert its authority, even in the interest of the United States. That being so, the Senate must want information which will enable it to judge whether anything has been done in the establishment of this embassy. Republic that would justify us in taking that responsibility upon the Government of the United States or denying that responsibility of the Government of the United States.

We have a right to know everything that the President knows about this treaty. Our authority and our power are coordinate with his authority and his power, coupled with the condition that the Senate advises him to exercise that power and consents to his exercise of that power.

It is said here in advocacy of the position that has been taken by the Administration that Colombia has been a despotic Government over the people of Panama. Mr. President, it does not lie in our mouth to say anything of that kind. We are the last people who ought to assert anything of the despotism of the Colombian Government over Panama in judging of this treaty. That seems to be the argument—that is the argument, I believe—of the Assistant Secretary of State. We are sent off from that because last year we offered a treaty to the Colombian Government whereby we undertook to maintain their authority and their sovereignty over Panama. This Administration undertook to guarantee, less than a year ago, so far as its property was concerned and so far as this territory about which we were treating was concerned, the sovereignty of Colombia and make stronger its hold—its perpetual hold—upon that territory. That was the Hay-Herran treaty. So, as I have said, it does not lie in our mouth to say anything against Colombia for any oppression of Panama.

I am not arguing and I am not going to argue that Panama has not grounds for complaint. I do not know. It is not pertinent or germane to this discussion. If the people of Panama have cause for complaint, it does not lie in the mouth of this Administration to say anything to justify itself because of any tyranny on the part of the Colombian Government over Panama.

It seems that the Administration was willing less than a year ago to fasten the hold of Colombia upon those people if we could only get Colombia to treat with us for control over the Panama Canal and the Panama Canal property. But there is a little intimation contained in the President's message of January 4, on pages 23 and 24, that the time when this Administration wanted to call a halt was when the New Panama Canal Company, not composed of citizens of the United States, but a company in which the Government of the United States is not interested, was about to lose its alleged rights in Colombia by lapse of the statute of limitations, and not when the people of Panama were oppressed by the tyranny of Colombia.

If it is not true that this Administration intended to make this effort for the protection of the New Panama Canal Company, in which the citizens of this Government are not interested, what is the suggestion in the message for? Why is it there? What is its [illegible]? Why should we risk a war for the protection of real or supposed property of citizens of France or any other country?

[illegible] a term that has been suggested by the discussion of the question. If there is such a thing as international law, it should apply to all governments alike great and small, because [illegible] ought not to be [illegible] to the weak and another to the [illegible] and if this Government has a right to [illegible] doctrine of international eminent domain, then it would be similar to the doctrine of national eminent domain; and if so, it would be the duty of this Government, in asserting that right, to pay to the real owner of the soil an amount that the property taken was reasonably worth.

That is about all I intended to say. Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HANSBROUGH in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM].

Mr. CULLOM. I hope we shall have a vote. Mr. President.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I desire to know whether the vote is to be taken on the resolution or on the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULBERSON (when Mr. BAILEY's name was called). My colleague [Mr. BAILEY] is unavoidably absent. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. ELKINS (when his name was called). I inquire if the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Texas is absent.

Mr. ELKINS. I am paired with that Senator, but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. I presume he would vote "nay," if present. I should vote "yea." In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. McLAURIN (when Mr. MONEY's name was called). My colleague [Mr. MONEY] is detained from the Senate by reason of sickness. I believe he has a pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY], who is detained from the Chamber by illness. If he were present, he would vote "nay" and I would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. CLARK]. The junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. McCREARY] has a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA]. I therefore transfer my pair with the Senator from Montana to the Senator from Ohio, which will enable the Senator from Kentucky and myself to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. McCREARY. I vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN. It has been suggested that I [illegible] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] to the Senator from Washington [Mr. ANKENY], so that I may vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CLAY (after having voted in the negative). I desire to ask if the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Massachusetts has not voted.

Mr. CLAY. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore withdraw my vote. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. LATIMER (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS]. I do not see him in the Chamber and do not know how he would vote, but I presume he would vote "yea." As I have voted, I desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to inquire if the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is recorded as voting.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. PETTUS. I thought I heard his name read as having voted.

Mr. SPOONER (after having voted in the affirmative). I inadvertently voted without looking to see if the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK], with whom I have a general pair, was present.

Mr. GORMAN (after having voted in the negative). I suggest to the Senator that he and I transfer our pairs. I also voted inadvertently. I have a general pair with the President pro tempore the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. I suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin that we transfer our pairs and let our votes stand.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. CLAY. I will transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE], so that the senior Senator from Tennessee will stand paired with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 20, as follows:

YEAS—39.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Gallinger,	Perkins,
Alger,	[illegible]	[illegible],	Platt, Conn.

Clark, Mont.	Hanna,	[illegible]	Wetmore,
Clark, Ark.	Hansbrough,	Mitchell,

So the amendment of Mr. CULLOM was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to suggest to the Senator on the other side having charge of this resolution that its phraseology is not exactly what we should have in an important state paper going from the Senate. There are two clauses in it. The first clause asks "for the correspondence and notes "for the [illegible] an isthmian canal." I suppose the mover of the resolution would prefer to have it "relating to" instead of "for."

Mr. CULBERSON. There is no objection to that modification.

Mr. HOAR. The other clause is "all the correspondence and notes between the United States and any of its officials." The United States does not correspond with its officials in any proper sense of that phrase. It should be "the Department of State and any official or representative." The United States does not in its own name correspond with any of its servants. One servant corresponds with another. I would suggest instead of "between the United States, the words "between the Department of State and any of the officials or representatives of the United States."

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly. I have finished what I had to say.

Mr. CULBERSON. While I think the criticism of the distinguished Senator—and I say it with due deference—is hypercritical, there is no objection to any alteration which may make the resolution clearer to others than it seems to be. If it is satisfactory, it may read:

And notes between the Government—

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to suggest what has just been suggested to me? The resolution itself in the first [illegible] is "between the Department of State." If the case is [illegible] the second clause it would remove the criticism.

Mr. CULBERSON. The last paragraph of the resolution is intended to be broader than the first. We want any communication of an official character between any Department of the Government in the last instance and any of its officials or representatives or with the Government of Panama. We have no objection to adding before the words "United States" the words "the Government of."

Mr. HOAR. Suppose the Senator should say "and all the correspondence and notes between any Department of the Government."

Mr. CULBERSON. I was about to suggest, after the word "between," in line 7, the insertion of the words "any Department of."

Mr. SPOONER. That is all right.

Mr. ALLISON. "The Government of the United States."

Mr. CULBERSON. Let the Secretary read the resolution, or the part of it to be amended.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed after the word "between," it is proposed to insert "any Department of the Government of."

Mr. HOAR. That makes it clear.

Mr. CULLOM. Let it be read as the resolution will now read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution as it is proposed to be amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

[illegible]

Mr. HOAR. That was amended by consent, substituting the words "in relation to" instead of "for."

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the resolution, as follows:

[illegible] the Government of Colombia in relation to the construction of an [illegible] Department of the Government of the United States and any [illegible] not, that he be requested to send the remaining correspondence and notes to [illegible]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I will thank you to state what the proposition is. I have just entered the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

Mr. STONE. As amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Which has been amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

WILLIAM D. CRUM.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, [illegible] whether [illegible] collector? If so, [illegible] is his second appointment made in accordance with law; and if [illegible] or precedent for the holding of an office of this [illegible] to make such appointments during a constructive recess, as this appears [illegible]

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President—

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Rhode Island give me one minute in which to explain the resolution?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, yesterday we received from the Secretary of the Treasury an answer to a resolution passed on the 25th of January, endeavoring to get the same information. I will read that letter, as it is very remarkable:

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY, TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
[illegible]

MY DEAR SIR: Replying to Senate's resolution [illegible] advise [illegible] if so, under what authority of law? William D. Crum [illegible] of Charleston, S. C. Whether he [illegible]

Very truly, yours,

L. M. SHAW.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FRYE,
President United States Senate.

Mr. President, the trouble with this letter is that it is again [illegible] I have just offered may be found [illegible] that Senators may see just what papers are left out or are left in an ambiguous or uncertain and nebulous condition here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again read the resolution.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does the Senator from Rhode Island wish any additional discussion?

Mr. ALDRICH. I will ask that the resolution may go over until to-morrow.

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, Mr. President, it takes so so long to get this information when we start [illegible] Senator will not do that. I will not say another word. The resolution is very clear on its face. It simply endeavors to get the Secretary to tell us what a de facto omeal is.

Mr. KEAN. Consult the law books.

Mr. TILLMAN. We are not [illegible] to go to the law books. If the Senator from New Jersey [illegible] me. We are Senators here [illegible] Senations, and I am trying to get the Treasury Department to tell us just where this man is and how he got there.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. TILLMAN. I am not here for years, because the resolution is [illegible] for consideration, and if he insists upon its going over it will have to go over. But I submit to him that the honor of the Secretary of the Treasury warrants the inquiries which I have presented. It does not appear that we are going to get this information [illegible] know whether we are going to get it now.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will not object to the first part of the resolution, which simply directs the Secretary to send here the papers in the case. I am [illegible] with the law. It is not for us to tell the Secretary of the Treasury a lot of legal questions.

Mr. HALE. Strike out the last two clauses.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Secretary says [illegible] a de facto official. I want to know where the Secretary [illegible] official of this Government [illegible] Senate, who has a right to exercise [illegible] in other and [illegible] Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. When the Senate is in possession of the information——

Mr. TILLMAN. I am trying to get it, and the Senator from Rhode Island will not [illegible]

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from South Carolina goes further. He asks for opinions, and not facts.

Mr. TILLMAN. Opinions? I ask what a de facto official is? If the Secretary will not send his own opinion here, I would not ask him for the opinions of others.

Mr. ALDRICH. If [illegible] it is better, and that the Senator will reach the purpose [illegible] promptly and efficaciously by asking for facts [illegible]

Mr. HALE. Strike out the last two clauses.

Mr. ALDRICH. Strike out the last two clauses of the resolution.

Mr. TILLMAN. Please read the resolution again, and let me see what it is proposed to have stricken out, and let me see if [illegible] to be heard the ears.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again read the resolution.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be and he is hereby directed to send to the Senate the following papers, if not incompatible with the public interest, namely:

First: Is William D. Crum now holding a commission as collector? If so, give date and send to the Senate a verbatim copy thereof.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is all right.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the resolution, as follows:

Second: Was his second appointment made in accordance with law; and if so, what law?

Third: Is there any law or precedent for the holding of an office of this kind [illegible]

Fourth: [illegible] intention to claim and exercise the authority to make such appointments during a constructive recess, as this appears to be?

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator from Rhode Island will indulge me for one moment, I will call his attention to the fact that [illegible] a personal letter and [illegible] the Senate by the [illegible] resolution, we have tried to get this very information, and that the Secretary has, apparently, with great alacrity, declined it.

Mr. SPOONER. What has he done?

Mr. TILLMAN. He has declined the inquiry as to whether or not this man is lawfully in office.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, well——

Mr. TILLMAN. And he says he is a de facto official.

Mr. SPOONER. He has stated the facts. He was asked whether this man was in office, and he informs the Senate that he was commissioned in March. That was in the recess.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes; which was lawful.

Mr. SPOONER. Which was lawful. He informs the Senate also that he was appointed on December 7.

Mr. TILLMAN. "Appointed," mind you. The usual form is nominated again.

Mr. SPOONER. No; appointed on December 7.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is what he states.

Mr. SPOONER. That is what he says.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. Commissioned December 7.

Mr. TILLMAN. No; he does not say he has a commission now.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, well; he was appointed December 7. He is still in office, he says, and has given bond. Now he says he is a de facto officer. That is a question of law; and does not the Senator think that as he is asking the Senate to take the deposition of the Secretary of the Treasury and as he has framed several direct interrogatories, as the lawyers call it, he had better let the resolution go over until to-morrow to see if there be not some cross-interrogatories to be put?

Mr. TILLMAN. This is a very important matter. It is very much more important, to my mind, than the matter which we have just disposed of.

Mr. SPOONER. I, too, think it is important.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is too important to be laughed at and slurred over.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not laughing at it. I think the Senator knows on the facts whether or not Crum was lawfully appointed.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have [illegible]

Mr. CULLOM. The difficulty is that it goes further than is necessary, in speaking about a de facto officer.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. The other inquiry asks under what authority of law the appointment was made, and instead of telling us who he got any authority or where there is a precedent or any statute [illegible] he goes forward and says, "Now he is de facto." That is a brand-new phrase in this connection.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, no.

Mr. TILLMAN. I understand that. There are de facto governments, like the one at Panama and there are [illegible] and all that kind of thing, but I am endeavoring to locate the contention of the executive department in this connection. If they contend that there is a constructive recess, which occurred between 12 o'clock and 12 o'clock on the 7th of December, let them say so. I do not want them to go and do the thing and then try to [illegible]

Mr. SPOONER. The truth is——

Mr. TILLMAN. Another question I will ask my friend is this: He says this is a question for the decision of the judicial department. I want to know who can bring a case in court to test it if we [illegible] our right and our duty to pass upon the question of [illegible]

I want to ask my friend also: Suppose this was in Milwaukee or New York, instead of Charleston:

Mr. SPOONER. It would not change the case at all.

Mr. TILLMAN. It would not change the case at all; [illegible] would not be attempted, and you know it. No [illegible] dare attempt it.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not feeling very well this morning, and I think the Senator ought not to be so threatening.

Mr. TILLMAN. I feel very deeply and strongly, but I do not intend to threaten my friend. I speak emphatically, and [illegible] so thin-skinned that he objects to Senators displaying earnestness such as [illegible] interests. I will apologize.

Mr. SPOONER. The truth is, this resolution ought to go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over under the rule.

RELATIONS WITH COLOMBIA.

Mr. BACON. I desire to ask permission of the Senate, under the order which has previously been made, to call up Senate resolution 82, in order that I may submit some remarks in reference [illegible]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution indicated by the Senator from Georgia.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution No. 82, by Mr. BACON, favoring the negotiation by the President of a treaty with Colombia for the adjustment of all differences between the United States and that country growing out of the recent revolution in Panama.

Mr. BACON. I ask that the resolution may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. BACON on the 12th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be respectfully informed that the Senate favors a prompt [illegible] with a view to its ratification as a treaty [illegible] to the end that there may be peace [illegible] Colombia and the Republic of Panama growing out of the recent revolution in Panama and the consequent action of the Panama Canal Commission and the [illegible] the Panama Canal [illegible] power of the United States [illegible] by such acts or laws [illegible] and authority [illegible] such [illegible] as may be made by the United States [illegible] Provided, That the President be requested to inform the Senate [illegible] the same have been shown to be due to any act of the Panama Canal Commission [illegible] the same.

Resolved, That the President be requested to inform the Senate if it should prove to be [illegible] for the United States and the Republic of Colombia [illegible] Panama Canal Commission [illegible] Republic of Panama [illegible] Provided, That the President be requested to inform the Senate [illegible] Colombia [illegible] Panama Canal Commission into about fifty different treaties for arbitration of differences with other governments.

Of course it is not necessary to enumerate them. Senators are familiar with them and [illegible] I wish to read only one of them. At the close of the Mexican war, when we made the treaty of peace with Mexico—I only mention this as an illustration, and I may [illegible] following article was inserted:

ARTICLE XXI

[illegible]

I only read that as a sample, as one of many, as I said, nearly fifty of them, forty-nine possibly may be the accurate number of treaties which have been made by the United States Government, each of them providing the principle of arbitrating with a country, if ground for it should arise, or a difference arising between the two, and, in case of an impossibility of agreement, for a reference of that matter to the arbitration and settlement of some friendly and neutral power or persons.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia will please suspend one moment while the Chair lays before the Senate the Calendar of General Orders.

The Secretary. [illegible] Business Senate bill 187.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask unanimous consent that that be laid aside for the benefit of the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill [illegible] The Chair hears no objection, and the Senate will proceed.

Mr. BACON. The memorial from [illegible] which I have alluded and which [illegible] New York, concludes in this language:

[illegible]

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator be kind enough to read upon the number of that document?

Mr. BACON. Yes, sir. It is Senate document 141, [illegible] Senate document of the Senate, Fiftieth Congress, [illegible] session.

The presentation of that memorial under the very impressive circumstances which gave rise to it had such influence upon the Senate, and at about the same time there were so many other memorials upon the subject of the peaceful settlement of international disputes, and so many bills and resolutions introduced into the Senate, that the following order was passed by the Senate:

Ordered, That the [illegible] be instructed to report a bill or joint resolution providing for the peaceful settlement of international disputes, and for other purposes.

And in compliance with that order this document which I hold in my hand was compiled and printed.

The presentation by Senator [illegible] was a very small part of the general public information which was made at that time in regard to the Government of the United States in its attitude to the United States, to which compulsory and [illegible] if possible, arbitration of any [illegible] should be found to be impracticable. I want to call the attention of the Senate to some of the memorials which were sent at that time to the Senate of the United States, and to various proceedings of the Senate in pursuance of that general wish which are to be found in this document. They are from people all over the United States, regardless of section. The first one to which I call the attention of the Senate is a petition from citizens of California. The presentation to the Senate of the memorial was January 10, 1888, at least that is the date of the memorial, and it was within a few days after that that the committee appeared before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. May I ask the Senator what memorial he refers to? I did not hear his earlier statement.

Mr. BACON. I refer to the memorial which was presented to the Senate through the Senator from [illegible] of New York, the immediate convocation of a [illegible] in an address which had been presented by two [illegible] members of the British House of Commons [illegible] and the United States which should provide for conciliatory negotiations in case of any differences, and in the absence of any practical agreement to provide in such a case for a court of arbitration. I will [illegible] the repetition of what I had stated before [illegible] Senate. I presume that will be sufficient to connect what I am now saying with what I had previously said.

I called the attention of the Senate to the fact that that proceeding had enlisted the attention of the Senate [illegible] to an extent that it ordered that there should be compiled and printed for the use of the Senate [illegible] of the country [illegible] Congress presented in advocacy of this general idea and desire for conciliatory agreement and for practical arbitration in the absence of a satisfactory [illegible]

[illegible] about to read [illegible] the short petition, as it is [illegible] California, signed by a great many of them:

[illegible]

[illegible] a permanent court is established, we would urge [illegible] of every treaty [illegible] and differences arising under it should be [illegible]

[illegible] was this general and widespread desire on the part of our people that the Government of the United States should, in its most [illegible] and solemn utterances, provide measures which [illegible] the machinery [illegible]

[illegible] I would unduly burden the RECORD if I [illegible] in full; but in speaking about the desirability that there should be such arrangements [illegible] between the United States [illegible] Government [illegible] of New Hampshire [illegible] was not one only for peace between [illegible] and the Government of Great Britain, but that it was a [illegible] that the United States Government should occupy [illegible] peoples. It concludes in [illegible] the proposed treaty between Great Britain and the United States:

Next I read one from the State of Ohio. This also referring to the immediate proposition for a treaty between Great Britain and the United States, concludes:

[illegible] may be necessary [illegible] United States of America [illegible] in the interest of humanity and [illegible] peace and good will among men.

Not simply peace between the United States and Great Britain, but in the interest of humanity and universal peace and good will among men.

The memorial from the State of Maine uses similar language, signed by a large number, filling half a page on this printed [illegible] of the citizens of Maine, referring particularly to the [illegible] British treaty, and then recognizing that that is not the [illegible], but that the idea is that the United States Government [illegible] a position which shall plant it upon the side of [illegible] peace, not only with [illegible] strong, but with the weak and with all peoples.

Before I finish I desire to show not only that the people of [illegible] were imbued by such a desire, but that some of the most [illegible] men from Maine, who have illustrated their State and the citizenry of this country, have in the most pronounced manner committed this Government, so far as they were able to do it [illegible] voice and by their influence, to this most benign and beneficent policy.

Mr. President, I have here a large petition, printed in this document, from the State of Massachusetts. I shall not stop to read it. I am sorry that the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who was so exceedingly indignant at the bare idea that the Government of the United States, the great, strong Government of the United States, should for a moment contemplate a [illegible] arbitration or contemplate the attempt at conciliation [illegible] with the weak, petty power of Colombia, is not now present, in order that he might hear me read the resolutions of the legislature of Massachusetts upon that subject, also found in this same document.

Mr. McCREARY. Will the Senator be kind enough to tell the date of those resolutions?

Mr. BACON. I have already stated it; it is in 1888, during the first session of the Fiftieth Congress, when the Senate of the [illegible] by order had this document compiled, showing the memorials which had been presented to that session of Congress. I have read a number of them, but I presume the Senator was not in [illegible]

This is a resolution by the legislature of Massachusetts, signed by all of its officers, both of the senate and the house:

[illegible]

Mr. President, in the same document there is printed a resolution which was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations [illegible] result of all these memorials and [illegible] the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate of this New York committee. It is a resolution which Mr. Sherman, the chairman of the committee, reported as the action [illegible] Foreign Relations Committee in consequence of the appeals which had been made to it and to the Senate:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. Sherman, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported [illegible] to invite international arbitration as to differences [illegible]

Not simply between this nation and Great Britain—

[illegible] may be referred to arbitration, and be peacefully adjusted [illegible]

Before I get through I intend to briefly discuss whether or not [illegible] terms of [illegible] Foreign Relations [illegible] but I pretermit that for the present.

It also sets out two bills which were introduced in that session, each of them by a Senator from the State of Iowa. Under date [illegible] 12, 1887, all in the same session of Congress, Mr. Wilson, of Iowa, introduced the [illegible]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and [illegible] be, and hereby is, authorized to invite the [illegible] of North, Central, and South America, and such other governments as he in his discretion may determine, to send delegates to an [illegible] such time as he may [illegible] upon measures for the promotion [illegible]

A [illegible] which [illegible] to which I shall call [illegible]

[illegible] Mr. Al[illegible] a bill which I [illegible] I should like very much it [illegible] in view of our [illegible] cussions here [illegible] in the bill which he introduced. He [illegible] who simply requested the President. His bill read:

[illegible] the United States be and he [illegible] pacificatory, and amicably settled.

But, Mr. President, while all of these to which I have called attention were in that particular session of Congress—and I have not called attention to all of them, by any means, but only selected some of the most prominent—that was [illegible] Government of the United States and of the people [illegible]

It is a remarkable fact that before the present Government of the United States was ever formed, in a treaty made by the old Confederation with one of the Barbary States—I have forgotten which one it was, [illegible] and semicivilized [illegible] was [illegible] provided for [illegible] relations between us and [illegible] any disputes that might thereafter arise in order that [illegible] war might be avoided. But it is true that the most [illegible] and decided attitude of the United States Government [illegible] subject was not assumed until [illegible] period of the great pacification in [illegible] end of the Napoleonic wars and of the war between this country and Great Britain.

But beginning, if I recollect correctly, with the year 1816 up to the year 1902 there has been an almost unbroken series not simply of utterances in Congress, but actually of resolutions introduced or of acts passed looking to such settlement, and of actual treaty negotiations entered into between the Government of the United States and almost all other governments, either inserting some [illegible] provision for arbitration whenever the necessity for it might [illegible] some [illegible] I [illegible] must be a cause of pride to every American when I state that within that term [illegible] half of all the arbitration treaties [illegible] have been [illegible] by all the nations or all the world have been entered into [illegible] Government of the United States with [illegible] and for the purpose of [illegible] and then [illegible] to the determination of some [illegible]

I am [illegible] to touch along at [illegible] and not [illegible] the whole record to [illegible] I think I am [illegible] if the archives of [illegible] records that are beneath the Dome of this [illegible] there would be found absolutely [illegible] memorials which have come to Congress from the people of the United States [illegible] accomplishment of this great, benign, [illegible]

If there is one thing that is more [illegible] the purpose and desire of the people of the United States than another, it is that; and, sir, it is not limited to that [illegible] which is opposed to war under any and all circumstances, but it pervades [illegible] classes of our people who thus [illegible] war, bloodshed, and violence, and who desire that there should be an appeal to reason and a settlement, if you please, by [illegible] rather than a determination by brute force.

As I have said, I am simply going to skip along and note at different times what have been the utterances of this Government, either by acts or resolutions or by the expressions of the committees of the Houses of Congress and otherwise. Away back in 1851 the resolution which I shall now read was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, and will be found in Senate Report No. 270, Thirty-first Congress, second session. I will read the resolution. There is nothing new in it, but I will read it just to show what has been the uniform manifestation and utterance by the Senate of the United States.

[illegible] judgment of the body it would be proper and desirable for the Government of these United States, wherever practicable, to [illegible] with other nations a [illegible] for referring to the [illegible] a future [illegible] on the first instance before a resort to hostilities shall be had.

In 1887 in the very next Congress, the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations makes a most elaborate report of many pages in advocacy of the same idea. This was in response to peace memorials which had been received by the Senate and committee. Without stopping to read the report, which is [illegible] the evils of war and [illegible] which are enumerated in the subject [illegible] arbitration, the committee say:

[illegible]

And [illegible] I will read how what I may have [illegible] to the subject [illegible] I may have occasion to the Senate [illegible] we now have that the United States can not submit to arbitration any question involving a question of our honor—the committee say:

[illegible]

In 1872 Mr. Sumner from the State of Massachusetts [illegible] with preambles setting [illegible] I will read two of the resolutions. I read from the Journal of the Senate, May 31, 1872:

[illegible] That the United States having at [illegible] of peace everywhere between nations, [illegible] that war may cease to be regarded as a proper form of [illegible]

In 1874 the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate again, [illegible] Mr. Hamlin is member of the committee [illegible] Simon Cameron of Pennsylvania, then being its chairman, responsive to the petitions and memorials which had come to [illegible] in the report from and over the United States [illegible] following resolution:

[illegible] United States having at heart the cause of peace every[illegible]

[illegible] these words, Mr. President, unnumbered resolutions of a [illegible] pending in the House of Representatives, [illegible] made by people from all over the [illegible] States. I have read a [illegible] ns to see [illegible] I [illegible] lowed one, which is a [illegible] from the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, in this language:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

The Senate resolution went to the House of Representatives and was passed by the House on the [illegible] day of April, 1890. So that [illegible] atively a few of which I have [illegible] through committees of [illegible] and in the other House [illegible] there was at last, if not [illegible] concurrent action of the two Houses [illegible] of the United States of the declared policy of the United States at in all cases—and the word "all" is comprehensive and [illegible] of meaning—that in all cases it should be the duty of the people of the United States to adjust by friendly negotiation [illegible] and in the absence of [illegible] such an agreement to submit those differences to the determination of an impartial tribunal.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If the Senator will allow me, if I understand his resolution it [illegible] assumption that the United States did actively lend its aid [illegible] its land and naval powers to accomplish revolution. Is not that so?

Mr. BACON. I desire to say, with all respect to the Senator, that I shall at a future point in my remarks give particular attention to that inquiry. I simply ask now that he may pretermit it until I come to that part. I will not overlook it.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. That is satisfactory.

Mr. BACON. I will only say now, without stopping to discuss [illegible] and asking that the Senator will not require me to do so now—that I do not agree with him as to the proper construction of the resolution; and I will endeavor to show why at the proper time.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. That will be perfectly satisfactory to me. I only wish the Senator to explain fully the scope and meaning of the resolution before he concludes.

Mr. BACON. I shall endeavor to do so.

Mr. President, not only by such action by Congress, but by the utterances of every President of the United States elected since the close of the civil war, there has been the most [illegible] and cordial approval and recommendation and advocacy [illegible] pursuance of that pacificatory policy by the United States, [illegible] the character of the government with which [illegible] reference other than that they shall be [illegible]

The first one to which I call attention is an utterance of President Grant, which I find in this same document from which I [illegible] reading. In the memorial which was presented by the [illegible] committee to the Senate through the Committee on Foreign Relations there is this statement:

[illegible] ded such a course [illegible] after his return [illegible]

That was the statement of the great soldier. This memorial, embraced in this document, goes on to say:

[illegible] Hayes and Garfield did not hesitate to declare their concurrence [illegible]

We all know the distinguished [illegible] guished man from the State of Maine [illegible] accomplish this result, not only with the nations of the world at [illegible] but particularly with the states of Central and South America. It would be very instructive if I could read all of the circular letter of Mr. Blaine of the date of November 29, 1881, in which he set out the attitude of the Government of the United States upon this important question and in which he endeavored to [illegible] a congress of all the Central and South American states together with those of North America, for the purpose [illegible] that in any difficulty [illegible] between this great and powerful and overshadowing nation and the least of them there should be extended the hand of conciliation, that there should be put behind the thought of force and power and war and bloodshed as the result of such differences, and that there should be an effort by conciliatory means to adjust where such differences should arise, and [illegible] could not be had that they would solemnly pledge themselves that such differences should be settled by the determination of a disinterested party and that there should be no appeal to the sword.

I will read some from that famous letter.

I beg to say possibly I am not altogether a good judge [illegible] most eminent [illegible] may be one who was [illegible] a Republican, and, I will add, no less preeminently an American, [illegible] many [illegible] lips of that distinguished man which will more distinguish and properly and rightfully distinguish him, than the [illegible] uttered in this famous circular letter and the great movement [illegible] thereby to inaugurate. If it were not that I felt it would be a [illegible] of it. But I will read only a part. It is a letter addressed to the representatives of the United States in the different [illegible] sought to reach:

For some years past—

I am not reading from the beginning of it; I am reading [illegible] pages of the eighth volume of the Messages and Papers of the Presidents—

[illegible] to by all the American powers as their friend [illegible]

Words to be remembered, I respectfully suggest, when it is not simply a question of friendship and mediation as between two disagreeing Central or South American countries, but when the thing comes closer home to us, and it is a question between this great country and one of those countries, however weak and feeble it may be.

Mr. Arthur was then President, and Mr. Blaine goes on, being then his Secretary of State, as follows:

The just and impartial counsel of the President in such cases has never been withheld, and his efforts have been rewarded by the prevention of sanguinary strife or angry contentions between peoples whom we regard as [illegible]

[illegible] North and South, as [illegible] of our common humanity and the strength of [illegible] together as a great and harmonious system of [illegible]

[illegible] affect the innumerable generations that come after [illegible]

These are the thrice memorable words of James G. Blaine, Secretary of State, when he held aloft in the name of the great American Republic the ensign of peace and asked all the nations of the Western Hemisphere to rally beneath its folds.

Mr. President, I concede that there was but little thought then in the mind of that great man—this great man entitled in the light of those words to be denominated as the great philanthropist—that his words would be read in the Senate of the United States at a time when the question was not one of conflict between two feeble powers of Central or South America, but when it would be a question of difference between this great and all-powerful Government and one of the weakest of the peoples whom he then counseled to the ways of peace.

[illegible] r, can any Senator or any citizen of the United States take to himself for a moment the conclusion that while it was proper for the great Government of the United States thus to intercede and counsel the weak nations of this hemisphere that there should be peace among and between them, and that they should settle their differences by agreement, and if not by agreement then by the determination of some impartial tribunal—can the conclusion be taken, I say, by any Senator or citizen of the United States that while that was a legitimate desire and end to be accomplished, it did not relate to a case where the interests of the United States might come in conflict with the interest of one of those nations, or where there might be a controversy between it and one of the feeblest of those peoples?

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT protempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. QUARLES. I have been very much interested in the discussion of the distinguished Senator. He always illuminates any subject he touches. But I should like to see if we can at this stage of his discussion arrive at something practical.

Mr. BACON. I will endeavor to be practical in my application before I get through. I hope the Senator will allow me to arrive at it by my own course.

Mr. QUARLES. Most assuredly. I would not ask to anticipate any of his discussion, but I was going to ask the learned Senator whether, notwithstanding all he has read and said, he looks upon the question raised by his resolution as belonging to that class of questions which great nations, or small ones either, are in the habit of submitting to arbitration?

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, if he had been in the Senate all of the time he would have heard me say that I intended, as a corollary to the proposition which I am now endeavoring to submit to the Senate, to discuss that very question, and I propose to do so. If I can not succeed in showing that these differences do belong to this class, of course

The rest is all but leather or prunella

Mr. QUARLES. That being so, I will not——

Mr. BACON. I do not object to any interruption, the Senator will understand, but I simply beg that he will allow me to answer his question at the point in my argument where I had designed to give attention to that particular inquiry.

Mr. President, the President of the United States, at that time Mr. Arthur, in his annual message of December, 1882, immediately succeeding the date of the circular letter of Mr. Blaine, used this language:

I am unwilling to dismiss this subject—

He was speaking then of the proposition that there should be convoked a congress of all the Central and South American and North American republics for the purpose of agreeing upon the pacific policy which was advocated by Mr. Blaine in the circular letter, and then he adds this:

I am unwilling to dismiss this subject without assuring you of my support of any measure [illegible] processes of arbitration.

Mr. Harrison, the signally distinguished patriot [illegible] from the State of [illegible] President [illegible] in the chair, in transmitting to the Senate and House of Representatives the letter of the Secretary of State and the reports adopted by the conference of the American republics in the congress which had theretofore had its sessions in Washington uses this language:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, September 3, 1890.

[illegible] and most hopeful [illegible] in the history of the Western Hemisphere.

BENJ. HARRISON.

That was all there was in the message.

Then comes Mr. Cleveland. I said that almost all of the Presidents since the civil war had advocated this policy. I have thus far given the utterances of every President since the civil war, other than Mr. Johnson, who was elected as Vice President during the civil war and then succeeded to the office, but on the part of every President elected since the civil war there has been this most emphatic commendation and advocacy of this policy. I have cited from Grant, Hayes, Garfield, and Harrison, and now come to Mr. Cleveland. In the annual message of Mr. Cleveland, December 4, 1893, he uses this language:

By a concurrent resolution passed by the Senate February 14, 1890, and by the House of Representatives [illegible]

That is the resolution I have already read to the Senate and called attention to the fact that it had been passed by each House—

By a concurrent resolution passed by the Senate February 14, 1890, and by the House of Representatives [illegible] requested to invite from time to time, as the occasions may arise, [illegible] may be referred to arbitration and be peacefully adjusted by [illegible]

That is a quotation from the resolution. The President continues:

April is 1890, the international American conference at Washington by resolution expressed the wish that all controversies between the republics of America [illegible] current resolution above quoted.

That is simply introductory to the utterance I now read. He continues:

[illegible] arbitration.

And again in 1897, January 11, in transmitting to the Senate the proposed treaty of international arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, President Cleveland uses this language, speaking of the proposed treaty:

[illegible] troversies, it is nevertheless confidently believed that the treaty can not fail [illegible] the two countries [illegible] peaceful adjustment as matter of course and in [illegible]

In the initiation of such an important movement—

I omit part of it which does not relate exactly to the point I am after. Further on he says:

The experiment of [illegible] means of settling international questions of right will [illegible] the Republics [illegible] may be expected to be [illegible] Thereafter [illegible] furnished for the spreading appreciation that treaty arbitration is to be felt and taken to heart sooner or later by other nations, and will thus mark the beginning of a new epoch in civilization.

Profoundly impressed as I am, therefore, by the promise of transcendent good which this treaty affords. I do not hesitate to accompany its transmission with an expression of my earnest hope that it may commend itself to the favorable consideration of the Senate.

Mr. President, that brings us down to the utterances of the ever and universally lamented McKinley. I will say that this is not a sole utterance which I am about to read. When Mr. McKinley was a Member of the House he was one of the foremost advocates of [illegible] rather than a resort to war or violence, and, in the nature of peaceful negotiations, to submit all these differences to the determination of an impartial tribunal. [illegible] the great [illegible] of the United States [illegible] each of other [illegible] Here referred in [illegible] relative to the proposed treaty with Great Britain and used the language:

[illegible] the man[illegible] ing feature of our foreign [illegible]

In this statement Mr. McKinley gives affirmation to what I have [illegible] he Senate to-day regarding the [illegible] an by force of arms [illegible]

Mr. President, if Mr. McKinley had been [illegible] he was with the great desire that peaceful [illegible] the means by which differences should be settled, he might have [illegible] He might have [illegible] the Senate because the Senate was the power which [illegible] The treaty should be ratified. But as Mr. McKinley [illegible] content with that [illegible] the people of the United States and to all the [illegible] the world, that he was the apostle and the advocate of this method [illegible]

Mr. President, I have taken a great deal of time in the effort to present [illegible] that is [illegible] the people of the United States [illegible] manner [illegible] and through the [illegible] congress by [illegible] the committees and through [illegible] been and is most [illegible] to the protection [illegible] exception and without [illegible] in order that I may not [illegible] in all proper cases, with any country, great or small, the policy of this country favored this conciliatory action, involved consensus, if you please, and of arbitration in the failure of such effort through [illegible] conciliatory measures. I say I might have stated that [illegible] and gone on, but I desired to put here in [illegible] all or by any means a less [illegible] part of what could be presented here, but enough to show that what Mr. McKinley said in his [illegible] is the truth, that it has been from the [illegible] this Government the well-defined, loudly advocated and persistently pressed policy of the Government and people of the United States that there should be peace between ourselves and other peoples, and that by peaceful means differences between this and other governments should be arranged and settled.

But I presented, in order that emphasis might be given to it, this to bring to the attention of the Senate those various utterances. I want to give emphasis to them in order that I may [illegible] with the more earnestness [illegible] the conclusion [illegible] I will seek to present that, bound as we are by this solemn [illegible] repeated innumerable times, this is an occasion where we can not honorably refuse to abide by the rule which we have laid down, which we have so often recommended, and which we have so uniformly practiced in all cases properly coming within the purview and jurisdiction of such a method [illegible] I shall endeavor hereafter to show whether this particular controversy does or does not come within the class of those that should thus be dealt with. Before proceeding I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in pursuance of all these efforts, of all these utterances, of all these expressions of desire, of all this pledged faith, there was assembled in this city, as the result and under the provisions of an act of the Congress of the United States, a congress of all the Central and South American republics, and also including the Government of Mexico and the Government of the United States.

As a result of that congress there was framed a plan of international arbitration, and that was agreed to by all the representatives of those various governments, and was transmitted by the President of the United States, then Mr. Harrison, to the Congress of the United States. I have already read that, as it is [illegible] mitting the letter of the Secretary of State [illegible] proposed agreement, in which the President so forcibly gave his [illegible] congress:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,

To the Senate and House of Represe[illegible]

[illegible] which [illegible] the Western Hemisphere.

BENJAMIN HARRISON.

I can not read all of that agreement between all the representatives of the various countries, but here are the first two articles:

The delegates from North, C[illegible]

Constituting what Mr. Blaine in his circular letter so happily termed "the great and harmonious system of American commonwealths"—

The delegates from North, Central, and South Ame[illegible] in conference as[illegible]

[illegible] earnest desire in favor of the [illegible]

[illegible] tion of the great moral and material [illegible]

[illegible] endly and cordial meeting in the present [illegible]

[illegible] will of all its inhab[illegible]

The republics of North, C[illegible]

ARTICLE II.

Arbi[illegible]

I call attention to this particularly because it is, in a sense, a reply to the inquiry of the junior Senator from Wisconsin:

Arbitration shall be obligatory in all controversies concerning diplomatic [illegible] mavi[illegible]

It will be noted that in this Congress of all the American republics [illegible] States, there is a distinct recognition [illegible] of all controversies [illegible] of the construction of treaties. This will be spoken to applicable to a subsequent portion of my remarks.

The proposed agreement, or, rather, the proposed treaty which was [illegible] to, goes on making all the provisions necessary for a [illegible] agreement for arbitration providing the machinery, etc., and I only omit reading the whole of it because of my reluctance to take so much time of the Senate and my unwillingness to unduly encumber the RECORD.

I had here, but I have misplaced it—I hope to get it before I conclude—the statement of Mr. Blaine as to his estimate of that very [illegible] that Congress. I desire to state in this connection that there were a number of bills introduced into either House of Congress for the purpose of bringing about this result. One of them was introduced by Mr. McKinley, another one was introduced by the present presiding officer of the Senate, Mr. FRYE, and another one was introduced by our distinguished colleague [illegible], now Senator MCCREARY, but then, like Mr. McKinley, an honored member of the House of Representatives, and, by the way, it was that bill introduced by Mr. MCCREARY which passed. It came to the Senate, some alterations were made, and upon a conference the bill was finally passed, which brought about this happy result.

Now, it is true that that treaty has never been enacted as a treaty. It has never been made the law; but it is nevertheless the truth that it expresses the desire and wishes and professed faith of the American people. It had the sanction of the Congress in the proposal for the legislation which brought it about. It had the sanction of every [illegible] President Harrison, and President McKinley. There can be no question that, so far as the moral, binding force of it is concerned, it thoroughly committed the American people to the proposition that in all cases of difference [illegible] any one of the governments of North, Central, or South Am[illegible] one of the governments of those [illegible] should be peaceful arrangement, and, if necessary, arbitration.

I [illegible] have to read [illegible] its order when I get it, but I will nevertheless read the [illegible] of Mr. Blaine of the scope and im[illegible] work of that convention or [illegible] m, to do away with [illegible] any kind between the governments of North, [illegible] America, and the [illegible] n, and of arbitration in the event of the failure [illegible]

[illegible] ter, under the same authority, by the initia[illegible]

[illegible] ened in the City of Mexico; and w[illegible] an repub[illegible] or, in the report which I have before [illegible] national Con[illegible]

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLAY in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. SPOONER. I am only asking the Senator for information.

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Has the Senator in mind the exceptions to which he referred this morning?

Mr. BACON. I have them right here, and I can read them. I will do so. I wish to read first [illegible]

Mr. SPOONER. At your leisure.

Mr. BACON. I will read it in this connection dire[illegible] but here is a matter I passed over. I did not have before me [illegible] by Mr. Blaine of his [illegible] conference, which assembled in Wa[illegible] Mr. Blaine, then Secretary of State, said of it:

[illegible] has peace [illegible] ndation.

Alluding to the agreement which had just been executed.

Now, I will endeavor to read from The Hague treaty. I have so many papers here that I find it difficult to refer to them readily. Here it is. It is quite a voluminous document and I do not know that I can refer promptly to the particular part concerning which [illegible] from Wisconsin makes inquiry. Does the Senator [illegible] particular saving clause which was made in favor of the United States. Possibly the Senator will take the document while I proceed and call my attention to that particular part of it.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not refer to that. I referred to the New York memorial. There were some qualifications.

Mr. BACON. There were some.

Mr. SPOONER. There were some exc[illegible]

Mr. BACON. Is this what the Senator wished to see [handing [illegible]

Mr. SPOONER. Yes. I did not hear distinctly the qualifications.

Mr. BACON. Now, if the Senator will pardon me. I am coming to a direct discussion of that a little later, and I will then read it, if that will answer his purpose as well.

Mr. SPOONER. I only asked for information. I will look it up.

Mr. BACON. I regard that as quite important, and I intended to use it in a discussion of the question as to whether or not the [illegible] controversy between this country and Colombia—

Mr. SPOONER. Here is what I referred to [indicating].

Mr. BACON. I am glad the Senator calls my attention to it, because that brings me to say what I possibly should have said before.

Mr. SPOONER. That is [illegible] Mr. BACON. I understand [illegible] called to it for this reason. [illegible] ments and [illegible] easily [illegible] policy of agreement by t[illegible] the one as connected [illegible] if, without such [illegible] hey should do so. I [illegible] m be any o[illegible] So I have [illegible] d. [illegible] f that w[illegible] as a precedent to an [illegible] n to [illegible] tion.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, may I interru[illegible]

Mr. BACON. [illegible]

Mr. FAIRBAN[illegible] not understand, if the Senator [illegible] that there is any [illegible] or in the country [illegible]

Mr. BACON. [illegible]

Mr. FAIRBANK[illegible] he material ques[illegible]

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, I have already [illegible] assurance that I [illegible] s that question when I reached [illegible]

Mr. FAIR[illegible] t know whether the Senator was ready to touch upon [illegible]

Mr. BACON. If I [illegible] lation of a predicate to a c[illegible] the fact that all I have said [illegible] s or nothing. Senators on the other side do not realize [illegible] t and are not more alive to it than I am. I recognize [illegible] said if I do not succeed in doing that, then I have failed; but I want to get at it in the proper way.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. SPOONER. Of course, as to everything the Senator has said in favor of international conciliation, no one will dispute that ought to [illegible] nations—peculiarly, perhaps, of this. We will have no [illegible] about it on this side of the Chamber, or I think anywhere [illegible] country; and that means, as the Senator well says, a preliminary effort of conciliation.

Mr. BACON. A pr[illegible] conciliation.

Mr. SPOONER. A p[illegible] at a[illegible] stment without resort to war.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. In other words, arbitration before war.

Mr. BACON. Yes; if conciliatory conferences between the parties fail to accomplish an agreement, which will make arbitration unnecessary.

Mr. SPOONER. That is the general result of The Hague treaty. That is happily the trend of the sentiment in the world at this time. But I suppose the Senator will admit that no government yet, however—

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will let me proceed with that argument. I am coming to that very question.

Mr. SPOONER. However far it may have gone in the way of conciliation and arbitration, no government has ever been willing to submit to foreign arbitrament a question of national honor.

Mr. BACON. I am coming to all those questions.

Mr. SPOONER. Or p[illegible]

Mr. BACON. Well, yes; that, too.

Now, Mr. President, I am coming to what, of course, is the crucial question in the case and [illegible] I have consumed in presenting the evidence of the attitude of the people of this country and its Government for a hundred years has done nothing more than emphasize, as I have stated, what I might [illegible]

At the same time I think it well that there should be presented in this consecutive form somewhat of the history, because I do not want it simply recognized, as it is by all Senators and by the people, that such is the fact. But I want the realization strong, complete, overwhelming, to be in every man's mind and heart that if this is in its nature a proper case for conciliation, if it is a proper case for submission to an impartial tribunal in the event of failure of attempted conciliatory measures then there is no escape from the conclusion that the United States are, through the utterances and pledges and practice of an hundred years, bound by every sentiment of honor and pledged faith to accede it to Colombia in this instance. I say I do not want it simply recognized as an independent assertion but I want such has been the pledge and sentiment, but I want it borne in the heart and [illegible] of every Senator, which should be [illegible] and their government. Neither Congress, nor President, nor [illegible] whatever as to [illegible] and [illegible]. As I have said, I have been [illegible] faith of the [illegible] and of the Government in that regard.

Now, Mr. President, I come to the question: Is this a case where the [illegible] years [illegible] United States and Colombia by [illegible] possible, and if that is impossible [illegible] Are the differences which [illegible] their peaceful settlement either by negotiation [illegible]

Before I [illegible] I want to answer the question which my [illegible] whether or not it [illegible] I would [illegible] have been [illegible] not. An [illegible] of the words of the resolution [illegible] there is no assumption of any liability on the part of the United States. The [illegible] which should be [illegible] by argument.

I will again say to the Senator, however, what I said to the Senate when I [illegible] upon this [illegible] some consideration. The age and [illegible] of which I have been [illegible] by a personal [illegible] that I am not the intention of the resolution, that I am not wedded to the phraseology, and that I am perfectly content that there should be taken out of the resolution anything which could be properly construed to assume that [illegible] I am willing that there should be [illegible] in the resolution language which should [illegible] as was done by Great Britain in the Washington treaty. I [illegible] can not go further than that.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Would the Senator so far modify it as to exclude the consideration of political questions?

Mr. BACON. Yes; so far as the submission of that class to arbitration. I am content with anything which shall commit the Government of the United States in the face of the world to the proposition that, whatever there may be of difference between the United States and Colombia, the United States, as a great overshadowing power which can not be compelled by this feeble power to do anything will voluntarily endeavor to agree with it in the settlement of existing differences and that it will not come to an agreement by peaceful negotiation [illegible] its great and resistless power, but that it will endeavor to have a determination of such differences and the claims growing out thereof by some impartial tribunal.

Now in further answer to the question of the Senator from Indiana I again call his attention to the fact that this resolution contains two propositions—first, that there shall be an effort by negotiation directly between the parties to accomplish by agreement a peaceful settlement; and second, if an agreement can not thus be accomplished that the question of difference in the case shall be submitted to some impartial tribunal for a peaceful settlement. Now it will be conceded that there are some classes of questions so closely affecting a nation that it would be unwilling to leave their determination to the judgment and will of any third party. But it must also be conceded that there should be no kind of difference that a nation would not be willing to itself endeavor to settle by agreement with the other nation. So all most recognize this as a correct proposition, that whatever and what is the cause of difference, whether it relates to the honor of a country or to its internal policy or to anything else, there is no impropriety in the effort by negotiation to agree with the adversary, even though they may be questions which should not be submitted to the arbitration and determination of a third party. In the case of the direct negotiation between the parties there could be no conclusion which was not satisfactory to each party and agreed to by each party. There is no possible escape. So that if I should accede to the suggestion of the Senator from Indiana and have incorporated in this resolution words which would exclude the particular class of questions which he suggests, that exclusion ought not to relate to that part of the resolution which seeks to adjust such differences by negotiation between the parties. That exclusion in such case ought only to extend to the part of the resolution which proposes to submit any questions of difference to arbitration or a third party or tribunal.

And thus it is perfectly apparent that the character of the questions which may be involved can not be urged as an objection to that part of the pending resolution which advises negotiation between the United States and Colombia for the purpose of securing an agreement between them and a peaceful settlement [illegible] to base their objections.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If the Senator will allow me

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. It appears by the note of the Secretary of State to General Reyes of the 5th instant

Mr. BACON. I am coming to the discussion of that, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Indicates that the questions they proposed for submission to The Hague tribunal were political in their nature.

Mr. BACON. I am [illegible] but I hope the [illegible] will keep [illegible] I have just [illegible] while the [illegible] not honorably talk [illegible] about [illegible]

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator [illegible] question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Not for debate.

Mr. BACON. I am willing to yield to the Senator.

Mr. SPOONER. While the Senator is expressing his willingness to accept a modification of the language of the resolution—

Mr. BACON. Anything which preserves the principle of arbitration or conciliation [illegible]

Mr. SPOONER. I want to ask him if he would not be willing to strike out all after the word "[illegible]d" in the [illegible]

Mr. BACON. No.

Mr. SPOONER. And insert: "The approval of the Senate or of Congress, to the tender by the Secretary of State or by the President to Colombia of the good offices of the United States to [illegible] and the Republic of Colombia, to the end that good fellow[illegible]

Mr. BACON. I will come later to a discussion of that particular [illegible]

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator is not willing to accept that amendment?

Mr. BACON. I will come to a discussion of that particular amendment before I get through, but I prefer to do it in a regular way, and if I fail to remember it, I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will call my attention to it.

Mr. SPOONER. I had no thought of discussion, but only asked the Senator a question.

Mr. BACON. Yes; but if I do not answer the question [illegible] I get through I hope the Senator will do me the kindness [illegible] my attention to it, because, if I fail to do so, it will be through inadvertence. I am coming to that question [illegible] this. I am [illegible] in the case: Whether, in view of their [illegible] numbered assertions, their league and covenant [illegible] ditions do not make such a case as calls upon the United States for an attempted agreement for the settlement of any difference between the United States and Colombia, and whether, in effort at agreement [illegible] their unnumbered [illegible] States an agreement for the settlement of these differences by arbitration.

Mr. President, before proceeding with that discussion and adverting to the phraseology of the resolution [illegible] I wish to make a [illegible] that this resolution is susceptible of the construction which the Senator put upon it, to wit, that it assumes liability on the part of the United States Government. I am willing that the language to that extent shall be changed. Not only so, but I am willing that any presumption on the part of the United States Government shall be expressly negatived, just as it was in the case of the Washington treaty at the time when Great Britain entered into a treaty with the United States Government in 1871 or 1872 for submission to a tribunal at Geneva for the adjudication of claims of the latter against the former. There was an express denial by Great Britain of any recognition of liability, and there is no impropriety in the insertion of such words here if desired. There would certainly then be no possibility of the construction to which the honorable Senator from Indiana thinks the resolution is open.

I do not, however, wish to be misunderstood relative to this matter. I think the resolution is all right as it stands and that it is not legitimately subject to the criticism made upon it. Never[illegible] willing to the change suggested if that will secure the support of Senators on the other side. If, however, such change will not secure the support of Senators, I prefer that the resolution shall stand as it now is.

I come now to the question as to what is the nature of the difference between the United States and Colombia for the purpose of [illegible] whether or not such difference is of a kind that this [illegible] in the first place [illegible] as a difference on [illegible] not for the purpose of arbitration, but for the purpose of agreement with Colombia.

And first I submit the proposition as a sound one, that it matters not what the difference may be or what their nature may be, these differences can be legitimately the subject-matter of concurrent negotiations between the parties with a view to agreement, because that such negotiations do not submit the determination of any question to a third party, which the Government might not be willing to have anybody else decide for it. It keeps that decision to itself when it does not provide for arbitration by a third party as to those particular questions.

[illegible] the Government says, "I will treat with you, I will confer with you, I will negotiate with you as to this, that, or the other question," the Government reserves to itself the power to agree or not to agree to any proposition which the other side may make. Consequently there is no danger that its honor may be in the keeping of somebody else and that a question affecting its honor may be decided by somebody else.

When it comes to the question of submission to arbitration, then the case presented is different, and it is important to see whether or not the difference and the claim based thereon are of the class which can properly be submitted by the Government to the determination of some other party.

Mr. President, when this question was before the Senate for discussion upon a former occasion, we had had no communication which indicated what was the character of the claim made by Colombia and what was the character of the issue which the United States Government made upon those claims. We were limited in that consideration to a supply to the information which we gathered from the public press and from the utterances of parties in an unofficial way by which the public could gather conclusions as to what were the distinct matters in controversy. We knew the fact that Colombia had a representative here; we knew the fact that that representative was in conference with the Secretary of State; and we had the general information that propositions and counter propositions or presentation of claims on the one hand and a denial of the justice and correctness of those claims on the other hand were passing between the parties; but what they were we then did not have the specific information concerning.

Since that time the President of the United States has sent a message, in which he has communicated to Congress the distinct demand made by the representative of Colombia and the distinct reply of the representative of this Government, the Secretary of State. So that we do now know what the controversy is and what the issues are. Senators on the other side, at the time the matter was heretofore before the Senate, said that they did not know—I certainly did not—what was the character of the demands which were made; but we do know now. Here, in the communication sent to us by the President, is a long letter, in the first place, from the Colombian special minister (General Reyes) to Mr. Hay, which I will not stop to read in full; but on page 25 there is a distinct [illegible] by General Reyes of the grounds of complaint against the United States [illegible] of the demands which he makes in consequence thereof. In the letter from General Reyes to Mr. Hay of January 6 he uses the language which I am about to read.

While I may be my personal opinion, I beg the Senate, before I [illegible] the language, to bear in mind that I am in no manner in this presentation asserting that any single thing that General Reyes says is correct or that any single proposition he makes is [illegible]. I am simply trying to show what the controversy is, so that whatever may be the personal views of any Senator relative to the merits of the controversy he may still recognize the propriety of providing a means for the peaceful settlement of that controversy. I read it simply as his assumption, without, for the purpose of this argument, any recognition whatever of the correctness of any fact stated or any conclusion drawn; and then I propose to read the issue made thereon by Mr. Hay in his reply; and those two things join the issue. Then the question is presented whether that issue is of a character which could, in the first place, be properly dealt with by friendly negotiation without any reference to arbitration, and, in the second place, whether or not, in the absence of an agreement, it furnishes a legitimate subject-matter for arbitration under the recognized policy of this Government in that regard.

I will not read all of General Reyes's contentions nor all of the claims he makes, but simply the [illegible] the United States. He says [illegible]

Mr. SECRETARY: I have received the note which your excellency did me the [illegible] let [illegible] that [illegible] territory.

There is the distinct statement of the claim and the grounds upon which it is based.

[illegible]

Then, on page 26, he says:

Ninth. That on the grounds above stated the Government of Colombia [illegible] the claim made, and that is on the one side. Now, Mr. Hay joins issue with General Reyes, and makes the statement which is found on pages 23 and 24 of the same document. It is true that Mr. Hay's contention is stated in a letter written prior to that time, but it is made by Secretary Hay in response to a letter previously written to him by General Reyes, in which practically the same contention was made, so that the issue is joined in that way. I only read from the subsequent letter of General Reyes to Mr. Hay, because he therein more concisely states the proposition than he did in the previous letter. Here is the contention of the United States on those issues:

By [illegible] emergency the powers of the [illegible] Panama the United States [illegible] and subject to the obligations of the [illegible]

Mr. FAIRBANKS rose.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will pardon me. I think I can anticipate what he wants to ask. He will let me state it before he asks anything in regard to it, if he pleases.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I will not interrupt the Senator if he is going to answer the question.

Mr. BACON. I will answer straight away. If I do not, I hope the Senator will interrupt me.

Now, if we assume for the purposes of this argument that every word that the Secretary of State says is true and that every word and conclusion drawn is correct, and if, on the other hand, we assume for the purposes of the argument that every word that the Colombian minister says is untrue and that every conclusion that he draws is unwarranted, nevertheless these conflicting claims and contentions make the issue. As to what the issue is, in part, I apprehend that the question the Senator was about to ask me is this. Whether or not the question of the right of our Government to [illegible]

Mr. FAIRBANKS. [illegible]

Mr. BACON. [illegible] I must unhesitatingly say [illegible]

Mr. SPOONER. [illegible]

Mr. BACON. [illegible] I do not think that.

Mr. SPOONER. [illegible] answer that question I wish to [illegible]

Mr. BACON. [illegible] I am saying that I am trying to evade the question.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not think that.

Mr. BACON. [illegible] The Colombian Government, through General Reyes, says that the United States, by use of their power of suppression and by the use of their armed forces, prevented Colombia from using her forces to suppress the rebellion in Panama, and that in the exercise of such intervention on the part of the United States and the protection thus given to the Panama revolution the rebellion would have been speedily suppressed, and that, in fact, it would never have taken place, and that by reason of the action by the United States in aiding and protecting the revolutionists in Panama the Colombian Government has been hampered in the [illegible] of the United States of the [illegible] and says that the United States are responsible for the dismemberment of her territory in Panama.

The Secretary of State in his reply declares that the United States prevented the sovereignty of the Republic of Panama [illegible] against Colombia by armed force, and justifies the action under the treaty of 1846 with Colombia, or New Granada, which is the same thing. The contention of the Secretary is that whereas in the treaty of 1846 the United States guaranteed the rights of sovereignty and property of Colombia in the Isthmus of Panama, as soon as Panama revolted and her independence was established and the rights of Colombia under the treaty passed to Panama and that on the instant the United States became obligated by the treaty to protect the sovereignty of Panama against Colombia, even as against Colombia, with whom the treaty was originally made, that therefore the United States were justified in protecting the revolutionary government in Panama and in preventing by armed force Colombia from using her forces in suppressing the rebellion.

The clause in the treaty of 1846 upon which the Secretary of State bases this contention is found in the thirty-fifth article, and is as follows:

[illegible] the United States also guarantee, in the same manner, [illegible] New Granada (Colombia) has [illegible]

[illegible] that clause of the treaty of 1846 the Secretary contends [illegible] it up. The [illegible] made by him to this effect in the [illegible]

[illegible] became entitled to the rights and subject to the obligations of the [illegible]

From this [illegible] the United [illegible] irritation and hostile feelings which have been caused [illegible] n the [illegible] that the United [illegible] The Secretary of State ad[illegible]

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Admits what:

Mr. [illegible] Senator from Wis[illegible] of the [illegible] whether [illegible] n, for [illegible] ut, if [illegible] I do not know where to find the basis [illegible]

Mr. PR[illegible] States makes no [illegible] nt in question [illegible] h is not based [illegible] 846. The whole [illegible] of the question of the [illegible] action [illegible] ty. The message of the President [illegible] which bases the action of the Government of the United States upon the construction of that treaty; [illegible] of the construction of that treaty; every argument which [illegible] or disputes the propriety of the action which has been based on the question of the construction of that treaty, [illegible] of a treaty is of all questions [illegible] of adjudication and [illegible] ment either by agreement of the parties or by arbitration where [illegible] can be possible.

But in order that there may be no mistake about this matter [illegible]

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question? for I want to get at his position.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to [illegible]

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. What is the real dispute?

Mr. BACON. I am sorry the Senator was not in the Chamber [illegible]

Mr. SPOONER. I am always sorry if I am out of the Chamber when the Senator is addressing the Senate. The Senator knows we can not be here all [illegible]

Mr. BACON. I understand [illegible]

Mr. SPOONER. I should like, in a word, if the Senator will [illegible] the precise basis of his observation that all that is in dispute here involves the construction of a treaty.

Mr. BACON. I have just stated it. I will state to the Senator—he has this document before him, and I do not want to read it over again.

Mr. SPOONER. But the Senator can state to me his contention.

Mr. BACON. I am endeavoring to do it.

Mr. SPOONER. I know that Secretary Hay contends that article 35 of the treaty of 1846, in its obligations as well as in its grant, upon the independence of the Republic of Panama, being a local obligation, became transferred to the Republic of Panama.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. And it is claimed, and I think correctly, that the corollary of that is that our corresponding correlative obligations that once had run to the Republic of Colombia were transferred to the Republic of Panama. Now, is it that dispute on that question which the Senator proposes to submit to some for[illegible]

Mr. BACON. Not necessarily, if it can be arranged through friendly and conciliatory negotiations between the two Governments [illegible]

Mr. SPOONER. I want to remind the Senator, if that be true, that there are three parties now, if Colombia be one, interested in the subject—the United States, the Republic of Panama, and Colombia.

I should like, if I can, to get at precisely what the Senator proposes.

Mr. BACON. The Senator would get at it very much more [illegible] if he would let me proceed.

Mr. SPOONER. I think that is true.

Mr. BACON. I [illegible] my proposition [illegible] is a dispute [illegible] is a controversy between the United States [illegible] and that even if for the purposes of [illegible] and basis for the claim [illegible] it is nevertheless a controversy, and the fact is plain that controversy grows out of the construction of the treaty [illegible]

Mr. [illegible]. If that is to become the rule, it will any day [illegible] in the power of any government with which we have a treaty to force us into a position where we must submit the interpretation [illegible] to arbitration. If the mere fact of the [illegible] party asserts it, however silly it may be, and the other denies it, and then this great principle of conciliation requires the submission of it to arbitration, I do not know what would become of treaties.

Mr. BACON. While I do not wish to discuss the merits of the controversy, I scarcely think that the denial of the remarkable contention of the Secretary of State will be pronounced to be "silly." Without discussing that, I simply repeat the proposition which I think the Senator will find it very difficult to controvert—that an authority, that a controversy which grows out of a dispute as to the construction of a treaty and [illegible] that treaty are recognized as proper matters of negotiation [illegible] tion. Now, if the Senator can produce any authority contrary to this, I should be very glad to see it. But I was about to say when the Senator interrupted me——

Mr. SPOONER. [illegible]

Mr. BACON. The Senator need not beg my pardon, because he is always at liberty to interrupt me, and he knows it. I only desire, in the interest of time, when I am trying to elucidate a certain point, that the Senator will let me proceed to do it, and if I [illegible] I shall be more than h[illegible]

[illegible] sion to arbitration is not the first or the main [illegible] the resolution. It is the secondary question and the minor consideration. The main proposition and the one of [illegible] will in a conciliatory spirit en[illegible]

So, Mr. President, all I have said in reference to the [illegible] of this [illegible] people and Government [illegible] is with the view of the resolution [illegible] the full [illegible] with which the Senator [illegible] that every word said in [illegible] in the way, if Senators are willing to say they are ready to [illegible] a resolution [illegible] I had was to manifest a proper [illegible] e: "While [illegible] know it we do not [illegible] even to talk to you [illegible] your complaint. [illegible] cussion was [illegible] waxed impatient at the [illegible] that the United States should even entertain or consider the proposition to treat with Colombia. They scoffed at and spurned it. The great and all powerful United States were not even [illegible] the matter with this weak and feeble nation. That is what I object to.

It is [illegible]
To have a giant's strength; but it is tyrannous
To use it like a giant.

Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] asks me to read the closing part of the memorial presented to the Senate in 1888 by David Dudley Field and others of the committee from New York, in which there was a [illegible] which properly would be included in a treaty [illegible] for a court of a [illegible] I now read, for the purpose of my argument, and also in response to the request of the Senator previously made, as follows:

[illegible]

That is the first [illegible]

[illegible] contracting parties [illegible]

That is the first thing, and that is what we want in this case—[illegible] affairs, or its continental policy.

It will be noted that the very first dispute mentioned as furnishing property a subject-matter for negotiation is any difference arising" respecting the interpretation of any treaty." It is really difficult to argue concerning a proposition so self-evident as that of difference respecting the interpretation of a treaty. If such a difference is to be excluded, what possible subject of a serious nature between nations could be included? As reflective of American sentiment, I read to the Senate two editorial utterances of recent date which have appeared in prominent newspapers.

The first is from the Courier-Journal, as follows:

[illegible] then, under the terms of the [illegible] paying for it by guaranteeing Panama's promises to pay [illegible]

The second is from the Independent, which while [illegible] of the [illegible] by the United States in [illegible] advocates arbitration of the differences with Colombia growing out of such action. The editorial is as follows:

Senator BACON has offered a resolution in the Senate proposing to refer [illegible] there is a sharp difference [illegible]

We [illegible] that is not included by the [illegible] treaty: they claim no right against us except as they claim a violation of that treaty; and, so far as the books can show, I do not think the members of the Senate from Wisconsin or any other Senator [illegible] controverts the proposition that so far as a dispute [illegible] a treaty is concerned it is a proper subject-matter of arbitration; but, whether a proper subject-matter of arbitration or not, it is in the language of this memorial a proper subject-matter for "conciliatory negotiation."

If Senators desire to meet this proposition upon grounds that they can approve. I am perfectly willing that this resolution shall [illegible] to the matter of conciliatory negotiations [illegible] between the parties. [illegible] would in any manner [illegible] would be in [illegible] with a view to the [illegible] of Panama.

The Senator from Wisconsin has asked me a question, to which I will give a [illegible] not I would be willing that the resolution should [illegible] that this Government would [illegible] Colombia and Panama. I have two things [illegible] I would not [illegible] Colombia and the United States [illegible] recognize the fact that [illegible] which, even if we deny its [illegible] to settle and [illegible] The suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin would not in any manner cover that phase of the case.

A [illegible] which I desire to say in all respect to the Senator, is this: If a guardian had an infant in his arms and there was a controversy between that guardian and a [illegible] proposed to settle property interest of that person the guardian might as well say: "I will exercise my good offices to arrange amicably the differences between this baby in my arms and myself." We agree, Mr. President, that so far as Panama is concerned she is there simply to do what we say about this whole matter.

We know another thing, that if this is an accomplished revolution Colombia has no claim against Panama. There might be some question about paying the preexisting debt or something of that sort, but when a country achieves its independence and its independence is an accomplished fact, the country from which it has been wrested has no claim against the country which thus achieves its independence.

What is the claim that Colombia has against Panama? None whatever except the claim of a right to sovereignty over it. Is that a matter for negotiation? Is that a matter for settlement? There is [illegible] in whatever else the balance of the world has done, denying that its sovereignty has been rightfully wrested from it. If its sovereignty is not true, if its sovereignty has been wrested from it, then Colombia has no claim against Panama which Panama can for a moment consider. To consider it would be to admit that her independence had not been achieved.

Did the Government of Great Britain have any claim against the American colonies when they achieved their independence? What they had won by the sword left no obligation from them to the Government from which they had won it. If Panama independence has been achieved, it is idle to talk about the claim of Colombia against Panama. Are we here to waste words?

Colombia contends that she has been aggrieved and damaged by the United States and under the suggestion of the honorable Senator from Wisconsin we are to answer that contention by saying to her, "We will try to settle the difference between you and Panama and make Panama comply with her obligations that she has to pay," as we know, when every man in the Senate, who is necessarily familiar with international law to that effect, knows that when Panama has achieved her independence there is no obligation left on the part of Panama to Colombia. And yet we are to answer her contention as to whether or not there is a grievance on the part of Colombia against the United States by saying to her in that snarky way, "We will try to see that whatever Panama owes you is paid," or words to that effect, when we know it does not owe her anything.

Nobody disputes the right of the Senate to address this communication to the President if it is a proper subject-matter, if the circumstances warrant it. It is the general practice of precedents that it is proper for the Senate to advise the President in advance of what it conceives to be a proper subject-matter for a treaty.

Senators remembered on the 16th of January, the day when this resolution was presented and debated in the Senate, that it was important to suggest that there should be any negotiations. That, at least, was the opinion on the 16th. It was upon the very point of either this resolution was thus presented and debated, the long, wordy letter of the Secretary himself, as is shown by this communication which has been sent here by the President, did suggest negotiations. On page 2 of this document is the statement by Mr. Hay that he is willing to the following:

First, the question of a foreign nation whether the people of the Isthmus of Panama or the Republic of Colombia [illegible]

Second, the claim to a special share in a transaction consummated by them, claimed by Panama to be a violation of treaties between Panama and Colombia, and [illegible] against the United States as a violation of faith preceding and following the declaration of independence of Panama.

I think those submissions would be entirely ineffectual—I mean they would not satisfy the people; and at the same time it is a step in the direction of negotiations with Panama. If the resolution of this resolution on the 16th and the debate in the Senate on that day contributed the Secretary of State to the step, as much as that action fell short of the requirements of the resolution, the resolution has powerfully contributed to bring in the initiation of negotiations between the United States and Panama.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The offices were to be extended in order to bring about proper relations between Panama and Colombia.

Mr. BACON. Yes, I understand. But it is evident that Panama is only used as a buffer in a transaction to which she is not a party.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The Secretary says:

[illegible] and as I have frequently [illegible] of [illegible] and that—Panama.

Mr. BACON. I understand that, and he also suggested that the United States would be willing to submit to a court of arbitration the [illegible] Panama, which, as I have [illegible] ator from Wisconsin, would [illegible] It looks [illegible] much like the case [illegible] of a guardian with a baby in his arms [illegible] to settle differences [illegible] boy. The [illegible] proceed [illegible] of the Secretary to treat the United States [illegible] Panama, but prefer to do it in the name of Panama [illegible] nobler method—that one, or the open, frank method of negotiating directly with Colombia and coming to an agreement with her without [illegible] Panama.

But I want to call the attention of Senators to the statement of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] yesterday, made in this Chamber. In speaking about this very question of the relations between Colombia and the United States, the Senator said this:

And not upon negotiations—

Speaking about the question of information to be had from the State Department or from the President—

And not upon negotiations of a difficult and delicate character, perhaps, which are now going on between some of these governments in regard to matters which have grown up since the treaty was negotiated.

Mr. BACON. Page 1308.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Senator from Rhode Island is absent from the Chamber. If he were here, I do not think he would admit that he stated upon his knowledge that negotiations were now pending.

Mr. BACON. No; he said "perhaps."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. BACON. He said "perhaps." I have read his language.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It was by way of illustration, as I understood it.

Mr. BACON. Of course those of us who are not on the inner circle have not definite information, and it is to be [illegible] we are now told by some who are on the inner circle that [illegible] not mean what we understood him to mean.

I repeat what I said upon a former occasion—that I recognize as a concluded fact the revolution in Panama, and that [illegible] going to be undone. I want to add to that another fact which I recognize as an undoubted one, and that is that there is to be no more controversy as to where the canal is to be dug. I recognize that it is going to be built at Panama.

These are two recognized facts, to my mind, and out of them there grows to me this conclusion. [illegible] ernment of the United States now than to remove [illegible] of friction or of ill feeling there may be between the Government of the United States and the Government of Colombia; and I think that being an accomplished fact the Government of Colombia has a possible opportunity in the future to be recompensed for whatever it may claim to have suffered by any restoration of this territory, the only possibility being that she may be recompensed in some other way. I am strongly of the opinion that the very best investment we could make in connection with this matter would be a liberal concession to that country which would remove the present feeling of hostility and make those people our friends in the future.

There is one feature of this controversy about which there can be a conciliatory negotiation without compromising any honor or any suggestion of it, and that is this: There is no question about the fact that Colombia denies the loss of her sovereignty in Panama; that she denies the independence of that country. In other words, she still claims it as a part of her territory, and will [illegible] authority if she can ever do so.

We say that the land on which Panama to her independence is complete; but nevertheless there is the claim of Colombia. Out of which controversy will grow and future difficulties grow. Is there any disinclination in our negotiating with Colombia that she shall make a quitclaim to that title? I would be willing to pay [illegible] taxes as much as I think her [illegible] if you please, if thereby peace is [illegible] between Colombia and the United States.

It matters not that it may be, as suggested by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] the other day, that there is no danger of [illegible] war.

If there [illegible] between that country and this [illegible] to a [illegible] tory or guerrilla warfare, if no other. We are [illegible] put into a position where we must maintain [illegible] there. We are necessarily put in a position where [illegible] war we will have [illegible] property against the predatory bands of an unfriendly [illegible] protect those who are there engaged either in the construction of the canal or its operation, and what that will cost [illegible] high a dozen times the amount of money that we would pay to that country and thereby get friendly relations between us. And, sir, this condition of hostility with the Colombian people will not only cost us treasure; it will during long-continued years cost us the lives of our soldiers, officers, and men—lives compared with the value of which the money necessary to make these people our friends is as dust in the balance.

[illegible] suggestion. I have no doubt that the time is coming—in what way or when, I do not know—when the United States Government is going to secure the possession of that Isthmus and own it. When that comes I do not wish that Colombia shall have this unsettled claim with which to harass us. If we are to construct the canal successfully and without undue cost and sacrifice, it is necessary that we should have their friendship and cooperation, and the only way to have their friendship is to agree with them, by the way, before it is too late. We should, as his constitutional advisers, say to the President: "We advise that there shall be such conciliatory negotiations between this country and Colombia as will bring about, as soon as practicable, a friendly condition of affairs."

Mr. President, another thing. Does any man doubt that even if that country is—

Mr. SPOONER. That is a very different thing from your resolution.

Mr. BACON. No; it is not. The first part of the resolution refers exclusively to negotiations looking to an agreement between the two nations and will include all kinds and subjects of friendly and conciliatory negotiations.

Mr. SPOONER. But, Mr. President, if I may take just a moment, the first part of the resolution refers to the negotiation of a [illegible] I never heard before of the Senate advising the President to [illegible] a treaty for ratification by the Senate unless the [illegible] on that there was some substantial and honest [illegible] we became equitably indebted or beholden to the other government.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, exactly the opposite of that was the case on the part of Great Britain in the [illegible] treaty. The United States claimed that the Government of Great Britain was indebted to citizens of the United States [illegible] the fact that the Government of Great Britain had not restrained war [illegible] deliberate government from departing from their ports [illegible] of their neglect on the part of Great Britain those [illegible] I proved upon the com[illegible] before the British Government was under liability and obligation to make good the losses.

Now, when it came to the negotiation of that treaty the British Government, while it [illegible] for an [illegible] expressly [illegible] it did not [illegible] that was [illegible] that is a case [illegible] in point, and the suggestion of the honorable Senator and fully [illegible]

It is entirely [illegible] if there is a controversy between two [illegible] and disavows any [illegible] "I [illegible] of this controversy, [illegible] we will [illegible] with a [illegible] looking to the determination and settlement in some way, either by conciliatory negotiation or by arbitration." In every case the controversy is due to the fact that one party makes a claim which is denied by the other party. That makes the issue, and it is the existence of that issue which calls for adjudication by arbitration. So the Senator, I think, is entirely wrong in that conception.

Another thought not unworthy of our consideration, Mr. President, is that even if Colombia is too feeble to go to war with us, even if she recognizes her feebleness to the extent that she makes no declaration of war and attempts to wage no war, the very fact that she permits the accomplishment of the revolution in Panama without an attempt to prevent it will certainly throw that country into the throes of civil war.

Mr. President, in view of all our professions concerning our care and regard for the American republics, are we under no moral obligation, in the presence of such a situation as that? Are we under no moral obligation even to treat with a country with a view to arriving at an agreement which will soothe their wounded and angry pride and which will prevent these internal commotions among her people?

I confess, sir, that there was pity stirred within me when I read the extract from the letter of General Reyes to Secretary Hay of [illegible] which is found on page 2 of the communication sent in to us by the President of the United States. It is as follows:

[illegible] tions of respect for right, especially the right of the weak—to deliver [illegible]

Then another thing, Mr. President, we have American citizens in that country who own property, and they are jeopardized by this condition.

I have a letter now from a citizen in my own town, whose brother resides in Colombia. This brother, whose business and property are in the interior of that country, has gone to Cartagena because he is afraid to stay in the interior. He writes to his brother that he fears and apprehends the loss of all his property on account of the unfriendly nature of the feelings of the people of that country to the people of the United States, growing out of this proposition. This is doubtless only one of many similar instances.

I am, sir, willing for one, and I believe the American people are willing, that we should deal liberally with the Colombians, because, I repeat, what are a few paltry millions to this great Government compared with the great advantage to this Government of making a friendly, satisfactory arrangement with that people?

I have heard it said—I do not know whether truly or not, I do not pretend to say now that it is true, but it is repeated around—that the Government of Colombia has proposed to the United States that it will be entirely satisfied, that it will produce a restoration of good feeling, that it will surrender all claims on Panama and on the canal if this Government will donate $10,000,000 to the building of a railroad from a point on that canal to the city of Bogota.

I do not know whether there is a particle of foundation in that report, but if there is I do not think there is anything which this Government could do which would be more to the interest of the Government in connection with that enterprise than to do it, for two reasons.

In the first place, it would bring about that condition of friendly feeling which is so important, and, in the second place, it would [illegible] to the value of the canal when constructed to have such a railroad leading into a country filled with minerals and especially abounding in the coal which will be needed by the ships traversing the canal.

Mr. President, why should we hesitate or delay in inaugurating these negotiations for a settlement so consistent with justice and with our possessions of a canal so important to our future interests? Delay is fruitful of evil. Each day adds to the ill feeling of the Colombians. The seeds of bitter prejudice and hate, when they once germinate in a national soil, are most difficult of eradication.

Do we think because the great United States are too proud, too [illegible] to a [illegible] power to cope with it? I am sure, sir, that this is not the wish of the American people, but that, on the contrary, it is their wish that [illegible] be made and that whatever is due to Colombia from us [illegible] in liberal measure.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I do not rise to make a speech in reply to the Senator from Georgia, but simply to suggest that if it is to be the announced policy of the United States that whenever another country makes a claim against us, or whenever there is a controversy between us and another country, in which we do not acknowledge the ground of the claim or that we have done any wrong, we are to buy our peace at the rate of $10,000,000 or more, we shall have plenty of claims made against the country and plenty of controversies on our hands.

Mr. CULLOM. Are there any in sight? I should like to have the Senator state whether he knows of any movement already in prospect or contemplated.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. We shall hear from them. If, admitting that we have done no wrong to Colombia, we buy our peace of her for the sum of $10,000,000 we shall hear of claims, and hear of them from all the Colombias. If, when we have done no wrong, and of which we do not for a moment admit the justice of the claim, we put ourselves in the position of saying we will pay for the same property three, four, and five times, I do not know where we will be left in our relations with Europe and South America, and with the world, and with our own consciences. This Republic has never in any instance made a policy of buying our peace whenever any other nation possibly has to make a claim against us.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 29, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

[illegible] children that truth and righteousness and good will [illegible] where, in and through the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

CORRECTIONS.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker, on January 21 I introduced a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. [illegible] it. This morning I [illegible] the New York Sun, in which, among [illegible] "Mr. THAYER [illegible] responsibility for his resolution and does not label it 'by request.'"

I [illegible] to write a letter to the New York Sun, [illegible] "Mr. THAYER [illegible], and it did not say upon it that it was introduced by request." When I came to the House and found the resolution already printed and that it was in keeping with the [illegible] the New York Sun in its editorial that it was not done [illegible].

When the resolution was [illegible] to me I went to the [illegible] and [illegible] sitting here [illegible] I did not [illegible] that it was [illegible] by request that relieved [illegible] in introducing [illegible] Now, Mr. Speaker, [illegible] to [illegible] as well as [illegible] in the resolution. I ask that the resolutions as printed may be suppressed and that others may be printed in their stead in accordance with the fact and in accordance with the records of the House. This is apparently a mistake of the printer and not of those who keep the records in the House, as the books here show that the resolution was introduced by request.

The SPEAKER. The Journal seems to be correct. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. THAYER. That the resolutions already printed be suppressed and that others be printed in their stead, containing a [illegible] of the fact.

Mr. PAYNE. Did the gentleman write the words on the back of the resolution that it was introduced by request?

Mr. THAYER. I did; and I hold the original resolution in my hand with those words indorsed thereon.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the printed bills in existence will be suppressed, so far as it relates to the House document room, and a new print will be ordered in accordance with the gentleman's suggestion. The Chair hears no objection.

The Journal was then approved.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the urgent deficiency bill.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. TAWNEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 16504, the urgent deficiency appropriation bill. General debate having been exhausted, the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

[illegible]

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order against the last item.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. That it is now legislation and has no authority by act of Congress and has never been authorized by Congress. I make the point of order with the full expectation that it will be overruled, and, if it is, I do not care to take the time of the House in discussing it. I will ask the gentleman from Indiana, in charge of the bill, if he does not recognize that it is not part of the law of a well-taken.

Mr. HEMENWAY. No; Mr. Chairman, I insist that it is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state that [illegible] Congress is not [illegible] year. I [illegible] of the Chairman to [illegible] by the chairmen of committees in this House that such an item in an appropriation bill in one year does not constitute an [illegible] of the Chairman especially to pass upon it [illegible] an object in an annual appropriation [illegible] does not become "existing law" to justify a continuing [illegible]

[illegible] would absolutely throw this item out of this bill. I also [illegible] the chairman to page 349 of the Digest, relating [illegible] of the general rule that the appropriation bill makes [illegible]

[illegible] to the next citation:

"[illegible] for a salary does not thereby create an office, so as [illegible]"

I now [illegible] the Chairman to the item itself to which I [illegible] in the last sundry civil bill of last year [illegible]

[illegible] through diplomatic channels with [illegible] to Document No. 119, [illegible]

Now, Mr. Chairman, there was [illegible] authority whatever for that appropriation at that time. It never was in the House in any way, shape, or manner prior to its being put onto this bill as an amendment by the Senate. It was not only in violation of the rules of this House, but it was in violation of the rules of the Senate itself.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Connecticut inform the Chair the page on which the original law authorizing this commission is to be found?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I will take great pleasure in submitting the law itself to the Chair. That amendment never was in this House. It was not an original item in the sundry civil bill last year. It was an amendment put on of $20,000 in the Senate, in violation of its own rules as well as in violation of the rules of the House, and came over here when the bill was brought back from the Senate. It was reduced in conference from $20,000 to $25,000, and I think I may say, and that I do say at the time, that that was to be the end of that proposition. The $20,000 inserted in violation of the rules in both bodies last year, it is now claimed [illegible] as a precedent for all future time.

Mr. PAYNE. May I ask the gentleman a question? What difference does it make whether it was against the rules or not, if it becomes a law finally?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. It makes no difference as a legal proposition, I suppose, but it makes a very great difference in another way, and it seems to me it is time that the House of Representatives asserted its own dignity and began to put a stop to that kind of procedure.

Mr. PAYNE. The House can not prescribe rules for the Senate. I wish it could.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Now, Mr. Chairman, I make this claim, that the appropriation, as inserted in the sundry civil bill last year, without any provision authorizing it, [illegible] that appropriation, in accordance with decisions made time and time again, and last passed on as late as a new appropriation bill, a new proposition and that point of order has been sustained over and again by your decisions of the House.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, the point of order actually was determined the other day in respect to an item in the army appropriation bill, where, by amendment of the Senate, there was inserted an appropriation for the purchase of a building at Washington, Pennsylvania. I make the point of order that it not being authorized by law, an additional appropriation for that work was out of order, and that the Senate could not legislate, and that no appropriation or addition to the $300,000 could be made. The Chair sustained that point exactly as this item stands upon the sundry civil and in the last Congress. It was a matter of [illegible] which was agreed to in conference, and of course passed the House in spite of the provisions have [illegible] the House to have they brought law.

The Chair held that, being a public work in progress, the item of $300,000 on the army appropriation bill was in order. I think the Chair was correct in that holding. Here is a provision of law:

To enable the President to cooperate through diplomatic channels with [illegible] as Senate Document No. 119, [illegible]

There is authority authorizing this appropriation and authorizing the Government [illegible] and other [illegible] certain [illegible] Mexico, China, and Japan. Now, that work is in progress. A Commission has been appointed. That Commission is now at work under authority of the law.

[illegible] is now in progress, and which was [illegible] by any person in the last session of the Congress. It is exactly the case which was decided by the Chair five or six days ago, where I contended on the other side of the proposition that where an appropriation of $[illegible] was made the work was limited to the [illegible]. The Chair held I was [illegible] that being a public work in progress the [illegible] be made. It is exactly the same case, and I have no doubt the Chair will rule in the same way.

Mr. LIND. Will the gentleman permit me a question? Do I understand [illegible] that our Government is committed to the proposition of international bimetallism?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Oh, no! [illegible]

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. That is the effect of it.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Oh, no; there is absolutely nothing in this provision that gives anybody the right to commit the Government to any proposition. Congress alone can commit the Government.

Mr. LIND. There is no law authorizing it?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Here is the law:

To enable the President —

Mr. LIND. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I hope the gentleman will allow me to answer the one he has already submitted.

To enable the President to cooperate through diplomatic channels with the Governments of Mexico, China, Japan, and other countries for the par-

[illegible] set forth in the message of the President and accompanying notes submitted to Congress January 29, 1903, and printed as Senate Document No. 119, second session Fifty-seventh Congress, [illegible].

Now, as I understand that provision, it authorized the President to appoint a commission to try to bring about a fixed rate of exchange between Mexico, China, Japan, and other countries and the United States——

Mr. LIND. A fixed rate of exchange for gold and silver.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Giving to that Commission no power in any shape or manner to commit the Government, but simply to try to bring about some arrangement which should afterwards be submitted for approval to the Congress of the United States and to the legislative body of the country or countries joining in the agreement.

Mr. LIND. Then does not the gentleman contend that the point of order is not well taken, because this Government by prior legislation is committed to the proposition of securing stability of international exchange as to gold and silver?

Mr. HEMENWAY. The Government is not committed to it in any way. We are simply trying to bring about, through our diplomatic corps and through this Commission, fixed rates of exchange. When such an agreement has been brought about by negotiation, then Congress will have to legislate upon the question. The Government can only be committed by legislation—not by any agreement which this Commission may be able to arrive at with other countries.

Mr. LIND. The question to which I desire to get a specific answer is this: If, as I understand, existing law commits the Government to these negotiations, then the point of order is not well taken. If it does not, the point of order is well taken, it seems to me.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do not think the gentleman is correct in his statement. Of course, the Government will not be committed to any agreement made by this Commission. The object of the Commission is to bring about fixed rates of exchange between this country and other countries. For instance, in the dealings between citizens of this country and citizens of Mexico—I may not be exactly accurate, but I understand the fact to be that the price of exchange in Mexico ranged last year from about $2.16 to $2.85.

So a merchant in Mexico having, we will say, an engine and a boiler from some manufacturer in the United States to-day contracts to have the engine and boiler delivered sixty days from now. It may be that exchange to-day is $2.20, but on the day of the delivery of that machinery it may have run up to $2.50. There is no fixed basis on which business can be done as between the two countries.

Now, this Commission hopes to bring about a fixed rate of exchange, so that when the Mexican merchant contemplates to deal with a merchant of the United States he will know on what basis payment is to be made. Whether or not such an arrangement can be brought about between this country and Mexico, China, Japan, and others is a great question. It may not be achieved in a day or a year. It means long diplomatic negotiations between the different countries. But if it can be brought about, as I say it would be of great benefit to the United States.

Now, it is proposed to continue the services of this Commission that is trying to bring about that condition. In a letter and report transmitted to us as a part of the Chairman's remarks, we are asking to report to Congress. They will have a report, and we shall have the opportunity to determine whether we are willing to commit the Government to any scheme which the Commission may propose.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I should be glad to be heard a moment on the point of order. I simply wish to call the attention of the Chair to the history of the legislation or which is particular from year to year to make provision by an additional appropriation. In the latter days of December, 1902, or, perhaps, the early days of January, 1903, the Chinese and Mexican Governments——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend until order is restored. The Committee of the Whole will come to order. [A pause.] The gentleman will now proceed.

Mr. OVERSTREET. It is not my purpose, Mr. Chairman, to address myself to the merits of the question, but simply to the point of order which is raised, and in doing so to call the attention of the Chair briefly to the history of the legislation relating to this subject, which, I believe, throws some material light on the solution of the point of order.

In January, last, the Mexican and Chinese Governments, through their accredited representatives in the United States, made written request of the President of the United States for some plan through which the three Governments might cooperate in arriving at a system of bimetallism and exchange for the benefit of the merchants of gold standard countries dealing with countries which used silver. These communications were transmitted by the Secretary of State, made to the President, and on the 29th day of January, 1903, by message to Congress, addressed to both Houses thereof, the President called that proposition to the attention of Congress and asked for legislation which would enable him to put in operation some such plan. In his message of January 29 he used this language:

> I recommend that the Executive be given sufficient powers to lend the support of the United States in such manner and to such degree as he may deem expedient to the purposes of the two Governments.

Those purposes I briefly referred to. In keeping with that request and recommendation of the Executive, the Congress, on the 3d of March, enacted into law on the sundry civil bill the item giving that power, carrying with it an appropriation of $25,000, to the President.

Acting under that law the President designated a commission of three men, and through his Secretary of State gave instructions to them, and by those instructions they are to-day bound. They have no other power, in law or equity, to bind this Government to any proposition, but under the law under which they are operating must report back through the Executive to the Congress. That Commission has pursued its order of business under those instructions and has made report through the President to the Congress, and at this session the President transmitted that report to the Congress, with a message recommending the further appropriation provided for in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Indiana permit the Chair to ask him a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair takes it that the gentleman will not contend that this item can be sustained under any other rule than that relating to public works and objects already in progress.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I was going to say, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Now, does the gentleman consider, under the rulings of the Chair heretofore, that this is a public work or object such as is contemplated by the rule allowing appropriations of this kind?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I certainly believe that it does come within that, and I was just upon the point of stating to the Chair that this very Commission, carrying out the instructions given it through the Secretary of State, is now at work. It is a continuing project, and this item of appropriation is to provide for that continuance by an additional appropriation.

All of this, Mr. Chairman, is a part of the records of this body. Every step of its progress has been made public through the messages of the President, and the last one I refer to is the one in which he refers specifically to this very item, stating in that message the necessity and importance of continuing this project at present session, because they have only begun in the first investigation by visits to European capitals, and are now progressing with their work at the Japanese and Chinese courts. It comes directly within the purview of the authority of this House, shown by its rules, where a project has been authorized the necessity of its continuance has been demonstrated, and the importance of an additional appropriation made plain in order to complete it. I think the point of order is not well taken, for the very reason referred to by the Chair, that it is a project not yet completed. Work has already been authorized and for which a partial report of expenditure has been made.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to discuss the merits of the proposition. I am ready to make a proposition to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. I [illegible] to avoid [illegible] an hour, referring largely to the merits of the bill. The gentleman from Indiana in discussing the point of order has referred to the history of the matter. Well, it depends a good deal on who writes history. I will give a history of this [illegible] that which the gentleman from Indiana has given, and will submit the whole facts to the House if they have any interest. I do not want to do it. I am perfectly willing to leave this matter on the point of order right now with the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole with the understanding that if the gentleman insists the point of order I shall have the same amount of time that the gentleman have already taken to discuss the merits of the proposition on an amendment that I shall offer.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Very well; I am ready to submit the point of order without another word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to call to the attention of the committee the language of this paragraph against which the point of order has been made; for it seems to the Chair from that language that the appropriation is not in continuation of such a public work or object in progress as the second clause of Rule XXI contemplates:

> For expenses of the Commission on International Exchange, appointed under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1903, to bring about a proper understanding between great nations and to bring commerce [illegible]

The paragraph does not state specifically what these expenses are; but in view of the language of the act, which the Chair has before it, creating or authorizing the President to create the Commission referred to, it is reasonable to infer that this appropriation is for the payment of salaries and other expenses of employees of the Government—that is, employees at large, as contradistinguished from employees of the Departments, and duties, too, that are not defined by law. In the opinion of the Chair it is difficult to see how the paragraph can be sustained under the provision of Rule XXI, to which the Chair has referred. That rule reads as follows:

> No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

The question is whether this Commission, the purpose of its creation and the continuation of its duties, is such a public object already in progress as this rule intends. On this question the uniform ruling or holding of previous Chairmen has been that public works or objects already in progress authorizing appropriations not provided for by law had to be of a tangible, substantial nature, like the erection of buildings, construction of roads, etc.

The Chair finds in the Book of Precedents a decision on a very similar state of facts; the decision was made by Mr. Payson, of Illinois, who then occupied the chair:

> On April 25, 1890, the House was in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, considering the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, the clerk having read the paragraph relating to salaries in the Interior Department, Mr. Joseph D. Sayers, of Texas, rose to a point of order that there was no law for the employment of a Board of Pension Appeals. In the appropriation for the Secretary of the Interior, at a salary of $2,000, was a proviso authorizing the Board provided for before mentioned, etc.
> The Chair, on the succeeding day, sustained the point of order, the ruling being that the Chairman had been informed by the proper officer that the Board had been created on the 1st day of the past session of Congress, and had been continued on the 1st day of the present session. The appropriation was contained in the deficiency bill, which was reported to the House at the beginning of the session. Three clerks and three salaries are provided for in the bill.

After reciting the law providing for a less number on the Board of Pension Appeals, the Chair said:

> If this provision is properly in this bill at all, the point of order being raised against it, it must be in the judgment of the Chair, [illegible] "unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress." Under the decisions of the United States courts, it is argued, it is lawful for Congress to continue the Board of Pension Appeals, and the Secretary of the Interior has recognized the existence of the Board by the appointment of clerks and three salaries are provided for. The Chair is not prepared to say that the Chairman gave a ruling [illegible] such reflection as the Chair has been able to give to the matter he the Chair is inclined to think that it can not be held.

[illegible] has been repeatedly cited and followed in like and similar cases, and since the provision against which the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] has made the point of order merely provides for continuing the duties of this Commission for another year, it does not, in the opinion of the Chair, [illegible] for the continuation of such an "object already in progress" as the rule contemplates. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

> [illegible] to mark the boundary, and make the surveys [illegible] treaties, [illegible] between Alaska and the adjacent Canadian possessions, [illegible]

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order on the paragraph which has just been read, on the ground that it is new [illegible].

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the Chair is in doubt, I want to be heard upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. To what part of the bill does the gentleman refer?

Mr. HAY. Page 2, beginning of line 9.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from Virginia if he will cite to the Chair the law authorizing this Commission?

Mr. HAY. I can not hear the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to know if the gentleman from Virginia can cite to the Chair the law authorizing the Commission appointed for the purpose of fixing the boundary line between Alaska and the United States?

Mr. HAY. No; I can not. I do not know of any such law.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, there was no legislative authority for the existence of the Commission that has settled the boundary question between the United States and Great Britain in respect to the boundary between the United States and Alaska.

Mr. HAY. That was a treaty; there was not a law, as I understand it. The point I make is——

Mr. HEMENWAY. I suggest to the Chair that a treaty is about the highest law known.

Mr. HAY. I submit to the Chair that this is entirely new; there is no law heretofore, and it is certainly not in order upon an urgent deficiency bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that this appropriation, which is to defray the expense of marking the boundary and making the necessary surveys between the Territory of Alaska and the Dominion of Canada, is in continuation of a tangible public work already begun. The Commission was created by authority of law for the purpose of defining that boundary line in accordance with a treaty between the United States and Great Britain, and an appropriation was made for the purpose of ascertaining the exact boundary. Volume 32, page 1138, Statutes at Large, provides for or authorizes the beginning of the work of marking this boundary. The paragraph against which the gentleman has made the point of order is in continuation of that public work which is to mark the boundary line as ascertained by the Commission, and the Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Consular service in Manchuria: For the balance of the fiscal year 1904, [illegible] at Mukden, Manchuria, at the rate of $[illegible] per annum, [illegible] much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend page 4, in line 21, by striking out the words "four thousand," before the word "dollars," and insert in lieu thereof the words "three thousand five hundred;" so it will read "$3,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> In page 4, strike out the words "four thousand" and insert "three thousand five hundred."

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, we have no objection to the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. HITT. This is done in order to make the two consulates of similar salary by reducing this one, [illegible] Foreign Affairs having fixed that salary permanently to be in the next fiscal year at $3,500, and it is not to be $4,000 [illegible].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that the total will have to be corrected.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I ask unanimous consent that the total be corrected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the total be corrected in accordance with the amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

> Office of the Secretary: For two clerks of class 4, to be engaged during the remainder of the fiscal year 1904 in revising the customs regulations, $1,496.32, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order on that paragraph that it creates or authorizes the employment of two new clerks.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do not care to discuss it; but I simply call the attention of the Chair to the fact that there has been a resolution [illegible] the United States, he will see that it authorizes Congress to provide from time to time such number of clerks as they think necessary for the proper conduct of the business of the Government, and from time to time the Chair has held that items of this kind are in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand that the Revised Statutes provide such authority for employment of clerks?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Why, certainly, as a number of clerks as Congress shall provide from time to time for the public service.

The CHAIRMAN. To what section of the Revised Statutes does the gentleman refer?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I think it is section 161. If we are mistaken about that we will look it up.

Mr. HAY. That objection does not meet the rule of the House. Congress has not provided for these two clerks. It is now providing for the clerks and appropriating for them, and no such expenditure has been previously authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair finds, upon examining the Revised Statutes, that it is section 169 instead of 161 that authorizes this appropriation. The section reads as follows:

[illegible]

Now, in the opinion of the Chair this section authorizes the employment of the clerks provided for in the paragraph against which the gentleman from Virginia has made the point of order. These clerks are described as "clerks of class 4," and that being one of the classes recognized by law, the point of order is overruled.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, do I understand the Chair to say that under that ruling the various bureaus of the Department have the right to employ any number of clerks they choose and that Congress will never be allowed to appropriate for them?

The CHAIRMAN. No; that is not the ruling of the Chair. The appropriation must precede the appropriation, and the Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

[illegible]

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations why the twenty-five skilled laborers are provided for in this bill, whether or not they have been heretofore appropriated for and are now employed at this particular work.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I will say to the gentleman from Virginia that the work of the Post Office Department is behind, and he attention to page 14 of the hearings. He will see that in order to bring the work up these clerks are provided for. On the legislative and a number are provided for, quite a number more than are provided for here.

Mr. HAY. They are skilled workmen?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Skilled laborers to count the money orders, of which there are about ten millions a day, that seems to and have to be sorted out. It is done by skilled laborers now in preference than it would be done by clerks, and these are provided for in this bill, so that the work can be brought up.

Mr. HAY. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

[illegible]

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman. I would like to ask if the point of order was made to that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the point was made from Maine to make the point of order to that part of the bill on page 14, from line 14 to line 19, inclusive.

Mr. FOWLER of Maine. Yes; to the whole paragraph.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, while I believe the paragraph, if carried into law, would bring about a great reform, resulting in great saving of money to the Government, I have no doubt that the point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order made by the gentleman from Maine is sustained.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 19 insert the following:

[illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman I make the point of order that this proposed amendment is subject to the same rule that it is a change of existing law and new legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I hope the gentleman will not make the point of order, as this only seeks information by which a great reform can be brought about.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. If I should withdraw the point of order, I think it would be renewed by some other gentleman.

Mr. HEMENWAY. It does not in any way bind Congress. It simply secures the information necessary by which the reform can be brought about.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, as I have said, if I withdraw the point of order, I have no doubt it will be renewed. This whole legislation is evidently a sweeping change of existing law.

Mr. HEMENWAY. There is no doubt but that the gentleman's point of order is well taken if he insists upon it; but I urge that this will furnish information by which a great reform can be brought about and large sums of money saved to the Government.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. According to the gentleman's statement in the last one a day or two ago, it will save [illegible] a year.

Mr. HEMENWAY. About a hundred and thirty-five thousand dollars a year.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Well, Mr. Chairman, the statement made by the gentleman is that they [illegible] Now, this is the second time [illegible] and all [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] and we [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] laws. But we should have a full hearing, proof, and a full report; then act.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The Secretary of the Treasury points out the [illegible] will be paid. It is very [illegible] the Secretary of the Treasury [illegible] as high as $400 for the [illegible] $2. If we can stop that, it will be a great reform.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Notwithstanding the Treasury report, it has not been [illegible] Mr. Chairman, I have [illegible] laws, [illegible] and said that they ought to be overhauled.

Now, I only ask an appropriation bill [illegible] verbatim [illegible] laws. If there should be a [illegible] Mr. [illegible] as the gentleman from New York [Mr. [illegible]] intimated to the distinguished chairman who [illegible] of that, we are unprepared [illegible] information about it. [illegible] Ways and Means Committee [illegible]

Mr. [illegible] reply a question of [illegible] could try to [illegible] out being [illegible] at all by gentlemen on the other side. I am for this reform, but let it come regularly, fully, completely, so we can see exactly what we are about [illegible] the proper [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina [illegible]

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I ought to withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

[illegible] natives of Alaska during [illegible]

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee if the information called for in the proposed amendment which he submitted a few moments ago can not be furnished now by the President and officers of the Government.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Why, I suppose a resolution could be passed asking for the information, and I think if the chairman of the proper committee would make the request for information it could be secured in that way.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should certainly think so.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman what was the authorization for the expenditure of this money by these companies—whether they were authorized to expend it in any bill; and, if so, how much.

Mr. HEMENWAY. As I remember it, at the last session of Congress the Senate put on an appropriation for these items by amendment; the Departments were instructed to ascertain what, if anything, was due from the Government to these different companies and to have the amounts reported to Congress.

Mr. COWHERD. Did from the Government to these companies for [illegible] furnished the Indians? Or was it for supplies, or what was it?

Mr. HEMENWAY. They were furnished in the regular way, according to the law, were sent down for payment, but there was [illegible] of information on the last session of Congress as to whether or not they were accurate.

Mr. COWHERD. What I am getting at and what I want to know is if there is any law now on the statute books providing for the furnishing of supplies to the destitute Indians in Alaska.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I think not. The gentleman will remember [illegible] was the result of the famine which occurred up there some four years ago.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman will remember—I don't know whether he will or not—that [illegible] of us attempted—I think when the last supply bill was before us [illegible] amendment made to that bill providing for [illegible] supplies to these Indians who at that time the evidence showed were dying by the thousands from famine. If I remember correctly, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY]—at least I am certain the chairman of the committee [illegible] I want to know now whether this is [illegible] law.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I think these supplies were furnished prior to that time; but I will state that the members of the Committee on Appropriations would still expose legislation of that kind to [illegible] for the sake of these Indians. When it becomes absolutely necessary and there is danger of famine they will be taken care of, and Congress will find a way to [illegible] the expenses that ought to be paid. Here is the legislation under which these amounts are paid:

[illegible]

Now, under that legislation these amounts were ascertained [illegible] for, and I have no doubt if there is occasion [illegible] for aid up there it will be furnished; but I do not believe it to be good policy to put on an appropriation bill [illegible] them elves, because that has been the history of [illegible]

Mr. COWHERD. Does the gentleman believe it is better to furnish such aid as they please [illegible] than that it should be [illegible]

Mr. HEMENWAY. As the gentleman will see the appropriations [illegible] of this [illegible] at that time.

Mr. COWHERD. Or, [illegible] permit me. I would [illegible] at that time from [illegible] having been furnished [illegible]

Mr. HEMENWAY. Well, I do not——

Mr. COWHERD. As long as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. [illegible]] has occupied most of my time, I ask an additional [illegible]

Mr. HEMENWAY. I have no [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to allowing the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] five minutes more? The Chair hears none.

Mr. COWHERD. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana and of the House to the condition of these people in certain [illegible] in search of gold and have absolutely changed the conditions that surrounded those people. Why, sir, we have passed game laws that have taken away from them their last hope of subsistence. Our game laws have driven [illegible] to stock that country with sheep and cattle, and by a Senate report we find those bears are so numerous that explorers have to defend themselves from their attacks. We have passed game laws to protect the bears and have left the Indians to die from starvation. We have passed game laws to protect the walrus and we have made a closed season that prohibits the Indians from obtaining at the one time that he can obtain it what was formerly for them a great source of food supply. And these people are the only Indians in all the world that never raised their hands against the white man—the only Indians whose homes have been open to every stranger that came knocking at the door.

These are Indians who, the Government admits, have absolutely deprived their families of the means of subsistence in order to feed the white man. These Indians we are trying to die from epidemic and starvation, in order to protect the game of the country for the casual hunter that may come there.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this is a blotch upon the legislation of the country—it is a reproach upon the humanity of our legislation that we sit here and permit it. I submit it would be much better for our own race, as well for the Indians, that we should legislate to preserve the Indian rather than to preserve the game, and I remember when this legislation was before the House we were told that the purpose of the law was to preserve the game for the Indians and not from them.

We are spending millions of dollars in teaching civilization, as we say, to the people in the Philippines, the islands of Indian and getting back little or nothing in return. There is a [illegible] which we are drawing millions of dollars in good [illegible]; yet we are neglecting year after year to furnish the Government officers there with the funds which would enable them to take care of this last remnant of a most interesting people—a people who, as reports show, have always extended to us the most [illegible] and who today are perishing from the face of the earth because of the conditions that we have brought around them.

Let me read you from a report made by a Senate committee that has investigated this subject:

They are [illegible] and before the influx of the whites [illegible] in their natural habitat from [illegible] and to administer relief. Appropriations should be made for this purpose.

[illegible] of the United States. It is [illegible] for their relief.

They are [illegible] this was two or three years ago—[illegible] per cent of those people have died from starvation and from [illegible] that prevailed amongst them.

We may not be able to remedy the condition of things at the present time, but I am seeking to call the attention of the chairman of the committee, and to the House, and submit that he may [illegible] and that something may be done for these people [illegible] through appropriations to those companies after famine and pestilence have decimated the race.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HEMENWAY. I suggest to the gentleman that the Committee on Appropriations has no jurisdiction and has nothing to do with the [illegible] belongs to that committee on Territories, and if the gentleman believes there should be legislation it should be presented through the Committee on Territories.

Mr. COWHERD. Has not the Committee on Appropriations in the sundry civil bill carried an item——

Mr. HEMENWAY. We have carried an item for reindeer—I think we have [illegible] that has resulted in great benefit to those people. [illegible] the gentleman knows that the minute you go to issuing rations to the Indians in Alaska or in the United States or anywhere else you make paupers of them. They immediately begin to wait for the rations to come around in place of going ahead to try to make their own living. In addition to that they appropriation should be made in this bill and this claim not sent, like other claims of like character, to the Committee on Claims

Mr. HEMENWAY. It has been adjudicated. The board convened and certified it for appropriation.

Mr. COWHERD. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee [illegible] man of the Committee on Appropriations why this bill does not carry an appropriation for the purchase of the site for the new begin to wait for the natives to come around in place of going abroad to try to make the crown living. In addition to that they have a local government [illegible] provided by Congress, by which they collect their own taxes as you collect yours in Missouri, and they ought to take care of their poor people through their local funds. But in any event the Committee on Appropriations has nothing whatever to do with this item, and it belongs to the Committee on Claims.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

[illegible] Mexico, to pay the amount found due by the accounting officers of the Treasury under the provisions of the act of March [illegible] to the Pacific Railway Company, owner of the British steamer Mexico, for damages to the said British steamer and her cargo by the United States transport Wyanoke in Mobile Bay, January [illegible], and for other purposes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve the point of order under the item just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That it is legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that on page [illegible] of the Statutes at Large, volume [illegible], is found the following provision:

That the secretary of War be and he is hereby authorized and directed to compensate the Mexico Steamship Company, a British corporation, owners of the British steamer Mexico, for damages to said steamer and her cargo by reason of the collision between said steamer and the United States transport Wyanoke, in Mobile Bay, on the [illegible] day of January, [illegible], and for other purposes, the amount of such damages to be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, who is hereby authorized and directed to report the same to Congress for its action.

This it has been held to be a special authority authorized by law and the appropriation of money for the purpose of paying the amount found to be due is in order under the Rules of the House. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I submit that it is no deficiency in any sense, but that the Secretary was merely authorized to ascertain and report upon a claim. This is an item to pay a specific claim.

The CHAIRMAN. In reply to the gentleman from New York the Chair will read from the Manual:

In order to provide in an appropriation bill for a deficiency, for the payment of an accounting officer under authority of law.

This account was audited under express authority of law, and is clearly in order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, then I move to strike out the item.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the paragraph just read.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do that. Mr. Chairman, for the last twenty [illegible] There have been a number of claims of this character presented against the Government of the United States, particularly against the United States and some by citizens of other countries, for damages [illegible] the United States vessels of war. I have [illegible] their claims to the Committee on Claims of the House, and I have introduced legislation [illegible] and it has never met with any favorable consideration on the part of the Committee on Claims, and I do not think it ought to have the courtesy pass when the question of appropriation comes up. We simply have some executive officer of some of the Departments reporting to Congress that in his opinion the damage done by the collision in Mobile Bay was due to the negligence of an officer of the United States, and that the damage occasioned by that collision is ascertained to be such and such money.

It seems to me that there should be a reasonable principle in these cases. I remember well that a [illegible] was permitted to submit its claim, arising out of a collision between one of the war vessels of the United States and a private [illegible] on board, in the East River, in New York, on the ground that the United States sitting as a court of admiralty [illegible] I say that if the Government is to recognize a claim of this kind at all, that is the proper way to do it. I am informed that [illegible] executive officers affect the passage of private bills [illegible] upon this Congress, or to compel them to pass upon the claims of this character, and I believe that these claims, like other claims, should be presented to the properly constituted tribunals of the United States and citizens of other countries in the past.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Refund of duties to North American Transportation and Trading Company, [illegible] North American Transportation and Trading Company, of Seattle, Wash., [illegible] duties paid by said company on account of cost of repairs of the bark New York, shipped on that said vessel, was not entitled to enter under the laws of the United States within the meaning of section 3114 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. OLMSTED. Reserving the point of order, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations why this appropriation should be made in this bill and this claim not sent, like other claims of like character, to the Committee on Claims for proper action.

Mr. HEMENWAY. It is to refund the amount found due this company; and of course it does not go to the Committee on Claims, because the amount has been ascertained, and it is agreed by the Government that this amount of money was collected from this company in violation of law.

Mr. OLMSTED. Under what particular law and by what officer has that finding of fact been made?

Mr. HEMENWAY. The Secretary of the Treasury is the officer.

Mr. OLMSTED. Where has the Secretary reported it?

Mr. HEMENWAY. He reports it down in a document which comes to Congress here, recommending that the amount be appropriated.

Mr. OLMSTED. There is nothing in the paragraph that indicates that the amount has been passed upon by any officer of the Government.

Mr. HEMENWAY. This is an account that has been passed on. It has been audited by the Secretary of the Treasury and reported down for appropriation. I can find the document after a [illegible]

Mr. OLMSTED. Then, assuming that to be the case, there is hardly a Member upon this floor who has not constituents who have the equity just claim upon the Government, but they can not get them in these general appropriation bills.

Mr. HEMENWAY. This class of claims is always paid in appropriation bills. Here it is:

[illegible] Statutes.

This is one of the class of claims that is always paid in this bill.

Mr. OLMSTED. What is it you read from?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I read from the estimates submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It took me three years or more to get through a similar claim for a consulate, where the duties had been paid and where the United States Supreme Court decided they were illegally collected; and I could not get that claim put in an appropriation bill.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the gentleman had got his claim properly allowed and certified down to us for an appropriation, it would have been carried in this bill. Nearly every bill of this character [illegible]

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was [illegible] through in a private bill, and [illegible] or it would have been there [illegible]

Mr. HEMENWAY. I don't [illegible] of the form under which such a claim comes, but in these the Secretary of the Treasury [illegible] appropriation.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, upon the statement of the gentleman from Indiana, that this account has been adjudicated by the Treasury Department and payment recommended by the Department, I will make no point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

[illegible] Iowa, for the Fourth Judicial District of Iowa, [illegible] Appropriation.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that paragraph. I do not think that this claim, which is [illegible] Appropriation Committee [illegible] The Chair [illegible] Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that there is no law authorizing this claim. The item has been allowed under a special provision of the deficiency act last year and there is no general law authorizing the auditing of these claims.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Indiana to read the law——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest that the gentleman from Indiana did not read any law. He stated on general authority what he believes the law to be, but there is no such provision of law upon the books.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Does the gentleman make the statement that there is no such general statute authorizing this?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Unquestionably.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Well, we will find it.

Mr. MAHON. Regular order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Council Bluffs, Iowa, post-office. For completion of building under present limit, $[illegible]

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to inquire from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations why this bill does not carry an appropriation for the purchase of the site for the new post-office in the city of New York, as heretofore recommended by the commission appointed for that purpose?

Mr. HEMENWAY. No recommendation has come to the committee coming from a Department.

Mr. SULZER. As I understand it, Congress heretofore passed a law for a commission to select a suitable site for the New York City post-office—a commission consisting of the Postmaster General, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Attorney General. And the law provided that they should select the location in New York City, and make a report to Congress as to the cost of the same, with additional specified particulars. That report and the recommendations of the commission, as I understand it, have been made to the Congress and are now before your committee.

Mr. HEMENWAY. There is nothing on the subject before the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SULZER. I will read the law. It was passed June 6, 1902, and is as follows:

[illegible] Secretary of the Treasury, the Postmaster General, and the Attorney General of the United States, or any three of them, be and hereby is authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a suitable site in the city of New York, borough of Manhattan, and State of New York, upon which to erect a proposed building for the use and occupancy of the United States post-office and other offices: Provided, That the site so selected shall be located within a mile by a street. When such commission has secured a site in such city, it shall forthwith report to Congress, stating the location and cost of the same, and recommend to Congress the character and size of a building to be constructed upon said site, and state the probable cost of such a building, including proposed vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and equipment.

Mr. Chairman, the report of the commission was duly made to the Congress and is now before the House. The site was selected, and it will cost about $2,000,000. This bill should appropriate the money. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] if he has any objection now to my offering an amendment that the sum recommended by the commission, $2,000,000, to purchase this site be incorporated in this bill.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I have, and I will make the point of order against it, because the Committee on Appropriations confines itself to the estimates received from the different Departments of the Government.

Mr. SULZER. Well, this is an estimate; this is in the nature of a contract to purchase the site, and the estimates are made by the Secretaries of three different Departments of the Government.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do not think the gentleman understands me. There has been no estimate coming to the Committee on Appropriations for the item which the gentleman has mentioned.

Mr. SULZER. But, sir, a commission has been duly appointed under the statutes of Congress, and the commission has recommended an appropriation of $2,000,000 for this site. What better [illegible] you want? I am ready to buy the site, and, as I understand, nothing more can be [illegible]

Mr. HEMENWAY. There has been no recommendation sent to the Committee on Appropriations with regard to the item at all and no [illegible] before the committee to advocate the [illegible] and I would say to the gentleman, if any such [illegible] we would not have heard him until it had been recommended by a Department.

Mr. SULZER. Well, then, I now ask the gentleman if he will raise a point of order against an amendment to this bill that the [illegible] for the purpose of a public building in the city of New York for a new post-office.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations would feel it to be his duty to make the point of order against it.

Mr. SULZER. Then I will ask the Chair how the Chair will rule on that point? Will the Chair sustain the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. OLMSTED). The Chair will meet that when it arises.

Mr. SULZER. Then I move, Mr. Chairman, to amend the bill, after line 17, on page 18, by inserting:

That the sum of $2,000,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and [illegible] for the new post-office.

And I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not make a point of order against it. This is the urgent deficiency bill, and I know of no appropriation more urgently demanded than this appropriation to purchase the site for the new post-office in the city of New York. The money should have been appropriated by the last Congress. It must be appropriated by this Congress.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that it is not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 18, line [illegible], insert: "That the sum of $2,000,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any

Mr. HEMENWAY. It has been adjudicated. The board convened and certified it for appropriation.

Mr. OLMSTED. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee—the gentleman from Indiana—in what better position [illegible] claim stand than the claims of my constituents for damages sustained at the hands of the Army when they occupied Fort Meade, near Harrisburg? The claims were passed upon by the War Department and recommended to Congress, but we had to get special authority to pay them.

If my friend can point me to any authority of law for the payment of this claim I will be glad to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The authority is this: That the statutes authorize and direct and require, in every case of collision, that this board be convened, that an investigation be held, that after the investigation has been held that they certify the amount of damages, if any, and whether or not the United States is liable; and when that is done and the amount fixed and audited it goes through the proper Department and is certified down here under the law for appropriation; the difference being in this class of claims and the class of claims suggested by the gentleman that there is no statute for that class of claims suggested by the gentleman authorizing this procedure, while in this case there is a statute authorizing and directing how these amounts shall be ascertained.

Mr. OLMSTED. Well, I will say that in the case to which I referred there was especial authority of law by statute for an investigation by the War Department and an ascertainment of the amount justly due by the Government to those parties, but after that was had there had to be authorization of law before the money could be appropriated to pay them the money. Some of them have not been paid yet.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. MAHON. Under the general law all claims which are war claims and are adjudicated by the Treasury Department are, under the rule, sent to the Committee on War Claims, where they are appropriated for and paid. This is not a claim for damages in time of war. This action probably happened in time of peace, and therefore it came properly to that Committee on Appropriations. I simply suggest this to the gentleman who seems to feel that he did not get this kind of a bill passed to introduce the legislation and you will know next time what corner to turn to get it acted upon.

Mr. OLMSTED. I was not finding any fault with the Committee on War Claims. The Camp Meade claims, so far as paid, were paid upon a bill coming through the Committee on War Claims, a regular bill for the payment of the claims; but this kind of a claim would go before the Committee on Claims—not War Claims, but Claims—and there are [illegible] there now. I [illegible] presented from [illegible] last year for the payment of money for revenue [illegible] in tobacco, but it required special authority of law to repay that money, and unless the gentleman from Indiana can point to some statute authorizing this appropriation I shall insist upon my point of order. If he shows me the statute I shall be glad to withdraw it, as of course it can not stand.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Does the gentleman contend that this is not authorized by law? I think I can find the statute in a minute or two.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Indiana to say that the adjudication of these claims has been by [illegible] law.

Mr. HEMENWAY. There is no doubt about it.

The CHAIRMAN (continuing). And it has been held repeatedly [illegible] authorizes an appropriation for the payment [illegible] The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that there is no law authorizing this claim. The item has been allowed under a special provision of the deficiency act last year and there is no general law authorizing the auditing of these claims.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Indiana to read the law——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest that the gentleman from Indiana did not read any law. He stated on general authority what he believes the law to be, but there is no such provision of law upon the books.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Does the gentleman make the statement that there is no such general statute authorizing this?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Unquestionably.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Well, we will find it.

Mr. MAHON. Regular order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Council Bluffs, Iowa, post-office. For completion of building under present limit, $[illegible]

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to inquire from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations why this bill does not carry an appropriation for the purchase of the site for the new post-office in the city of New York, as heretofore recommended by the commission appointed for that purpose?

Mr. HEMENWAY. No recommendation has come to the committee coming from a Department.

Mr. SULZER. As I understand it, Congress heretofore passed a law for a commission to select a suitable site for the New York City post-office—a commission consisting of the Postmaster General, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Attorney General. And the law provided that they should select the location in New York City, and make a report to Congress as to the cost of the same, with additional specified particulars. That report and the recommendations of the commission, as I understand it, have been made to the Congress and are now before your committee.

Mr. HEMENWAY. There is nothing on the subject before the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SULZER. I will read the law. It was passed June 6, 1902, and is as follows:

[illegible] Secretary of the Treasury, the Postmaster General, and the Attorney General of the United States, or any three of them, be and hereby is authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a suitable site in the city of New York, borough of Manhattan, and State of New York, upon which to erect a proposed building for the use and occupancy of the United States post-office and other offices: Provided, That the site so selected shall be located within a mile by a street. When such commission has secured a site in such city, it shall forthwith report to Congress, stating the location and cost of the same, and recommend to Congress the character and size of a building to be constructed upon said site, and state the probable cost of such a building, including proposed vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and equipment.

Mr. Chairman, the report of the commission was duly made to the Congress and is now before the House. The site was selected, and it will cost about $2,000,000. This bill should appropriate the money. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] if he has any objection now to my offering an amendment that the sum recommended by the commission, $2,000,000, to purchase this site be incorporated in this bill.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I have, and I will make the point of order against it, because the Committee on Appropriations confines itself to the estimates received from the different Departments of the Government.

Mr. SULZER. Well, this is an estimate; this is in the nature of a contract to purchase the site, and the estimates are made by the Secretaries of three different Departments of the Government.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do not think the gentleman understands me. There has been no estimate coming to the Committee on Appropriations for the item which the gentleman has mentioned.

Mr. SULZER. But, sir, a commission has been duly appointed under the statutes of Congress, and the commission has recommended an appropriation of $2,000,000 for this site. What better [illegible] you want? I am ready to buy the site, and, as I understand, nothing more can be [illegible]

Mr. HEMENWAY. There has been no recommendation sent to the Committee on Appropriations with regard to the item at all and no [illegible] before the committee to advocate the [illegible] and I would say to the gentleman, if any such [illegible] we would not have heard him until it had been recommended by a Department.

Mr. SULZER. Well, then, I now ask the gentleman if he will raise a point of order against an amendment to this bill that the [illegible] for the purpose of a public building in the city of New York for a new post-office.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations would feel it to be his duty to make the point of order against it.

Mr. SULZER. Then I will ask the Chair how the Chair will rule on that point? Will the Chair sustain the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. OLMSTED). The Chair will meet that when it arises.

Mr. SULZER. Then I move, Mr. Chairman, to amend the bill, after line 17, on page 18, by inserting:

That the sum of $2,000,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and [illegible] for the new post-office.

And I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not make a point of order against it. This is the urgent deficiency bill, and I know of no appropriation more urgently demanded than this appropriation to purchase the site for the new post-office in the city of New York. The money should have been appropriated by the last Congress. It must be appropriated by this Congress.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that it is not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 18, line [illegible]: "That the sum of $2,000,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to purchase the site in the city of New York heretofore recommended by the commission for the new post-office.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The point of order, Mr. Chairman, is that it is not authorized by law.

Mr. [illegible]. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I suggest, if the gentleman from New York will permit, that these hearings as a rule are all printed in the report [illegible] tion [illegible]. The [illegible] in the course of construction during the last Congress.

Mr. [illegible]. Mr. Chairman, I [illegible] from [illegible] that [illegible] to carry [illegible] that [illegible] to the [illegible] which [illegible] in this House.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is not authorized by law. I will be glad to hear the gentleman. I do not [illegible] that law that has [illegible].

Mr. [illegible]. Mr. Chairman, under the law of 1902 power [illegible] the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney-General [illegible] permitted to select and locate a site in the city of New York for a new post-office. [illegible] New York City in [illegible] made a report [illegible] of $2,500,000 [illegible] and is laid on this House. Most of the Members of the House are familiar with the law [illegible] it seems to me the point of order is not well taken and is [illegible].

It seems to me that where there is a law to secure the site the appropriation should be made, [illegible] are reasonable. I think it has been held by the [illegible] of the committee and other Chairmen of the Committee of the Whole House that where a law has been passed [illegible] a commission to secure a site for a public building [illegible] of Representatives to appropriate the money. It is [illegible] or to the [illegible]. The situation in New York City regarding this post-office is today a shame [illegible].

The present post-office building in the city of New York is a disgrace to the Federal Government. It is old, [illegible] overcrowded, and dilapidated. It is totally [illegible] the immense postal business. It was [illegible] and the business is now [illegible] New York City today is more in need of [illegible] than any other city in the United States. [illegible] down town is worse [illegible] to properly handle and distribute the [illegible] and noisy. It is [illegible] and dangerous. The Government [illegible] the city of New York, [illegible] because it is well known that New York City is our greatest [illegible].

Mr. [illegible]. The post-office of New York City pays the Government an [illegible] than any other [illegible] States of the Union. [illegible] from the New York City post-office is about $[illegible] and increasing more and more every year. With facts [illegible] in the face, it is a shame, in my judgment, that for the reason or that excuse it has been [illegible] the people of New York City, or their representatives in Congress, to get Congress to remedy the postal evils in New York City and give the people there a post-office that will reflect credit on the Federal Government and facilitate the distribution of the mails.

It is well known, Mr. Chairman, to these Members [illegible] with this question that a few several years of weary effort and arduous struggle we finally succeeded in getting the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of this House to pass a law [illegible] appointing a commission composed of the Postmaster-General, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Attorney-General to go to New York City and select a suitable site for the new post-office building. No appropriation was made to pay for the site was made in this law, because we were told such a proposition was unheard of and contrary to precedent, and that no appropriation was ever made by Congress until the site was selected, and that just so soon as the site was selected Congress would [illegible] all necessary money to pay for the same and to begin the construction of the building.

That is all, Mr. Chairman, I have to say at this time. I trust [illegible] point of order. It should be immaterial [illegible] so long as it is made—and it [illegible] law.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. OLMSTED). Accepting the statement [illegible] Chair is not in a position to sustain the point of order. [illegible] of a board for the [illegible] a public building [illegible] a [illegible] in, in a [illegible] order on the [illegible].

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

[illegible] public buildings: For heating, hoisting, and ventilating apparatus, $20,000.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to [illegible] been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At [illegible] 9, on page 20, amend [illegible].

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman [illegible] that there is $10,000 [illegible] for the purpose of [illegible] and that the [illegible] was selected, and that just so soon as the site was selected Congress would [illegible] all necessary money to pay for the same and to begin the construction of the building.

That is all, Mr. Chairman. I rose

Bureau of Yards and Docks. But the naval bill has not been reported by the committee, and I think this provision ought to wait until that bill shall be reported. I therefore make a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. HEMENWAY. This matter having been discussed, I think the point of order comes too late. Of course I have no feeling about the matter one way or the other, except that I am assured by the statement of the Secretary of the Navy that this is a deficiency. The appropriation for work at that navy-yard has been exhausted, and the Secretary says it is one of the most important items in the bill. He grounds his request that, as he pays it money appropriated, it can not be paid, that the dry dock facilities may be used now in any emergency, and they want this dock for use in the spring.

Of course if they have to use it in the spring they must get the money on the ways. The money provided on the bill reported from the committee is appropriated would not be available until July 1, and the Secretary has already work for men in the navy-yard. He must have this appropriation now. I do not think it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. RIXEY. The chairman of the committee is entirely familiar with the fact that different committees frequently make [illegible]

Mr. HEMENWAY. That provision on an appropriation bill is subject to a point of order.

Mr. RIXEY. It is very frequently done. If this is a matter of [illegible] would be good to find out.

Mr. HEMENWAY. That is not the proper way to legislate. It is subject to a point of order to make an item [illegible] available at least is further evidence that the item is disorder on this bill. I do not undertake to say that I know as much about the necessity for it as the gentleman himself. I only have before me the [illegible] from the Secretary of the Navy, in which he states that it is very important that the Navy Department [illegible] be paid. It now has money in some battery, that dry dock is liable to settle down.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist on his point of order?

Mr. HEMENWAY. The point of order, I understood, was not made.

Mr. RIXEY. I made the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Virginia to make the point of order, but he withdrew the gentleman from Indiana to make the point. [illegible]

Mr. HEMENWAY. Oh, yes, we have been discussing it for ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thus sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana that the point made by the gentleman from Virginia, not having been made until after there had been debate, came too late.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNDER SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

For necessary expenditures [illegible] the occupation and utilization of the navy-yard [illegible] be used for such purposes as the Secretary of the Navy may direct, $[illegible]

Mr. RIXEY. I should like to have some explanation of the paragraph at the end of page 7, the [illegible] I should like to know what that is to be expended for. In order that I may be in [illegible] I reserve the point of order.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I am going to read from the statement of Secretary Moody, in the hearing before the committee:

NAVAL STATION, GUANTANAMO, CUBA.

This [illegible] highest importance.

Mr. HEMENWAY. [illegible]

[illegible]

We need that money now. We do not want to pay for the land and we want to begin by [illegible] work. [illegible] and in the Naval Committee [illegible] works there a dry dock, [illegible] power of the expenditures, but at the time I want the [illegible] for this present nary work, and it is impracticable to specify it. It will be the last general appropriation I shall ask.

The Secretary simply wants added to the $100,000 he now has the sum of $200,000 more, to enable the Department to purchase the lands and prepare them for the buildings so as to be ready to go ahead.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF NAVIGATION.

For [illegible] work in connection with extension to Naval War College at Newport, R. I., $[illegible]

Mr. HAY. On the paragraph beginning with line 1, on page 14, I reserve the point of order, and ask the chairman what this paragraph is for. I desire to know whether this is adding to some [illegible] body's salary or whether it is an [illegible] inspector, who he is, and what he does? I reserve the point of order.

Mr. HEMENWAY. In reply to the gentleman's question, I find the answer of the Secretary of the Navy, who says:

The next item is for the pay of an inspector, simply because of the delay [illegible] the inspector to be employed a [illegible] would have been.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For clerk hire, rent, and other [illegible] of the district land [illegible] for the payment [illegible]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out of line 14, page 39, the word "thirty-five," and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 14, page 39, strike out "thirty-five" and insert in lieu thereof "fifty;" so that it will read "fifty thousand dollars."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, my reason for offering this amendment is that the sum of $[illegible] and more is urgently required by the General Land Office for the purposes specified in this item. The General Land Office last year asked for $[illegible] work. An appropriation of $[illegible] was made. We all know the work of the local land offices has very largely increased in the past year, and the amount asked for would not have been sufficient to pay the necessary expenditures. Twenty [illegible] was asked was appropriated, and the deficiency therefore becomes greater than it otherwise would have been.

It will be remembered that this appropriation is not for the purpose of carrying on new work or investigations which can be waived or left undone. It is for the purpose of carrying on the work of the people in connection with the entry of public lands. There is no local land office in the country that has a single solitary clerk more than is needed for the dispatch of the public business, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in a memorandum that I hold in my hand, says that if the amount now asked is not allowed it will be necessary to discharge over [illegible] at the various land offices. This being true, I hope the gentleman on the committee will not make any objection to the increase asked for.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of the Interior for the fiscal year 1904 asked for $[illegible] Congress the Secretary asked for a [illegible] $[illegible]. We gave him $[illegible] or $[illegible] more than [illegible] last year. The original amount we appropriated was $[illegible], and $50,000 makes $[illegible], against the $220,000 originally requested by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MONDELL. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that it is impossible for the Secretary of the Interior or anyone to accurately determine in advance how much business will be done at the local land offices. The business in the local land offices has trebled in the last two years. The income from the sale of public lands in the last fiscal year amounted to [illegible], or an increase of about $4,000,000 in [illegible] over the year before, and the receipts for that year were twenty [illegible] the receipts of the year preceding. So that the business coming before the registers and receivers has increased by leaps and bounds.

It is absolutely necessary that the registers and receivers shall have [illegible] enough to clear out of the business pending before their offices. I am quite sure that neither the chairman of this committee nor any member of this committee wishes to have [illegible] and intending entrymen on the public lands and those [illegible] to make final proof on their lands turned away from the land office because forsooth we refuse to appropriate a niggardly $[illegible] or $[illegible] for this necessary work.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this for the purpose of asking the gentleman if it is not true that the large increase in the business of the Land Office, the demand for the larger number of clerks provided for, and the [illegible] appropriation necessitating a large sum for that purpose have been due to the large number of fraudulent entries of land?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I will say to the gentleman that I do not think so at all. I have no knowledge that it is due to that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It is a fact, is it not, that many millions of acres have thus been fraudulently entered in the last year or two?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not believe that is true. I believe that nine-tenths of the allegations of land fraud that have been made have been made by people who had a purpose in making such allegations and did it to serve their own personal ends, and that they are largely the paid agents of the transcontinental land-grabbing railways, who would like to have all the land laws repealed in order that the thirty or forty million acres which they own may find a better market.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Does not the gentleman acknowledge the fact, which has been stated in the report of the Secretary and also through the press, that millions of acres of public lands have gone astray by reason of fraudulent land entries?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I think the gentleman rather exaggerates the statements of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Then does the gentleman deny that millions of acres have gone astray by reason of fraudulent land entries, that the system through which it was done has been suspended by the Secretary, and this for the reason that the condition exists in regard to fraudulent land entries?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not pretend to know all about the land business of the Government, but I live in a State and have lived all my life in regions where public land was being entered. I live in a State where 95 per cent of the land is still public land, and I will say to the gentleman, so far as my personal knowledge is concerned, and I have taken some pains to investigate, my opinion is that in this year of grace there is less fraud in connection with public lands in the United States in proportion to the acres entered than there ever was before.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But the gentleman is not oblivious to the fact and he has evidently read the current public news which states that the Secretary of the Interior has repeatedly [illegible] there is a great amount of fraudulent land entries out in the western country; has he not?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has not carefully read the Secretary's reports. I think the gentleman has read——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I refer to newspapers and such information——

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has probably read the land repeal bureau's edition of the Secretary's suggestions.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I have read the Secretary's statements and the newspaper interviews which were accredited at the time of the arrest of a gentleman engaged largely in it, but a few weeks ago, and the scandal that was ventilated in the newspapers. Surely the gentleman read that, and he knows, evidently, that some——

Mr. MONDELL. There is no question but what there has been some scandal in connection with the public lands, particularly as regards entries under timber and stone acts, in some parts of the country.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Then is it not in the interest of the public service to keep down the appropriations until these matters are regulated by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I do not follow the gentleman's philosophy or agree with his reasoning.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That is my judgment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MONDELL. It seems to me if he takes——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. In view of the fact that the gentleman is not responding to any of the inquiries which I have put to——

Mr. MONDELL. How is that?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The gentleman is not responding to any inquiries I have put to him. I disagree entirely with the gentleman——

Mr. MONDELL. I beg the gentleman's pardon if I am taking his time; I did not intend to do so.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. No, the gentleman is not taking my time, but as he is not responding to any of my inquiries here I will go on. I desire to emphasize the fact, Mr. Chairman, that that condition prevails not only with reference to this land, but the Secretary of the Interior, with the assurance of Congress is trying to put it down, and therefore I would not at this time increase the appropriations over the head of the Appropriation Committee, which has carefully made its inquiry and presented its conclusion to this House, because perhaps they might affect irrigation land out West or in other parts of the country in which there is public land.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I was out in the hall for a few minutes and as I understand the amendment proposed increases the appropriation for the land offices. I want to call the attention of the committee to a memorandum that was made by the land department on the 27th of January, which states the situation exactly.

Either a large force of clerks must be furloughed or there must be an additional appropriation. The amount expended was, for clerk hire, $210,189.77; for rent of offices, $[illegible]; for incidental expenses, furniture, etc., $8,425.06. [illegible] the amount appropriated, but the amount of expenditure increased. That was what was anticipated to be expended. The amount of appropriation is inadequate by $[illegible] to cover the deficiency. A new item was submitted to the committee for the urgent deficiency bill of $50,000. The amount appropriated in the bill is [illegible],000, which would still leave a deficit of $[illegible]0,000. There are [illegible] clerks [illegible] employed. These clerks receive salaries from $900 [illegible] $1,400 [illegible] per annum. If this would still leave a deficit of $[illegible] in order to meet which 33 clerks will have to be discharged on February 1, but as it will require $5,000 for emergency purposes for the balance of the year it would be necessary to discharge [illegible] clerks.

The situation is the same as it is in other Departments of the Government which have anything to do with the [illegible] of the country. The growth of the business of this country has met with a response in the business of the Land Office. The amount of land taken, the amount of business in the Department has been greater than the year before, just as the business of disposing of private land by private owners has increased in the last year, and the year before, and the year before that and for a number of years. So it is necessary that this work should be proceeded. If the department is embarrassed by inadequate funds, the business must be suspended to the detriment of the people. The request for an appropriation of $50,000 is a reasonable one. The income to the Government from land offices is enormously in excess of the expenditure in carrying on the business of the department, which is, in fact, the largest ever known within the present generation for the past year.

Now, this requires that instead of discharging or furloughing clerks they should be kept at work. The Government is not demanding an increase of force, but they do not think this is a proper time to furlough clerks in order to keep inside of an appropriation. They have asked for $50,000. This is a reasonable request, covering the actual deficit, and they are only given $25,000. Why give them any less? Why [illegible] Because it is needed, and $[illegible] is asked as [illegible] $50,000. I ask the chairman of the committee to accept this amendment. It is a very moderate request—a reasonable one—and one that is necessary in order to properly carry on the Government business.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I know the gentleman from Iowa will be frank with us. I would like to ask him if the Secretary of the Interior does not ask for this larger appropriation for the purpose of having more inspectors to discover fraudulent land entries?

Mr. LACEY. That is not involved in this appropriation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Is not this appropriation available for that purpose?

Mr. LACEY. This [illegible] does not cover that question.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I ask if it is not available for that purpose?

Mr. LACEY. Not [illegible] it is for the ordinary business of the Department for the various offices in the service of the Department. [illegible] as a deficiency for carrying on the business of the Department for this fiscal year.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I hope the gentleman from Iowa agrees with the gentleman from Wyoming as to the extent of the land frauds by which the business of the Department has been increased within the last two years.

Mr. LACEY. I do not come to discuss the question of land frauds in this connection, because it is a long question that I could not discuss in the time that I have and [illegible] to the committee. At some [illegible] I shall [illegible] this House into the consideration of the Committee on Public Lands and give them all the information that the committee has.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The gentleman can tell us whether the Secretary has not suspended the rules by which the fraudulent land entries were encouraged and under which the operators operated.

Mr. LACEY. Oh, there have been land frauds ever since the organization of 1785, and there will be land frauds as long as there is a public domain. The Department will endeavor to eliminate and prevent as many of them as is possible. There are land frauds no doubt now in cases pending before the Department. The Department of the Interior is not only trying to put them down with all the power it has, but it is doing it with vigor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. [illegible]

Mr. LACEY. No. I think not. [illegible] North Dakota [illegible] in a [illegible] land, on the [illegible] a few years ago [illegible] supplied by the [illegible] For [illegible] harvesting a [illegible] For [illegible] of [illegible]

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Why not be fair to the [illegible]

Mr. LACEY. [illegible]

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. [illegible] read a synopsis of the report of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. LACEY. The first question to be taken will be on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But I [illegible] the report of the Secretary [illegible] on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

[illegible] of the disposition of the public lands in violation of law, and to the destruction of the timber and the maintenance of unlawful inclosures [illegible] registers and receivers, as to the compliance of the claimants with [illegible] of the large number of alleged fraudulent entries [illegible] large number of cases involved in timber trespass and [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

[illegible] Mr. Chairman. I ask unanimous [illegible] to be permitted to continue for three [illegible].

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the limita- [illegible] gentleman make the point of [illegible] ne minutes. [illegible] r.

Mr. R[illegible] Mr. [illegible] over the head of [illegible]

[illegible] a. Then the gentleman who says this [illegible] I have [illegible] r, by [illegible] or in some way for [illegible]

I [illegible] floor. If they [illegible] ments which would seem to imply [illegible] be available for that purpose.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The irrigation act, as I understand——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I now renew the point of order that the debate on the paragraph is exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The question being taken, there were on a division (called for by Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana)—ayes 58, noes 26.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For furnishing transcripts of records and plats, to be expended under the [illegible] the Secretary of the Interior, $4,000: Provided, That separate em- [illegible] shall be selected by the Secretary of the In- [illegible] $3 per day while actually employed, at such times [illegible] periods as the exigencies of the work may demand.

Mr. LACEY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

For per diem in lieu of subsistence of inspectors and of clerks detailed to [illegible] land entries, trespasses on the public lands, and cases [illegible], $[illegible].

The Chairman proceeded to put the question on agreeing to the amendment, and said, "The ayes seem to have it."

Mr. HEMENWAY. I want to discuss that amendment. I supposed that the gentleman from Iowa had some explanation to offer. I call for a division, if necessary.

Mr. LACEY. I hope this matter will be left open, by unanimous consent, until it can be explained.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the vote will be withheld until the amendment has been explained.

Mr. HAY. I object. I call for the regular order.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 8, noes 30.

So the amendment of Mr. LACEY was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Removal of intruders, Five Civilized Tribes: For the purpose of removing [illegible] and placing allottees in unrestricted possession of their allotments, [illegible]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I raise a point of order on the paragraph just read. I submit that it is not in accordance with the existing law, but is a new provision. I will state very frankly that in the Fifty-sixth Congress a provision of this kind was passed, but it was omitted in the Fifty-seventh Congress. No similar provision was adopted in that Congress; consequently it is not existing law.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I understand that there is a provision of law that when necessary the Commissioners of the Five Civilized Tribes, constituting what is called the "Dawes Commission," shall put these Indians in actual possession of their land after it has been apportioned to them. The testimony of the Indian Commissioner before the committee was to that effect; and as an appropriation heretofore made for this purpose has been exhausted, this provision has been inserted in the bill to carry out that proposition of the law. I understand that there is already an enactment of law to this effect so far as the Dawes Commission is concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to state that the law now requires the Dawes Commission to place these Indians in possession of their lands?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In actual possession of their lands. The appropriation to pay the agent to put them in possession of their lands has been exhausted.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I was not aware of any law of that kind now existing.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman from Alabama cite the law?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have not the volume at hand, but I think the chairman of the committee [Mr. HEMENWAY] can probably do so.

Mr. HEMENWAY. In the treaties with the different tribes of Indians we have a provision that the Indians shall be put in possession of their allotments.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What law is that?

Mr. HEMENWAY. In all these treaties with the different Indian tribes there is that provision that where the land is allotted the Indians shall be placed in possession of their allotments. Now let me state the necessity for this appropriation as shown in the hearings. In one case, we will suppose, a man has a pasture of [illegible] acres. The land is allotted. An Indian comes and claims possession of the piece of land allotted to him. The man in charge, the occupant of the land, bluffs him off and says, "You can not have it."

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman from Indiana cite for the information of the Chair the statute referred to?

Mr. HEMENWAY. We can secure one of these treaties so as to show it to the Chair later on. I ask unanimous consent that we pass the item and go ahead with the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have other objections to the section. I desire to move to strike it out, and also to amend it, when we return to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be passed.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the gentleman desires to move to strike it out, we can pass on the motion to strike it out now.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire a ruling as to whether or not it is germane or whether it is new legislation.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Reserve the right, if it is not stricken out, to raise the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The request is that the paragraph be passed, reserving to the gentleman from Texas the right to move to strike it out or to amend it. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent expenses: For all necessary contingent and miscellaneous expenses of the office of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, the Bureau of Manufactures, [illegible] and the [illegible] Department of Commerce and Labor, including the purchase of official and scientific books, law books, bound periodicals, pamphlets, blank books, pamphlets, maps, newspapers, [illegible] $2,500; stationery, furniture and repairs to the same, [illegible] and fuel, [illegible] supplies, [illegible] and lighting, for the purchase, exchange, and care of horse-drawn vehicles to be used only for official purposes and for rent of stables therefor from date to date, to pay freight and express charges, postage, telegraph and telephone service, typewriters, and repairs thereof, and all other miscellaneous items and necessary expenses not included in the following, $35,000.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, on page 45, line 3, I move to strike out the word "newspapers."

The amendment was read by the Clerk, as follows:

Mr. HAY. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee why there should be an appropriation made for the office of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor for newspapers? The gentleman made a very sharp criticism on the Committee on Military Affairs the other day because they were making appropriations to buy what he called "French novels." Now, I do not know why we should appropriate for newspapers for the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman evidently misunderstood the gentleman from Indiana the other day. I was not opposing the item of newspapers or any necessary item. What I was seeking to do was to limit the amount that could be expended for these purposes, and if the gentleman will notice, in this bill we do exactly what I was seeking to do on the military bill. Or this item of $35,000 we provide that not to exceed $2,500 shall be expended for—

Professional and scientific books, law books, books of reference, periodicals, blank books, pamphlets, maps, and newspapers.

Mr. HAY. Why should we appropriate for newspapers?

Mr. HEMENWAY. The Department of Commerce and Labor have to advertise in newspapers for all the supplies they buy, and in many instances under the law are required to advertise in certain newspapers. Now, in order that they may know that the advertisements have been inserted, they must subscribe for a limited number of newspapers. The item, of course, in this bill, as in all other bills coming from the Committee on Appropriations, is now limited to a certain amount of money that can be expended for the purchase of books, newspapers, and periodicals.

Mr. HAY. But you do not limit the amount that may be expended for periodicals and newspapers.

Mr. HEMENWAY. This is a part of the appropriation for professional and scientific books, law books, books of reference, periodicals, blank books, pamphlets, maps, and newspapers. All of those items shall not exceed $2,500, out of the total appropriation of $35,000.

Mr. PAYNE. May I suggest to the gentleman that the Bureau of Statistics is in this Department of Commerce and Labor?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. Does it not necessarily have to take a number of newspapers?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Oh, yes; there is the Bureau of Statistics, the Bureau of Navigation, and a whole lot of other bureaus.

Mr. PAYNE. They have to subscribe to technical newspapers and other newspapers.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Certainly.

Mr. HAY. Do they have to subscribe for periodicals?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes; many of them.

Mr. HAY. For Ainslee's Magazine and Harper's, etc.?

Mr. HEMENWAY. No.

Mr. HAY. You provide for it here. They can buy them.

Mr. HEMENWAY. No.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman said the other day in debate that the head of a Department was buying all sorts of books and periodicals and magazines.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes.

Mr. HAY. Now, I want to know why they could not buy any periodical they please under this appropriation?

Mr. HEMENWAY. No, sir; because we ascertain the amount of money necessary to buy the actual papers and periodicals that they need for their professional use and limit the amount that can be used to that sum.

Mr. HAY. Why can not they take part of the $2,500 to which you limit them and subscribe for any periodical they choose?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Because they are prohibited, first, by law from doing that.

Mr. HAY. Where is the law that prohibits them?

Mr. HEMENWAY. And next, because the amount of money authorized in this item is not sufficient. The gentleman ought to be fair. Under the item in the army bill you have a large lump sum appropriated, running into the thousands of dollars, as we have here. Now, all I asked of the gentleman was to limit the amount that should be authorized to be used to buy books and buy periodicals and newspapers, etc., just as we limit it in this bill.

Mr. HAY. Why, it was limited there.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Oh, no; it was not.

Mr. HAY. Why, the contention of the gentleman——

Mr. HEMENWAY. It was by the amendment that was put on.

Mr. HAY. Why, the contention of the gentleman from Indiana was that the periodicals and newspapers provided for in that item, as in this, had no limitation upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I ask that the gentleman have three minutes additional time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the time of the gentleman will be extended for five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. HAY. The point made by the gentleman from Indiana was that under that appropriation the money could be expended for any book the head of the Department desired. So now, I say, under "periodicals" you can expend that or as much as you please in subscriptions to magazines. That was the contention that the gentleman from Indiana made, and an amendment was agreed to providing that it should be "professional periodicals," dealing with subjects pertaining to its own particular branch. I think the same ought to be done here.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Well, the gentleman will remember that the amendment offered by "the gentleman from Indiana" was to limit the amount that could be expended for periodicals, books, etc., to $200.

Mr. HAY. Periodicals and newspapers, $200.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I said then to the gentleman from Virginia if $200 was not sufficient amount, not being sufficiently familiar with it myself to fix the amount, they might fix the amount at a sufficient amount—just exactly what has been done by the Committee on Appropriations. Why, here is an appropriation for $35,000 for contingent expenses. We put in here a limit of $2,500 that can be expended out of this $35,000 item. Just exactly what I asked the gentleman to do on the army bill. Now, prior to the time limits were placed in the bills they could take any sum out of the lump sum appropriated and buy any book that they considered necessary, and thus build up libraries of fiction in the Departments. As soon as limitations were put upon it they have confined themselves to the items absolutely necessary, and there have been no more purchases of books of fiction in consequence.

Mr. HAY. Is it not a fact that under this provision of $2,500 for books of reference, etc., they can expend out of that $2,500 any amount they please for any kind of books they please?

Mr. HEMENWAY. No.

Mr. HAY. Why not?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will the gentleman read the item?

Mr. HAY. You do not limit them?

Mr. HEMENWAY. It is evident that the gentleman has not read the bill.

Mr. HAY. I have read the bill.

Mr. HEMENWAY (reading). "Including the purchase of professional and scientific books, law books, books of reference, periodicals, blank books, pamphlets, maps, newspapers."

Mr. HAY. Does that mean "professional" periodicals?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Why, certainly.

Mr. HAY. Why not say so?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Why, we do it.

Mr. HAY. Oh, no.

Mr. HULL. Does not the gentleman from Indiana want to conform to the army bill and put in the word "technical?"

Mr. HEMENWAY. I did not put in that amendment; it was put in by a member of your own committee.

Mr. HAY. I suggest that you comply with your own suggestion and say that so much money will be expended for newspapers and periodicals, and comply with the suggestion that you insisted we should make in the army bill.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do not say that they shall not have the right to subscribe for newspapers.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman says that they have got to do that, because they have advertisements in the newspapers and have got to take them in order to see that the advertisements appear in those newspapers.

Mr. HEMENWAY. And for the other reasons that I gave. The Bureau of Statistics is in this Department, and the Bureau of Navigation is there, and there are thirteen or fourteen divisions——

Mr. HAY. You say that the Bureau of Navigation is there?

Mr. HEMENWAY. The Bureau of Navigation is there, and there are thirteen or fourteen divisions covered by the Bureau of Labor.

Mr. HAY. I did not know that the Bureau of Navigation was there.

Mr. BOUTELL. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes.

Mr. HAY. I thought I had the floor.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I had the floor and yielded to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. BOUTELL. Will the gentleman from Virginia kindly yield?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. BOUTELL. In order, perhaps, to put as speedy an end as possible to this controversy and satisfy the gentleman from Virginia, I would like to call attention to this one expression of Thomas Jefferson——

Mr. HAY. I did not suppose that the gentleman could call attention to anything more after what he said the other day.

Mr. BOUTELL. Thomas Jefferson said, in writing to Edward Carrington:

> The basis of our governments being the opinion of the people, the very first object should be to keep that right; and were it left to me to decide whether we should have a government without newspapers or newspapers without a government, I should not hesitate a moment to prefer the latter.

I think that is good Democratic doctrine.

Mr. HAY. If that throws any light, it can only throw light upon the mind of the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has again expired.

Mr. HAY. Well, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman will allow, I will move to strike out the last word and will take but a minute or two and then yield the balance of the time to him. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations there is a strong question as to whether his provision of the twenty-five hundred dollar limit applies to anything more than newspapers. I suggest that he amend by adding, after the word "dollars," "for all the foregoing."

Mr. HEMENWAY. I will say to the gentleman from New York that the Comptroller has passed upon this two or three times and holds that it applies to all these.

Mr. PAYNE. I suppose that makes the law for the present Comptroller, but it is not a sensible construction of the language.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I think it is.

Mr. PAYNE. Then, I want to ask the gentleman whether "professional and scientific" applies to anything more than the word "books," or whether it goes on down through the item?

Mr. HAY. That is a point I suggested all the time.

Mr. PAYNE. It will hardly apply to blank books.

Mr. HEMENWAY. You can not apply that to the newspapers and possibly not to periodicals, because there is the Bureau of Statistics, the Bureau of Labor; they can not conduct the business of those great bureaus without reading the newspapers of the country.

Mr. PAYNE. I agree with the gentleman; I think it is utterly impossible.

Mr. HEMENWAY. It is a wholly different proposition for the War Department, the Navy Department, or some other Department which does not need them for their official purposes.

Mr. PAYNE. That is the reason I asked the question. I did not know but what the Comptroller had decided that it applied also to the newspapers.

Mr. HAY. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if the Bureau of Statistics relies upon newspapers for their statistics?

Mr. PAYNE. I suppose for market prices, yes. I do not see where they can get them elsewhere. The Bureau of Labor relies for information upon strikes and matters of that kind upon newspapers as well as other information they can get.

Mr. HAY. I am surprised to know it.

Mr. PAYNE. I suppose it is impossible for them to get along without having a large number of newspapers to gather their statistics from, such as may be of use to them. They must do that.

Mr. HAY. Of newspapers?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. HAY. The same argument would apply as to the Navy or the Army or any other Department of the Government, that they rely for their information upon what appears in the newspapers.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not think so; but we will cross that bridge when we come to it on the naval bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Virginia, as I agreed to do.

Mr. HAY. Well, I was going to get it in my own right.

I withdraw the amendment to strike out the word "newspapers," and move to insert, in line 3, page 45, before the word "newspapers," the word "professional."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> On page 45, line 3, before the word "newspapers" insert the word "professional."

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAY. Certainly.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I want to ask the gentleman, with the word "professional" before the word "newspapers," what newspapers they can buy?

Mr. HAY. Any newspapers of that character.

Mr. HEMENWAY. What is a professional newspaper as applied to this Department of Commerce and Labor?

Mr. HAY. You might call the Scientific American a professional newspaper.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Well, as applied to the labor item?

Mr. HAY. Labor organizations have a great many publications.

Mr. HEMENWAY. As applied to the Bureau of Corporations, what would be professional?

Mr. HAY. I do not know that corporations have any professional newspapers. They seem to have control of a great many newspapers. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEMENWAY. If your amendment is adopted, what newspapers could the Bureau of Corporations buy?

Mr. HAY. What would they want of the newspapers? What statistics could they get from them generally about corporations?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I want to be recognized a minute in opposition to this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The House can see how—I was going to say how ridiculous this amendment would be. Here is a Department of Commerce and Labor, which has its different bureaus—the Bureau of Statistics, the Bureau of Labor, the Bureau of Navigation, the Bureau of Corporations, and all these great bureaus that must have daily newspapers. It is absolutely necessary for them to have the current news. Under the amendment which the gentleman has offered they could not buy them. I think the amendment offered by the gentleman ought to be defeated.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Chairman, I feel very much as does the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. It seems to me that we are quibbling a good deal about matters of not much consequence. We are dealing here with a Department the head of which has had the candor to ask the Appropriations Committee for just what he wanted. He is the only one, as I understand it from the members of the committee, who asked for coachmen [illegible], and the head of a Department who goes before the [illegible] with so much candor ought certainly to be trusted in the [illegible] of buying newspapers, and who knows but that he may want the newspapers to advertise for the trusts? [Laughter.]

The enforcement of the trust legislation is committed to his Department. I think he ought to be afforded every facility, every opportunity to execute the law as he says he will. He appeared one other evening at the banquet given to the boards of trade in this city, I think, as the spokesman of the President, to present the President's greetings, and in discussing this question of the execution of trust legislation committed to him he said that he wanted the gentlemen before him to understand that these laws would be sanely and conservatively executed.

Now, a man who shows so much discretion, so much care and candor in public affairs, ought to be trusted with a few dollars to expend for newspapers.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> On page 45, line 15, insert "for rent and necessary expenses of the United States shipping commissioners' offices, $6,000."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. To that, Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the point of order in this case, which I suppose the gentleman from Alabama intends to reserve, is that the appropriation is not in accordance with existing law. It is precisely because this appropriation is in accordance with existing law that I offer the amendment. The law specifically requires that the rent and necessary office expenses of United States shipping commissioners shall be paid out of the Treasury. That requirement has been confirmed by the Supreme Court in an opinion handed down by Justice Shiras in the case of The United States against James C. Reed. It has subsequently been confirmed by special statutory requirement to the effect that these expenses should be paid by the United States Government.

And yet year after year the Commissioner of Navigation has sent in these expenses in his estimates, and year after year the Committee on Appropriations has simply refused to appropriate the money. Now, I am perfectly aware that it is by no means unusual for the Committee on Appropriations to override the law and refuse to appropriate for expenses provided for in existing law; but in this case there is no economy whatever in such a course, because year after year these shipping commissioners go to the Court of Claims and get judgment in their favor for the necessary and legal expenses of their offices. Not one cent is gained by the Government, and a great deal is lost in defending these cases in the Court of Claims, while the shipping commissioners are put to unnecessary expense to get their money. Now, if it was a question of salary it would be one thing. The officer who has less money appropriated for his salary than the law entitles him to has no remedy, but when it is a case of expenses incurred for the Government he can go before the Court of Claims and get his judgment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of this committee to page 59 of the bill that we are considering. Under the heading "Judgments, Court of Claims," a certain sum is appropriated to pay for judgments in the Court of Claims, as specified in two documents, one of which I hold in my hand, Document No. 275. Three of the claims that are being paid in this very bill under that paragraph are the claims of Robert F. Morse, shipping commissioner at Bath, Me., Joseph M. Dickey, now railroad commissioner of the State of New York and formerly shipping commissioner of the port of New York, and the estate of Ellwood Becker, deceased, the three claims amounting in all to about $7,000. They were adjudged on December 14 last, and we are paying for them in this very bill. Every shipping commissioner whose expenses we cut off will go before the Court of Claims under the decision in the case of The United States v. Reed, and he is going to get this very amount which I ask you to put into the bill.

We shall have to pay it in the long run, and in addition we must go to all the expense of defending those suits. We shall take right out of the pockets of our shipping commissioners their necessary expenses for the litigation in our Court of Claims.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, one of the reasons why I shall insist upon the point of order is that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] did not appear before this committee to make any attempt to procure this appropriation or give an explanation why it should be made. My point of order against the appropriation coming now is that this is an urgent deficiency bill, and the item he contends for would not properly be an item on this bill, even if he had appeared before this committee and attempted to have it put on. This is not an urgency item, and it would naturally go on the sundry civil bill and not on this bill if the appropriation committee appropriated it.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, my item covers a deficiency already incurred. As a matter of fact, I went to the Committee on Appropriations——

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will the gentleman yield for a minute? I will ask the Chair if the point of order has been passed upon.

The CHAIRMAN. It has not. The gentleman from Alabama reserved the point of order, but the Chair understands now that he makes the point that this is not a deficiency appropriation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And especially an urgent deficiency appropriation.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I submit that it is a deficiency appropriation. Those expenses have all been incurred and have not been taken care of by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts to the fact that his amendment does not state for what nor the time these expenses were incurred and for which this $6,000 is to be appropriated. The amendment says simply for expenses of United States shipping commissioners' offices, $6,000.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, if necessary I will insert the words "existing deficiencies;" but I submit that the amendment when read in connection with the whole bill renders no such wording necessary. I will, however, make that addition to my amendment and request that the Clerk add it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Massachusetts to ask that this amendment be inserted in line 15, page 45, as indicated on the amendment?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Under "Contingent expenses," at the end of line 14.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has indicated it was at the end of line 15.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Well, at the beginning of line 15.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

[illegible] of United States shipping commissioners [illegible]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, as that amendment now reads it is not germane to the paragraph where it is inserted, and I also make that point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the fact that this is not offered as a new paragraph, but that it is a continuation of the paragraph just read, after the word "dollars" in line 14.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, it is not germane, Mr. Chairman, to that portion of the bill that we are reading. That paragraph and that section of the bill relate to the contingent expenses in the office of the Secretary of Labor, if I have the right place in the bill. It does not relate to either rent or to the payment of salaries of officials.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I was not aware that I had offered it as an amendment to any particular paragraph of the bill. I offered it as an independent provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman to offer it as an addition to the paragraph ending on line 14, page 45. The gentleman now offers it as an additional paragraph to come in after line 14. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment as modified by the gentleman is in order. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment ought not to be adopted for the reason that it has not been considered by any committee of the House. There is nothing in the amendment to inform the House as to whom this money is to be paid to, or what for, or why. In addition to that, here are judgments, as the gentleman states, of the Court of Claims, arising out of this same transaction. We do not know whether the judgments included in this item are the same judgments that we appropriate for here in the bill or not. No item of this kind ought to go upon an appropriation bill without first being considered by some committee of this House. This item has not been considered. It has not been referred in the regular way for consideration by the Committee on Appropriations. There was no estimate for it considered by the committee in making up this bill.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Do I understand the chairman of the committee to say that this was not included in the estimate of the United States shipping commissioners?

Mr. HEMENWAY. For the next fiscal year there are some estimates; but nothing at all on this bill.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I submit that in the last estimate this matter which this amendment of mine covers was specifically estimated, and I think that the former chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, now sitting on my right [Mr. CANNON], will bear me out in that statement.

Mr. HEMENWAY. That may be true, but that was at the last Congress. At this session there was no estimate on this subject submitted to the committee having in charge the urgent deficiency bill.

I repeat that the amendment offered by the gentleman has not been considered by any committee. There is nothing in the amendment indicating what it is for, except that it is to cover certain indefinite deficiencies not set out in the amendment and which Congress does not know anything about, and does not know whether or not they are included in items of appropriation in this bill for judgments of the Court of Claims. Certainly it would not be wise for Congress to adopt any proposition of this kind without knowing something about it. I sincerely hope that the amendment will be rejected and that the item will go to the proper committee to be regularly considered and reported upon before being adopted.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Do I understand the gentleman to suppose that the proceedings in our Court of Claims are so rapid that any of the shipping commissioners' expenses of last year can possibly be included in the judgments of the court in the cases of Morse and Dickey and Baker?

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts, it was rejected.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I desire to offer an amendment to insert, after the word "homes," in line 21, page 45, the following words: "and designated headquarters."

Mr. HEMENWAY. I make the point of order that this is a change of law.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Will the gentleman reserve that point for a moment?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I reserve it if the gentleman wishes to be heard.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The point to which I desire to call the attention of the committee is that without these words of limitation this provision will clearly grant to these inspectors $4 additional pay for every day in the year. I do not think that such is the intention of the Committee on Appropriations nor of the Committee of the Whole.

These men will always be away from their homes as soon as appointed; but they will be at headquarters most of the time, and as this is a per diem in lieu of an expense incurred, I think that a condition ought to be fixed in the law.

I confess that I am not familiar just now with what the law is; but I believe it is the clear intention of the law that the $4 a day in lieu of subsistence is not additional salary, unless the person is away from both his home and his headquarters in the discharge of his duties.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I am not quite sure, Mr. Chairman, discussing the merits of this proposition, whether or not this would be a good provision; but certainly it ought to be considered very carefully before being placed on this bill, and as this is only a deficiency bill, and this item will come up on the regular appropriation bill, I shall insist on my point of order until I can investigate more fully as to what the effect of this change would be. It is certainly a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman whether there is any law at present specifying these salaries?

Mr. HEMENWAY. No law except such as is enacted in the appropriation bill. The current appropriation law has the language which appears in the deficiency bill. I know of no law other than the law fixed by the current appropriation law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that this amendment is in order. It is merely descriptive of the purpose for which the money is to be appropriated. It does not create any new duties or any new offices. It merely amplifies what is already required under this provision. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. OVERSTREET) there were—ayes 47, noes 8.

Mr. HEMENWAY asked for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. HEMENWAY and Mr. OVERSTREET.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 78, noes 41.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter the clerk of the supreme court of the District of Columbia shall account for official emoluments in the same manner as clerks of the United States circuit and district courts.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, at the request of my colleague [Mr. CRUMPACKER], who is unavoidably detained, and for him, I make the point of order against lines 9, 10, 11, and 12 of page 50 as being contrary to existing law. I am ready to cite to the Chair the provisions of the District code passed in 1901, and the provisions of the law of 1875 governing the conduct of the clerks with reference to their emoluments.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point that this changes existing law?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That it changes existing law, and I have for the inspection of the Chair, or will read to the Chair, the code provisions which were passed in 1901 which govern the conduct of clerks with reference to their emoluments. The purpose of these lines in this bill is to have them governed by the general law of 1875. I will send a marked copy to the Chair. The purpose of this act is to make the provision of the general law applicable to the clerks, instead of the special law that was passed in the District Code of 1901.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair that on the face of the paragraph it is legislation involving an accounting for official emoluments different from what the law now contemplates, and from the statute which the gentleman has sent to the desk it is evident that it is a change of existing law. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 3317. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant right of way for pipe lines through Indian lands; and

S. R. 36. Joint resolution accepting a reproduction of the bust of Washington from certain citizens of the Republic of France, and [illegible] the thanks of Congress to the donors therefor.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to concurrent resolution No. 13.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to Senate concurrent resolution No. 21, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PLATT of New York, Mr. MCCOMAS, and Mr. GORMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay amount found due on account of canceling machines, fiscal year 1902, as certified in House Document No. 366, of this session, $225.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, reserving the point of order, I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill to explain that item just read.

Mr. HEMENWAY. For canceling machines?

Mr. OVERSTREET. To pay some one for canceling machines, lines 15 to 18, inclusive. What I desire to know is whether that is a clear deficiency or whether the item has been passed upon by any Auditor.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I suggest to the gentleman that the item is an amount found due by the Auditor for the Post-Office Department, an audited account, and so certified.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Is it a certification, or simply a report from the Auditor?

Mr. HEMENWAY. It is a certification of an amount found due by the accounting officers of the Post-Office Department. If the gentleman thinks it ought not to be paid, a motion to strike it out is in order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not want it stricken out if it is a proper item; but I should like to inquire of the gentleman whether or not the hearings before his committee disclosed the fact that this property was actually purchased at a proper price and is now in use.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I refer the gentleman to Document No. 366, and can only say that the Auditor certifies that the amount is due. As to whether the item was purchased at a proper price or not I do not know. We simply have that certificate of the Auditor of an audited account sent down for appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

[illegible] clerks appropriated for in the [illegible] fiscal year is hereby [illegible] class 4, at $1,000 [illegible] class 3, at $1,000 [illegible] class 2, at $1,000 [illegible] the aggregate sum [illegible] the Railway Mail Service in the post-office appropriation act of March 3, 1903.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 52, line 21, strike out all after the word "allow" down to and including the word "each," in line 3, page 53, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Two thousand six hundred and fifty-six clerks of class 2, at not exceeding $1,000 a year each, and 780 clerks of class 1, at not exceeding $900 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay of laborers at division headquarters, rural free-delivery service, $205,44.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill to give some explanation in reference to the pay of laborers at these division headquarters.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Why, it was by some oversight in the classification of the employees of the Department. I will give Mr. Bristow's explanation. You will find this on page 163 of these hearings:

In the last post-office bill there was an appropriation for six clerks, at $900. Formerly they had been laborers, at $900. I suppose in the provision that it was just intended to make them clerks instead of laborers, but the Comptroller has decided differently, and the Civil Service Commission would not classify them. So they were dropped out and new clerks had to be put in their places. These clerks had worked until this much money was due them before we knew that.

In other words, this appropriation bill provides for the pay of these laborers who were used as clerks. The laborers went ahead and did the work, and it was ascertained that they were not allowed the salary until the bill was passed by Congress or is reported by the Post-Office Committee. So we pay these clerks for the time they did the work. This appropriation is necessary.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay amounts found due by the accounting officers of the Treasury and certified in House Document No. 366 of this session on account of the rural free-delivery service for fiscal years as follows:

For the fiscal year 1902, $[illegible];

For the fiscal year 1903, $21,026.37.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Reserving the point of order, I would like to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill if these items have been certified by the Auditor?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I call the gentleman's attention to the reading of the bill.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I know the bill says they have been certified.

Mr. HEMENWAY. You will find that they have been audited by the accounting officers of the Treasury and certified in House Document 366 of this session, on account of free rural-delivery service for the fiscal year. I refer the gentleman to the document for the information.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The gentleman has the document in his hand. What I want to know is whether or not Document 366 says that they have been certified by the proper accounting officers who have passed on the facts and know the facts, or whether it is simply the report of an officer that they need the money? If it is a certification then I have no objection.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The bill so states.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The bill so states, but what does the report say?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Well, I suggest to the gentleman that it would not so state in the bill unless it was found that it was true as was stated, and if the gentleman still makes further inquiry I refer him to the document to which I have heretofore called attention. It is Document 366. Mr. Chairman——

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

For mileage of Members of the House of Representatives and Delegates from Territories for the second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress, $145,000.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Before that is read ——

Mr. MADDOX. I make the point of order on that.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I tried to stop the Clerk in the reading of the paragraph before we got to it.

Mr. MADDOX. It is understood that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I tried to stop the reading, but did not succeed in doing it. I would like to have the attention of the House. Before the words "House of Representatives," on page 58, before line 1, I ask unanimous consent that the following be inserted, simply to correct the bill before we come to this item.

By an oversight in preparing the bill, or printing the bill, the mileage for the Senate was left out. Now, that ought to go into the bill, so that the point of order can be made against the whole item—the two items taken together—and any discussion that may occur may be made on the whole item under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the amendment which he sends to the Clerk's desk may be inserted before line 1.

On page 58, before line 1, insert the following:

"SENATE.

"For mileage of Senators for the second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress, $45,000."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move to strike out the entire paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia made the point of order against this paragraph.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I had risen for the same purpose. Does the Chair recognize the gentleman from Georgia?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had recognized the gentleman from Georgia upon the conclusion of the reading of the paragraph to make the point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, I am aware of the fact that this point of order was raised to a similar section in an appropriation bill in the Fifty-third Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Georgia answer the Chair a question for information? The Chair understands the gentleman's point of order includes the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, and also the paragraph that has just been read.

Mr. MADDOX. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph as amended with the provision for mileage for the Senate.

Mr. MADDOX. I say, Mr. Chairman, I am aware of the fact that a decision was made by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole in the Fifty-third Congress holding that this same provision was in order at that time. I, Mr. Chairman, am not satisfied with that decision—at least, with the reasons given when the decision was rendered.

It may be that it is not subject to the point of order, but certainly the reasoning given there, or, in other words, the begging or dodging the question, as it seems to me, does not carry conviction to my mind or to anybody else, I think, who has given due consideration to this ruling, that it is at all conclusive and that this could stand as a precedent. I would like for some chairman to give a better reasoning for it. Now, the reason given in that opinion was simply this: Mr. Hayes, I believe, of Iowa, at that time argued against this point of order that was made by Mr. Lynch. The Chair, ruling upon that point, said that inasmuch as we had diverted the sum originally appropriated for the regular session of Congress to be used, or, in other words, had made it available in the extra session, therefore that there being no question about the present session being a regular session, just as in this present instance a regular session, that we were entitled to the mileage of that regular session.

Thereupon the Chairman decided that point—the point of order not well taken. He did not take into consideration when he decided the point as to whether the amount or the sum that had been appropriated for the regular session had been diverted to the extra session for which we were not entitled. They proposed to bolster up the decision by getting a letter from the Auditor at that time. The Auditor also dodges the question and says this thing being a regular session that they are entitled to the mileage. We all know that. The statute is perfectly plain upon that subject, that each regular session we are entitled to the mileage. The question is, though, are we, when we divert the regular mileage for the payment of a special or extraordinary session, to be allowed to come in here now and appropriate for a regular session when we have taken the mileage from the regular session, put it in our pockets and have spent it.

Now, that is the question I want to hear the Chair rule on. I apprehend that the Chair probably will have some trouble upon this point—that is, the question as to whether the extraordinary session merged into the regular session and made one continuous session, or, in other words, whether there was any length of time between the extraordinary session and the regular session by which we can claim that there have been two sessions of Congress. Now, so much for that point of order. Now the question is, if I may be permitted to go forward on this line, Is it expedient, gentlemen, to pass this resolution giving to ourselves this extra money?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield to me for a moment, I want to ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment to the item under consideration.

Mr. MADDOX. All right.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And let it be pending to the proposition which the gentleman is now discussing.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to have pending, subject to the point of order——

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That any Member of the Congress so desiring may cover any money due by him on account of this appropriation into the Treasury, and it shall be accounted for by the Secretary of the Treasury as a miscellaneous item.

[Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio? The Chair hears none.

This question does not involve the merits of the proposition, and the Chair hopes that gentlemen will confine themselves to a discussion of the point of order.

Mr. MADDOX. I would like to be heard on the merits, too.

The CHAIRMAN. There will be an opportunity for that, possibly, if the paragraph is retained in the bill.

Mr. MADDOX. I have often, not only in this House, but in other legislative bodies, heard that cheap amendment offered, such as has been offered by the gentleman from Ohio, before. I know I need not draw this money without the amendment, so far as that is concerned. I can exercise that right without any advice from the gentleman from Ohio or even of this House. That is my privilege to do, and it is my privilege to take it if I wish after this House has determined that it is legal. I am not proposing to set myself up here as better than any other Member of this House or that my judgment is better than anybody else's.

I want to say to the Chair that the Fifty-third Congress was not the first time that this question has been presented to the Congress of the United States. On more than two occasions that I know of—in which the records will bear me out—this proposition was voted down. As I say, the point is whether this is a regular session or an extraordinary session, or whether the extra session is merged into the regular session.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Georgia that if this is a regular session—the second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress—then there is authority of law for the appropriation carried in this paragraph?

Mr. MADDOX. The point I make to the Chair is simply this, that the appropriation made for the regular session was diverted to the special session, and the question now is as to whether this clause in the bill making a new appropriation for mileage for the regular session when we have already received that sum which was appropriated for the regular session. In other words, can we draw mileage for an extra session which was appropriated for the regular session and then vote ourselves another mileage for the regular session?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD said: Mr. Chairman, if in order, I would like to make a few suggestions in support of the point of order. I wish to state at the outset, Mr. Chairman, that I have not a word to say about the propriety or the impropriety of the pending proposition. Whether, if it reaches that stage, Members vote to pass the bill as it stands or vote to strike out the proposition is a question for every single individual Member, and I do not think he is to be criticised or reflected upon, either directly or indirectly, by any Member of the House. It is purely a personal proposition. I shall not spend a moment on the merits, or morality, or equity of the appropriation. In my judgment—of course I may be wrong—the appropriation is not authorized by existing law.

The appropriation provides for mileage for the second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress, and, in my opinion, the only question raised by the point of order, or that can properly be raised or debated in committee is whether or not this is a second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress, or whether we are now in the first session of the Fifty-eighth Congress.

The history of the situation is simply this: During the last term of Congress an appropriation was made for mileage for the Congress that would meet on the first Monday of December, 1903. Congress met on the 9th day of November, 1903, under a call of the President for what may be termed and sometimes is termed a "special session," or an "extraordinary session"—and I may say right here that the Constitution does not recognize any distinction between sessions; it does not refer to a regular session or a special session or an extraordinary session.

What is termed popularly a "regular" session, to be sure, begins on the first Monday of December of each year, because, unless otherwise provided, that is when Congress assembles. Congress is assembled when an extraordinary occasion exists under the proclamation of the President, and Congress did then assemble as the Fifty-eighth Congress. It is not mentioned in the Constitution as an "extraordinary" or "special" or "extra" session. It simply says "he may, on extraordinary occasions, convene both Houses, or either of them."

When this Congress met on the 9th day of November, or shortly after, by joint resolution, very properly it diverted the appropriation for mileage made for the Congress that was to meet on the first Monday of December, 1903, to the payment of the mileage of the Congress that met on the 9th day of November, 1903. But it left no appropriation for mileage for this Congress, assuming now that there is a distinction between the two sessions.

The precedent referred to in the Fifty-third Congress is not in the slightest degree in point. It hasn't anything to do with the case pending here, because there was in that case two separate and independent sessions. The law now provides that an appropriation for mileage can be made for each regular session, and the only question is whether the session we are now engaged in is a regular session. It does not make any difference how many days of the session we have had or how short the interregnum was if there was an interregnum, we are entitled to mileage for the regular session, in my judgment, nor if that is the fact do I see any legal reason why a man should be criticised for voting for it.

There is no question but that Congress has the power to appropriate or divert the mileage appropriated for a session beginning on the first Monday of December to one beginning on the 9th day of November.

Then the question recurs, there being no appropriation for mileage in addition thereto, will it now appropriate for mileage for the session that is alleged to have begun on the first Monday of December?

That raises the specific question as to whether or not we are now in a continuous session or whether there are clearly two sessions. If two sessions, this appropriation is correct; it is authorized by existing law and it ought to be made, and every man can properly receive it. Now, if there is a continuous session, then there is only one session, then there is no law that authorizes the appropriation of two mileages for any one session. What is mileage for a session? Mileage, I take it, is the sum that enables a Member of Congress to attend at the beginning and return to his home at the end of a session of Congress. Everybody concedes, no matter what the other facts may be, that in this case this Congress, or, at least, Congress, did meet on the 9th day of November, 1903, and continued its session, in any event, until 12 o'clock noon on the 7th day of December, 1903, so that, of course, as a matter of fact, the mileage extended until that time.

We were paid for coming here on the 9th day of November, and we were paid for returning on the 7th day of December at 12 o'clock, and if there is an interregnum we would equally be entitled to pay under existing law for returning at the same 12 o'clock to attend the regular session. In my judgment the only question is, Is there one continuous session or, under the circumstances, are there two? In other words, is there an interregnum? In my opinion, and I may be wrong about it, there was no interregnum. Under what circumstances does Congress meet? What constitutes it together? Well, the provisions of the Constitution: and what are they? In the first place, this provision, which provides:

The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meeting shall be on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by law appoint a different date.

In this case Congress has not by law appointed any different date, so that, so far as the discussion at this stage is concerned, that does not disturb us; but there is another way by which Congress can constitutionally meet. That is provided for in section 3 of Article II, prescribing the duties of the President:

He may, on extraordinary occasions, convene both Houses, or either of them, and in case of disagreement between them, with respect to the time of adjournment, he may adjourn them to such time as he shall think proper.

That is not a final adjournment, but simply an adjournment "to such time as he shall think proper." On extraordinary occasions he can call Congress in session. It is not an extraordinary session by the language of the Constitution, it is not an extra session by the language of the Constitution, but the extraordinary occasion intervening, then the President can exercise the power to call, for instance, the Fifty-eighth Congress into session. Congress having been constitutionally called to meet on the 9th day of November, 1903, and being in session, its session can not be terminated and ended except in one of two ways. What are they? First, by adjournment of the body itself; second, by operation of law.

The only question here is, then, whether after the 9th day of November, 1903, Congress had adjourned, in the first instance, on its own motion. Everybody concedes that it had not. There has not been any attempt to adjourn without day finally from that time until to-day. The only other question left is, Was Congress terminated by operation of law? because that is the only other way by which it can be terminated, and that brings us to this proposition: Does the fact that the Constitution requires Congress, if it is not in session, to meet on the first Monday in December of itself terminate a Congress that is then in session? In my judgment it does not. What is the purpose, object, and intent of that provision of the Constitution, and its only purpose, object, and intent? Simply to call Congress together in order that it may be in session as a Congress. It is simply for the purpose of calling it together.

The Constitution designates a specific day in order that Congress may "assemble at least once in every year." The assembling "at least once in every year" is the real essential and sole purpose of the specific constitutional day of meeting.

Now, Congress was already together and in session when that time intervened. It met on the 9th day of November, 1903, and continued in session, and there was no occasion for it to meet in order to begin session, because it was here in session. The only purpose that can be accomplished by this provision of the Constitution as to the time of meeting is to cause Congress to meet and begin a session. That is its only purpose and object. In this instance on the 7th day of December, 1903, this provision had nothing upon which to operate, as the Fifty-eighth Congress had already been and was then in session. The object of this provision had already been accomplished. The Fifty-eighth Congress had actually assembled "at least once" in the year 1903, and the only essential mandate of the Constitution had been obeyed. It is a familiar legal principle that when the reason for a law fails, the law fails and the rule ceases to operate. If the Fifty-eighth Congress had not been in session when the hour of 12 o'clock noon, December 7, 1903, arrived, it would have been its duty to meet and begin its session; but it had no occasion to meet for that purpose, either constructively or actually, because it had already met and was in session.

How can it with any propriety be said that it is the duty of Congress to meet when it has already met? It is a legal absurdity to say that a body that is in session, must meet either constructively or actually, in order to be in session. In order to hold that the session of the Fifty-eighth Congress, which began on November 9, 1903, terminated by operation of law at 12 o'clock noon December 7, 1903, it must be held that although the Fifty-eighth Congress was in full constitutional session at 12 o'clock noon on that day, it was terminated and the session ended in order that, at the same instant of time, the same Congress should be in like full constitutional session—being in session, by operation of law, by one act, and at the same moment of time a session is ended and begun in order that it may be in session when, as a matter of fact, the session is actually continuous. What is there to justify the assertion of this extremely fatal and attenuated technical legal proposition? This constructive termination of a session hardly approaches the dignity of a legal fiction, and the law abhors a fiction. It may perhaps tolerate a fiction in order to accomplish some substantial purpose that can not be attained in any other way, but not otherwise. Here the fiction was entirely unnecessary, as the essential result, a session "at least once in every year," had been already achieved. What is there about the Fifty-eighth Congress, that would have assembled at 12 o'clock noon December 7, if it had not already been assembled, that differentiates it from the same Fifty-eighth Congress that met November 9? Absolutely nothing. Has the latter any constitutional power not possessed by the former? None. Can it do anything that the other could not do? Nothing. Is there any legal reason why one is superior to or supersedes the other; why the former should give way to the latter? Absolutely none.

It must be borne in mind that these provisions of the Constitution relating to calling sessions of Congress are in no sense analogous to the by-laws of a corporation providing for the calling of meetings of the corporation. If they were, the provisions requiring Congress to meet on the first Monday of December might be thought parallel to the by-law providing for the annual meeting of the corporation at which officers are to be elected, and such other business transacted as may be specified in the call. Unless so specified, no other business can be transacted. The call for a special meeting of a corporation must specify the business to be transacted at the meeting, and the usual business of the annual meeting, such as the election of officers, could not be transacted at such meeting, because such business is by the by-laws to be considered at a specific meeting, and notice thereof would not be given in the call.

In the case of Congress, however, whether called by the President under the Constitution or meeting at the time specified in the Constitution or at the time appointed by Congress under the Constitution, it meets with the same plenary powers, and is in no sense limited or restrained as to the acts which it can do, by the time when, or the manner in which, it is called together, and there is, therefore, no legal reason why the Fifty-eighth Congress, meeting at the time fixed by the Constitution, in session at noon on December 7, can be held to displace or supersede the Fifty-eighth Congress in session at and prior to that time, meeting equally at the time fixed by the Constitution by virtue of the President's call. In order to overrule the point of order some such legal reason must be given. How is it that Congress, that has the power to change the time fixed for meeting by the Constitution, has not the power to continue its own session beyond the time thus fixed? It has elected to so continue it in this instance.

For the purpose of testing the principle, let us assume that the legislative day of December 5 extended without any recess until 12 o'clock noon on the 7th, at which time a roll call was in progress. Would the roll call be stopped and the session ended because if Congress had not met and was not in session it would have met at that time? If continuing after 12 o'clock, must Congress stop its business and, although it continues to sit, begin anew the consideration of the measure pending, or at least begin a new roll call? This would be the result if the session ended, as that would end the consideration of business pending. Will the Chair hold that a roll call could not be completed under such circumstances, and would not such a holding involve a palpable legal absurdity? The assumed condition might easily occur and is clearly involved in the operation of the proposition, and the Chair must so hold, I submit, in order to overrule the point of order.

So far as the action of Congress is concerned upon this question, the records disclose the following facts. The second session of the First Congress adjourned to meet on the first Monday of December next, which was the constitutional day. The Journal of the session that met on that day shows, however, that they met "on the day appointed by the two Houses for the meeting of the present session," instead of on the day appointed by the Constitution therefor.

In the following instances Congress met in session by virtue of the date fixed by it, by law, under the provision of the Constitution allowing them "to appoint a different day," and continued in session beyond the day that Congress would otherwise have met, as provided in the Constitution, on the first Monday of December:

The first session of the Second Congress;
The second session of the Second Congress;
The second session of the Third Congress;
The second session of the Fifth Congress;
The second session of the Sixth Congress;

The second session of the Eighth Congress;
The second session of the Tenth Congress;
The second session of the Eleventh Congress;
The second session of the Twelfth Congress;
The second session of the Fifteenth Congress; and
The second session of the Sixteenth Congress.

I do not contend, may it please the Chair, that these meetings of Congress under these circumstances are precisely in point upon my present contention, because Congress met then at the time fixed by law, which eliminated, under the terms of the Constitution, the constitutional time fixed for the meeting. But there are other instances that are precisely in point. In the following instances Congress was called in session by a proclamation earlier than the day fixed by the Constitution, and continued in session on that day and beyond that day without making any reference to that date or taking any notice of it, and there was no intimation that Congress was instantaneously adjourned and convened by operation of law:

The first session of the Eighth Congress, the first session of the Tenth Congress, the first session of the Twelfth Congress, and the third session of the Thirteenth Congress. Here are four cases in which Congress, if it may please the Chair, in the early history of the Republic gave a contemporaneous construction of this constitutional provision, and every one of them in the line of, and in harmony with, our contention sustaining the point of order. It is well settled that early and practically contemporaneous construction by legislative action is entitled to much greater weight than action that is remote.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Maine state whether or not any question whatever was raised in the cases he refers to as to the termination of the sessions preceding the regular sessions?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Not as the records disclose. In those cases the question was not even raised. The men in the early days of the Republic assumed that when Congress, called in session by the proclamation of the President, continued beyond the constitutional time otherwise fixed, that it was a continuous session and made one session, and the question was not even raised or suggested.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Maine permit one question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine submit to an interruption?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I have not heard all of the gentleman's argument, but this occurs to me as being a pertinent question: All of the bills, all of the resolutions of this session, all of the Journals, are as of the second session?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress. How can there be a second session of a body which has not had a first session completed?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will answer that question by asking another one. How can the clerks of the House or the officers of the House change a principle of constitutional law by labeling the bills or the records or the Journals of the House? Of course it tends to show what their opinion was, but in my judgment they can not thus change the constitutional law.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. On the line of your argument I want to bring this to your attention: Suppose this Congress now in session should continue until the first Monday in next December, up until 12 o'clock, and then proceed on until the 4th day of next March. Mileage being a sessional appropriation and not an annual appropriation, what would be your opinion as to the mileage for the next session?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The same proposition would apply to it. There would not be any next session so long as this session continues in session, without an adjournment or without a termination by operation of law.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I should like to ask the gentleman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I should be glad to do this, if the gentleman will allow me: I should like to conclude the suggestions that I have to make and then I will answer any questions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Now, I want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that we not only have four Congresses between the Eighth and the Thirteenth where the construction that is now suggested was adopted, I concede without question or controversy—and I certainly have no desire to mislead any Member on this proposition—we not only have four Congresses in the early history of Congress, but we have two cases where Congress has substantially by its action adopted this proposition. The first is the Fortieth Congress. The first session of the Fortieth Congress met as appointed by law on the 4th day of March, 1867, and was in session on November 26, 1867, when the following resolution was presented in the Senate by Senator Grimes, of Iowa:

Resolved by the Senate (the House concurring), That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be authorized to adjourn their respective Houses without day on Monday, the 23d of December next, at 3 o'clock p. m.

Senator Sumner moved to amend the resolution by making the hour 12 o'clock, giving as a reason that Congress might not safely adjourn, for even so small a time, lest the President, who was thought by him to be patriotic, should improve the interval in time to issue commissions. He thought, therefore, that one session should come close up to the other, and that one should end when the other began.

His amendment was agreed to and the resolution as amended was adopted, and in pursuance thereof on Monday, the 23d of December, the presiding officers of the two Houses declared the Houses adjourned without day at 12 o'clock, and immediately thereafter they were called to order in the second session, and the roll was called by States.

Now, I ask the Chair to note this: If it had been true that by operation of law that Congress would have expired at 12 o'clock noon, was it necessary to adopt a concurrent resolution providing for adjournment at that time? Clearly not. Evidently the men who were in the Senate, Senator Sumner and Senator Grimes, assumed that without such action on the part of the Houses adjourning at that time Congress would have continued by operation of law, because otherwise there would have been no occasion for the adoption of the resolution.

Now let me go a little further, because it assumes the correctness of the legal proposition on which we rely. On October 15, 1877, the Forty-fifth Congress met in special session on the call of the President and remained in session until the first Monday in December, the day appointed by the Constitution for the regular assembling thereof. On Saturday, December 1, Mr. Fernando Wood, of New York, offered the following resolution, which was adopted by the House:

Resolved (the Senate concurring), That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be and they are hereby directed to adjourn their respective Houses without day at 3 o'clock p. m. this day.

Thereafter on that day the House took a recess until 10 o'clock a. m. of the calendar day of Monday, December 3, the day prescribed by the Constitution for the meeting of the regular session of Congress. The Senate took a recess on the same day to the same hour on December 3. At that time—December 3, at 10 a. m.—immediately on the approval of the Journal of the Senate, Mr. George F. Edmunds, of Vermont, offered this resolution, which was agreed to without debate:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the judgment of the two Houses that the present session of Congress expires by operation of law at 12 o'clock meridian this day.

That resolution, I state frankly to the Chair, is precisely in point against our contention. It was adopted in the Senate without debate; it was concurred in by the House without debate, and so far as the record discloses without the slightest consideration, investigation, or deliberation. It was, at the most, purely academic. Although Senator Edmunds was a great lawyer, in the hurry and turmoil of that stage of a session, so far as we know, the resolution may have been drawn on the spur of the moment, and may not express his well-considered opinion. But there is other action taken in the same Congress that is absolutely inconsistent with this academic declaration upon the law relating to the ending of the session of Congress.

The Senate went on after that, after this resolution had been agreed to, the resolution in relation to the declaration of the law—after that resolution had been agreed to the Senate took up the former resolution of the House as to adjournment, disagreed to it, and adopted an amendment striking out "3 o'clock p. m. this day" and inserting "11.50 a. m. the 3d of December instant," and the House concurred in the amendment. Then the Houses agreed to the usual resolution authorizing the appointment of a committee to notify the President of the United States that Congress had adjourned, and the Speaker then declared the House adjourned.

Now, I ask the Chair to note this when he comes to rule upon this question. Here is an academic resolution that passed the Senate and passed the House without debate, without deliberation, a resolution that accomplished nothing, resulted in no action of any kind; and after the passage of that resolution, although that resolution declared that Congress would expire by constitutional limitation by virtue of law, after the adoption of this resolution the two Houses, placing no confidence in their own declaration, not relying upon their legal proposition, passed the joint resolution adjourning Congress, and then adjourned in pursuance of the resolution without day and met in the next session after ten minutes. But if their academic resolution had been sound law, they would have adjourned, or the session would have terminated by operation of law, without their last resolution. If their first resolution was sound, why clearly the second was unnecessary and entirely a work of superogation. While their dictum is against us their definitive legal action is the only precedent established, is by obvious construction, precisely in point in our favor.

So I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that there is no adverse legal precedent in the history of the Congress of the United States, and I challenge the production of one that can in any sense militate against the proposition suggested in behalf of this point of order. On the other hand, every precedent sustains it. These two cases to which I have called the attention of the Chair by necessary implication adopt the legal proposition relied upon to sustain this point of order. The action of Congress during four Congresses among the early part of its history adopted this theory without any question.

As I have said, Mr. Chairman, I simply present this as a legal proposition. I have not the slightest feeling about it one way or the other. I believe, my own judgment is, that as a matter of law this appropriation for this session, one appropriation already having been made for this session, is not authorized by the existing law. I do not believe, inasmuch as this Congress never has undertaken to adjourn, that it has been terminated by the operation of any such finical, attenuated, unsubstantial, technical legal proposition as that suggested, and which must be relied upon in order to establish the alleged interim, and therefore I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the point of order should be sustained.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have been very much interested in the gentleman's argument and now will ask him if an "end" to a session of Congress is not contemplated by this provision of the Constitution. I read from the Constitutional Manual, page [illegible]:

The President shall have power to fill up all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session.

The word "end" is here used—"end of their next session"—that is, the Senate at least.

Now, suppose the President during the interim made a temporary appointment during the "recess," and the Senate refused (I do not allude to any particular case) to ratify the nominations thus made—two-thirds not voting, but a majority of the Senate or a majority of the Congress should force a continuous session—does the Constitution allow the Senate or Congress to do this? This would allow the President to foist upon the country temporary appointees whom the Senate—two-thirds—refuse to indorse, ratify.

Couple this provision of the Constitution with the other, "Congress shall meet once every year," are we not forced to conclude that sessions of Congress are ended by the Constitution and must in law at least begin and end sessions, and that Congress must meet "once every year" and must therefore end its sessions at least once "every" year, otherwise great confusion would follow.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is assuming that Congress continues in session during the whole two years.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes; that it just continues along.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Of course that would be a very violent assumption. Now, I am very glad to hear the gentleman state that he does not understand that there is any particular case to be affected by his interrogation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No; not at all, I assure the gentleman.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I have perhaps an indefinite impression there may be other cases pending elsewhere that might be affected by any suggestion we might make, and far be it from me to make any suggestion or reflection——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, no; I do not desire that at all.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. As I was saying, far be it from me to express any opinion upon a hypothetical proposition which might be construed directly or indirectly as a reflection upon another branch of Congress—a coordinate branch of this great body.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am afraid that if that remained as the law of the land and Congress were opposed to the President it could go along and refuse to confirm nominations of the President until many public and high offices would be filled by temporary or recess appointments, condemned by two-thirds of the Senate refusing to confirm them. This would be deplorable, but continuous sessions would do this very thing, it seems to me.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is just exactly what Congress did in 1867, when they adjourned at 12 o'clock noon. They did adjourn by their own action, and they accomplished the very purpose which seems to fill my friend with apprehension. I say it is possible for Congress to do it in that way also. I have no doubt of its power to accomplish the result in that way.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The President has certain rights under the Constitution, and this is one of them, and Congress, by acting in the way you say, might rob the President of his Executive prerogative.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That was a matter for that Congress which sat then, and I will not waste time commenting upon that or expressing an opinion as to the propriety of the action. That is what it did, and it is what they could do again.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman cites the Forty-fourth Congress. Was it necessary for that Congress to adjourn by joint resolution because it could not continue, owing to the fact that so far as some Members of both Houses were concerned their term of office had expired?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, your question might apply to the Senate, because the term of a Member of the House could not expire at irregular periods, of course.

Mr. SHERLEY. Say the 4th of March.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That might apply to the Senate. Well, the 4th of March would not involve the proposition so far as the first Monday in December is concerned, because it is too far removed from it.

Mr. SHERLEY. But it might apply so far as the Senate was concerned.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, you would hardly have a continuous session of the Fifty-eighth Congress after it had expired by constitutional limitation and the Fifty-ninth had come in. You could not get together the Fifty-ninth Congress by calling it during the period of the Fifty-eighth.

Mr. SHOBER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. SHOBER. Suppose by any chance—this being a hypothetical question also—suppose the President of the United States should call or had called, as he did, the Senate in special session, and had called the whole Congress of the United States together on March 5, and this Fifty-eighth Congress had remained in special session for two whole years, until the terms of the Members of the Congress had expired. I would like to ask the gentleman in that case what sort of a session it would be, and how it could be reconciled with the provision of the Constitution that there shall be two regular sessions, beginning on the first Monday of December?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I think when the Constitution of the United States requires that Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, that if it is assembled on every one of the 365 days it has assembled at least once in that year. Three hundred and sixty-five days would be 365 times once.

Mr. SHOBER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask, in that event, how could you have two sessions when there is a continuous session from one end to the other?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I do not think that necessarily follows.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Will the gentleman from Maine yield to me for a question?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. With pleasure.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I understand the contention of the gentleman from Maine to be that we are now in the same session that we were in in November?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes.

Mr. McDERMOTT. My understanding of the Constitution is that there are two kinds of sessions of Congress. One what might be called the President's session, the other the constitutional session. The constitutional session has this provision in the Constitution, that neither House shall adjourn for more than three days without the consent of the other. Now, the session of Congress which I may designate as the Presidential session is under the control of the Executive. I call the gentleman's attention to page 23, section 3, of the book that he has in his hand.

On extraordinary occasion on which the President may convene both Houses in case of disagreement between them in respect to the time of adjournment, he may adjourn them to such time as he shall think proper. Now, if there has not been in its relation to the Executive any change in the session—in other words, if it is not another sitting as contemplated by the Constitution—then the President can adjourn Congress to-day to such time as he think fit, if there be a disagreement.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will say this, because I think it is a pertinent and proper question. I will say that I do not think that clause has special reference, or is confined, to an extraordinary session, so called. It certainly is not confined to the special or extraordinary session in terms. I see no reason why it should be confined to the special session. A deadlock in what may be termed a regular session is attended by the same inconveniences as a deadlock in a special session; and if it is important to remove it in one case it is equally important in the other.

If it was within the power of the President to adjourn the special session without day, and thus produce a recess or an interregnum between what you may call his session and the so-called regular session, I can see force in confining it to the special session. But this power is not conferred upon him. In that case it would be applicable to the special session, because it might be said that he had in that event the power to destroy what he had created. But he has no such power, and therefore no such reason applies.

There is no such thing as an extraordinary session. The Fifty-eighth Congress meets when an extraordinary occasion exists upon which the President bases his call. But if the contention of the gentleman from New Jersey applies, unless it creates a constitutional distinction between the two sessions it does not affect the proposition pending before the House. Why? Because it does not give him the power to adjourn Congress without day, and that is the question involved here, whether this Congress has ever adjourned without day. It is a matter of very little consequence whether he would still have the power in case of a disagreement between the two Houses to adjourn us from time to time. Does the gentleman get my idea?

Mr. MODERMOTT. I get the gentleman's idea, but it seems to me that it does not advance the argument. The President has no power to intervene unless the session is an extraordinary one. In other words, the President's session is to be held until they agree to adjourn, or until he tells them to adjourn. The question can not arise at a regular session. The President of the United States can not adjourn Congress as it is now constituted. We can remain in session for two years, from one session to another, and he can not adjourn it. Therefore the session which is called by the President of the United States has a constitutional distinction from that session which is called by the Constitution itself.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Where does the gentleman find in the Constitution that provision that undertakes to take care of the disagreement between the two Houses in a regular session, or isn't there any such provision?

Mr. MODERMOTT. Simply this, that you shall not adjourn for more than three days unless by agreement. It is not that you shall not adjourn for more than three days unless by agreement, provided that if you do not agree and the Executive thinks you should have agreed, he can fix the date of adjournment.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Does that apply to the regular session?

Mr. MODERMOTT. Why, no; but it does to the President's or extraordinary session.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, in the special session does the other provision apply to it?

Mr. MODERMOTT. In the special session you can not adjourn for more than three days without an agreement between the Houses. That would seem to apply; but if you do not agree to adjourn and the Executive desires to interfere, it being his session, he may interfere. Therefore, in the relation that we bear to the Constitution, there is an entirely different aspect between what is known as an extraordinary session and the session called by the Constitution. This was recognized last December by the President of the Senate when he adjourned the Senate. He declared that the Senate was adjourned by lapse of time. In other words, the Constitution having demanded that Congress shall meet on a certain Monday in December that then meeting in accordance with that demand of the Constitution, Congress was then under the Constitution and not in a Presidential session under the direction and power of the Executive. That is the difference between the two propositions, in my view.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is the difference between the two Congresses in the gentleman's view, as I understand it.

Mr. MODERMOTT. Yes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Inasmuch as your suggestions involve the whole question I do not see how it tends to militate against the proposition, if I am correct in my reasoning.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Maine a question. Are we now in session on the call of the President or under the provision of the Constitution requiring us to convene on the first Monday in December?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I think we are in session, Mr. Chairman, by virtue of the provision of the Constitution that authorizes the President to call Congress in session on an extraordinary occasion.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. We are not in session under the authority of both. We must be in session either under the call of the President or under the constitutional provision.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Each has constitutional authority.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Certainly; but we are not now in session under both, are we?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Oh, no; I do not think we are.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, which is it, then?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I think we are in session under the call of the President.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What became of the duty put upon us by the Constitution? Have we violated it?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. No; that duty was already performed, and it was unnecessary to again perform it. Now, the law does not require a man to do an absurd or an impossible or an unnecessary thing.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. One further question. I apprehend, as we are proceeding now, unless the two Houses agree on a resolution to adjourn, we would continue in session until the 4th of March, next year, would we not?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Most certainly we would, either under a regular or a special session.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. If we could not agree on a time to adjourn in a special session, the President could adjourn us to some day in the future, could he not?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. He may possibly adjourn us, under that provision of the Constitution, from time to time.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Can he do it as we are now proceeding?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I do not see why not if we do not agree.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Where is the constitutional power for that? I do not think there is any.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TAWNEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10954, the urgent deficiency bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

REMOVAL OF SNOW AND ICE FROM THE STREETS.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res.—) to provide for the removal of snow and ice from the streets, cross walks, and gutters of the business portion of the District of Columbia.

Resolved, etc., That the sum of $[illegible] is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, for the purpose of [illegible] for the removal of snow and ice from the streets, cross walks, and gutters of the business portion of the District of Columbia, to be paid upon the requisition of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the disbursement of the money by the disbursing officer of the District of Columbia, in the manner provided by law for the payment of other expenses of said District: Provided, that the same shall be expended under the direction of the Commissioners of said District, and the other half out of the Treasury of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk has just read. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire whether this resolution has been referred to any standing committee.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The resolution was considered by the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations having charge of the appropriations for the District of Columbia. I also conferred with a number of other members of the general committee and hope that under the circumstances the measure will meet the prompt concurrence of the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask the gentleman whether the full subcommittee was in attendance and whether the report was unanimous?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The subcommittee was present in its entire membership, except one; and the report was unanimous, both sides being represented.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to inquire whether this is the amount usually appropriated under these circumstances, or is it in excess of that?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The amounts have varied all the way from $1,000 to $20,000. The commissioners in this case asked for $20,000; but inasmuch as Congress is in session and can meet any succeeding emergency as it may arise, we concluded to recommend an appropriation of $5,000.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. COWHERD. I should like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota whether there has not been a similar appropriation made this session?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. There has been.

Mr. COWHERD. Has that appropriation been spent? As I remember, the bill making the appropriation did not get through until after the snow had, to a large extent, melted.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. The gentleman is in error. That is very rare for him, and hence I take the liberty of mentioning it.

Mr. COWHERD. Has that appropriation been spent?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I am advised by the president of the Board of Commissioners that the last of that money will be expended this afternoon. It is for to-morrow and succeeding days that this money is needed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution? The Chair hears none.

The House accordingly proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution, which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 30, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

On motion of Mr. HEMENWAY, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. TAWNEY in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10954) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I listened with a great deal of interest yesterday to the learned and able discussion by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] on the point of order now before the committee. I recognize the fact that he is a great lawyer and that his opinion is entitled to much weight with this committee. But I must differ with him in the conclusion he reaches upon the point before the committee. I agree with him fully as to his first statement, that the only question that can be raised upon this point of order or before this committee is whether or not this is the second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress or whether we are now in the first session, because that session was as much a regular session as any session of Congress that could be held.

If we are now in the second or so-called "regular" session of the Fifty-eighth Congress, then I agree with him that there can be no question that it was the duty of the Committee on Appropriations to include in the bill reported by that committee this appropriation for the mileage of Members at this session.

But I differ with him on the other proposition, that we are now in the first session of the Fifty-eighth Congress. My opinion is that that session, called by the President, upon an extraordinary occasion, came to an end at the hour of 12 o'clock noon on the 7th day of December, when we were, under the Constitution, and have ever since been in another, the regular or second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress.

This so-called "regular" session is provided for by the Constitution of the United States, which declares that the Congress shall meet on the first Monday in December. We did meet upon that day in the regular or constitutional session; and no matter how the extraordinary session ended, it had come to an end; and that is not a matter of argument simply, but it is a matter of judicial decision, I think, in every State of this Union.

I will cite an illustration which seems to me to be absolutely conclusive upon that question. Every lawyer in this House knows, as to the proceedings of courts, that there may be a special session of court, for instance, or it may be a regular session of court, and that session may run up to the very moment when another session of that court, provided for by law, must be held.

Would the gentleman say that processes returnable to the regular term of court could be held to be void because there was no such term; and when the time came would not that court be in session for the regular term as provided by law? Would not jurors be compelled to appear there at and for that regular term as summoned; and would not all the proceedings of that term of court be as of the regular term of court sitting for that time? And would not the first term have lapsed by operation of law?

That, I think, is so held everywhere. In all of the great cities one term of court runs right up to the very time when another term of court, provided for by law, is to commence. And when that term arrives—the January term, for instance—from that moment the court is in session as of the January term, and all the rules of the court apply as of that term. Jurors come there to that term. Suppose, for instance, that one man, or more than one, had been upon the jury of the term before and was also summoned to appear there as of that term. He would be bound again to appear at the January term, for instance, commencing upon the day fixed by law. He would be entitled to his mileage for that term, and the whole proceedings, from the time that the regular term must convene under the law, would be as of that term. There would be two separate and distinct terms of court. The term which lapsed by law would be the first and not the subsequent term.

So with legislative bodies. It matters not how a former session may have come to an end. I contend that, so far as this House at least was concerned, the extraordinary session came to an end when we adjourned on Saturday, the 5th day of December, without day; and when we met here on Monday, the 7th day of December, we met in the regular or constitutional session of Congress, provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and from that day and from that hour all proceedings of this Congress have been as of the second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress, the regular session provided for by the Constitution.

Suppose, for instance, that under the power granted to the President of the United States, upon a disagreement between the two Houses as to the adjournment of that session, he had adjourned Congress until the 12th day of December, as he might have done, and suppose that Congress then came together here, as we were bound to do under the Constitution, on the 7th day of December as next. What session of this Congress would it have been? Manifestly the regular or constitutional session as distinguished from the extraordinary session, which had adjourned to a time beyond the constitutional date for the convening of the regular session.

As a legal proposition, and without interest or feeling in the matter in any other way, I contend that there can be no doubt, upon the argument made by the gentleman from Maine himself, that we are now in the second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress, and the Committee on Appropriations had no discretion but to provide for this appropriation. [Loud applause.]

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, this is a question which is addressed to the legal conscience of the Chairman of this committee and of each one of its members. It is to be governed by law. The law is to be expounded by common sense, by its reason, and its purpose, and, expounding that law in that way, I believe that there has been but one session of this Congress and that this appropriation is not authorized by law.

The law, in addition to $5,000 a year, gives to each Member mileage coming to and returning from each regular session. I find no difficulty in the word "regular." It is not confined, in my judgment, to the annual session. "Regular" means governed by rules; and whether we come here on the call of the President or by reason of the annual meeting, we come here in pursuance of the rules of the Constitution, and therefore the session is regular. It is easy, however, to see why that word was placed in the statute. Congress itself, without the consent of the President, by concurrent resolution, can adjourn now for one month and go home. It would not be a regular session when we came back again; it would be an adjourned session, taking its force not from the rules established by the Constitution, which make it regular and force attendance, but from the action of the House, which can by no means confer upon itself mileage.

I therefore dismiss, so far as my mind is concerned, the suggestion that there can be no mileage for a session called upon an extraordinary occasion. But——

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow a question there?

Mr. PARKER. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Has the gentleman examined the history of this statute at all?

Mr. PARKER. No, sir.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I think if the gentleman would he would find—I looked at it this morning—that in 1852 the word "regular" was used, and it was used in contradistinction to the word "extra." It said:

No mileage shall be allowed for an extra session.

And then used the word "regular," thus showing that when it began the word "regular" was used in contradistinction to the word "extra."

Mr. PARKER. It seems to me, however, and I submit to the gentleman that when they left out the provision in the new statute that no mileage should be allowed for an extra session they meant to avoid that construction and meant to allow mileage for any session which we were forced to attend, because mileage is for compulsory attendance and for nothing else.

Now, in common sense, however, and in a common-sense construction of the statute, we have been in continuous session since the 9th day of November.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New Jersey yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. PARKER. For a question, yes, with pleasure.

Mr. THAYER. I would like to ask the gentleman from New Jersey how he explains this position on the theory that we are now in continuous session? The first article of the Constitution, section 4, in the last clause, provides:

The Congress shall assemble at least once every year, and such meeting shall be on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by law appoint a different day.

Does that give any authority to the President of the United States, or place any authority anywhere, to say that we shall be relieved from gathering here on the first Monday in December, unless we appoint another day? And if so, are we not now in the session provided for by the Constitution?

Mr. PARKER. The gentleman is simply anticipating what I am coming to. There is no difficulty whatever upon that score in my mind, and if the gentleman will listen to the end of what I have to say, if I have not answered, I will then answer.

We met in a regular session, although upon an extraordinary occasion, on the 9th day of November. We assembled, and there was a meeting of Congress. From day to day, by ordinary adjournment of not exceeding three days, we assembled and met until the 7th day of December, and the 8th day of December, and until the present time.

Mr. THAYER again rose.

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman pardon me? I do not wish to be interrupted in the middle of my statement. I thought the gentleman understood my position, that I wished him to wait until I finish what I have to say. I would like to answer him then.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey declines to yield.

Mr. PARKER. We assembled and met from day to day. On the Saturday previous we adjourned to assemble and meet upon the 7th day of December. We met on the morning of the 7th day of December. When we assembled and met on that 7th day of December we did it in pursuance of that adjournment. We did it also in pursuance of a duty imposed by the Constitution to meet on that day. The fact that we had a new sanction for meeting upon that day did not destroy the fact that we had adjourned to that day and continued our session. We had performed our duty by the adjournment to that day. The sanction of the Constitution confirms our action. That adjournment was in accordance with the statute that we should assemble and meet upon that day, and that continuance was that to which we were bound by law.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I want to ask the gentleman to explain this action on the part of the House: When we met on the first Monday in December we notified the Senate that we were now organized and ready for business; we notified the President that we were now organized and ready for business. If that was a continuous session, why did we do that?

Mr. PARKER. I understand the gentleman's question, and I can give him an answer that is perfectly complete. We did it to take every precaution. We could not adjourn the session that existed, except by the joint, concurrent action of both Houses. It could not be adjourned without day.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky rose.

Mr. PARKER. I ask the gentleman to please wait until I am done. I have asked not to be interrupted. I told one gentleman I wished him to wait, and I shall have to ask the gentleman from Kentucky to wait.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. PARKER. I say we adjourned by the simple action of this House. The Senate adjourned at the same time. There was no concurrent resolution by both Houses such as would have made an adjournment of Congress without day. It was simply the adjournment of each House to that day on which they had to assemble and meet, and in which they did assemble and meet, with two sanctions for such an assemblage—one the adjournment, the other the order of the Constitution that we should meet on that day—two sanctions which were not inconsistent the one with the other.

The Constitution simply confirmed the action that we had taken. Now, I will go one step further. It is not merely a question of money or of mileage. I know nothing about existing conditions, but I will say, as a matter of principle, that the Constitution orders that all appointments to office made by the President, when Congress is not in session—and in this great Government there are many—shall remain until the adjournment of the Senate. It was intended that that body should have full time and that in its discretion it should take such time as it thought necessary for the consideration of such nominations. It would be a very bad construction of the Constitution, so far as results are concerned, if by a mere technicality of law, after less than one month, the Senate is to be held adjourned against its will as the clock struck 12, making it impossible for nominations to be sent in during any vacation except by a rush, and making it necessary to renominate, instead of going on with deliberation on the nominations already in their hands until concluded. I submit that the fact that they met on the next day or on the same day, by warrant of a new sanction in pursuance of a new duty, did not vacate the fact that they met in pursuance of the adjournment. I will go one step further and am ready to contend, though without so much certainty——

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Will the gentleman yield to me for one moment?

Mr. PARKER. Not now. I am ready to contend, though without so much certainty in that connection, that when the law spoke of the session it meant a session in fact; it means a sitting; it means a continuous sitting; it does not involve the question whether it is authorized in one way or in another; it means such a sitting as forces a man to come from his home and forces him to stay here until he goes back again. I submit that to allow mileage for the time that the clock was striking 12, to go 3,000 miles to the other side of the continent and to come back, was not intended by the law, which spoke of the reality of a regular session or sitting and not of a fictitious interval between two sessions or sittings, and that the law therefore must be construed by its purpose, which was to provide for possible travel, the movement of a man with his family and belongings during a real vacation of Congress, and not a fictitious move during the time of that adjournment. We have talked of horses and carriages for official use, Mr. Chairman. I submit that no ruling should be made which will allow a mileage for fictitious travel, for it is only a fiction if it be done.

It is brought before us that at one time in our history there was a concurrent resolution for adjournment without day for only a few minutes. The gentleman from Maine, who has been over the records, may be able to tell me whether mileage was allowed for the hours of the adjournment at that time; but whether there was or no, that adjournment at that time, as everyone in the House knows and as stated in the debate, was taken under circumstances of great public urgency, where the Senate and the House were not in agreement with the President, and where it was feared that something wrong might happen during the time of the adjournment. That is not the sort of precedent that should govern. The precedents that should govern this House are the precedents of which there are so many, absolutely uncontradicted—precedents following what I consider to be the absolute governing law.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I appeal to the gentlemen of the committee to pardon anything that I have said that seems too earnest. Each man's conscience, each man's opinion, is his own, and he has a right to it. I am only urging considerations which have governed me and have led me, with great reluctance, fearing that I might say something that might offend the honest judgment of my fellows, to believe that this point of order is well taken; and now, Mr. Chairman, I am ready to answer any questions that gentlemen may desire to ask of me.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER. I will answer the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PAYNE. In view of the fact that the President of the Senate adjourned the Senate at 12 o'clock on the 7th day of December, with the remark that the special or extraordinary or called session, whatever it may be designated, had expired, because Congress now assembled under the clause of the Constitution requiring it to assemble on Monday; and in view of the fact that both Houses had a regular call of the Members of the respective Houses, in this House by States and a roll call in the Senate to ascertain if a quorum was present, and the fact that the present presiding officers of each House, and especially this House, because we are more concerned in this House than the other, declared that a quorum had assembled; and in view still further of the fact that the House adopted a resolution notifying the Senate that a quorum of the House had appeared, and also appointed a committee to join a committee from the Senate to inform the President of the United States that the two Houses had assembled and a quorum was present, and asking if he had any communication to make, and receiving the message; and in view of the fact that the Journal of the House, the files of the House, have recognized every day since the 7th of December that this was the second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress, is it not rather late now to ask the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House to rule that the House in its determination has been all wrong since the 7th day of December, and that now we must go back and hold that this is the called session and not the constitutionally provided date session of the Fifty-eighth Congress?

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I find no difficulty in the question propounded. The statement of the President of the Senate was a statement of his individual opinion at that time, and it binds neither the Senate nor ourselves. I know from the debates since then, and especially from a careful argument upon another subject by the Senator from Maine, that many other Senators do not agree with him in that construction.

The other matters mentioned—the calling of the roll, the sending to the President, the keeping of the Journals of the House—are all matters which may very well be done every day. There are many legislative bodies in which the roll is called every day, and when we have much business here we have it called a good deal. The roll was called on the day upon which we had to be here, and upon which it was essential that we should be here, and was proper in order to show that a quorum was present because on that day we began to act under a second sanction and under a second duty, as well as by the duty imposed upon us by the adjournment of the previous session. The message to the President was to show that that duty had been especially performed on that particular day, but it was no less a continuance of the previous session that assembled and met on that day.

Mr. PAYNE. It signified nothing that we notified the President that the two Houses had assembled on that day?

Mr. PARKER. It signified this: That we notified him that we had assembled, according to our duty under the law, and it was also an assembling made necessary by the adjournment on the previous day.

Mr. PAYNE. How about the Journal, which says this is the second session?

Mr. PARKER. The Journal of this House does not have the force of a concurrent resolution, and the statement as to whether this is the first or second session is one of those things which is simply a matter of formality.

Mr. PAYNE. Is it not the only evidence that the court looks at to see what the action of the House was?

Mr. PARKER. Yes; but it is merely a designation.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman from New Jersey yield to me?

Mr. PARKER. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. I would like to ask the gentleman from New Jersey if it is not the fact, as he understands it, that when Congress is in session, regular or extraordinary session, either House may, under the Constitution, without the consent of the other, adjourn for a period not exceeding three days?

Mr. PARKER. Yes.

Mr. OLMSTED. Would you say that this House on the 5th of December could have lawfully adjourned until the 8th of December, notwithstanding the constitutional mandate that Congress should assemble on the 7th of December, which was the first Monday?

Mr. PARKER. No; we could not adjourn to the 8th of December, because we were ordered to assemble on the 7th. I said that we had a double sanction for assembling—one the adjournment, and the other by the Constitution. We assembled to meet on that day as we did on all previous days, but with a new sanction, and, as matter of fact, the session was continuous.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER. I will.

Mr. THAYER. I want to ask a question, but perhaps in this conversation that has taken place on the other side the point may have been brought out. I want to set the gentleman right when he said that we had adjourned from time to time until 12 o'clock, December 7, the extraordinary session. The record of this House shows that on December 5 the Speaker declared this House adjourned—not until 12 o'clock on Monday, not sine die, not to any time or any particular time, but he declared it adjourned, and there is no record that it ever reconvened. The record of the Senate shows that upon December 7 they adjourned sine die before they commenced the regular session, which began on the 7th of December.

I merely wanted to set him right on that, and then, if he has time, I would like to go back and ask him the question I first asked relative to the Constitution in this matter, a subject upon which, if he spoke, I did not hear one word.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The RECORD shows the same thing in reference to every day.

Mr. PARKER. I am told that the RECORD shows the same thing with reference to adjournment on every day; but I want to say that we know perfectly well ourselves that the session of December 5 was continued to the 7th of December.

Mr. THAYER. I want to ask the gentleman if, so far as was in the power of this House, on Saturday, December 5, we did not adjourn and never reconvene?

Mr. PARKER. We adjourned as we did on every Saturday, which carries us over to the next Monday at 12 o'clock.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the question that I desire to ask has been substantially asked by some other gentlemen. Now, I agree with the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr.

PARKER that by the terms of the Constitution Congress was required to convene at 12 o'clock on Monday, December 7. My question is this: Was not our adjournment on the previous Saturday, the 5th of December, to an impossible time? And is not an adjournment to an impossible time tantamount to an adjournment sine die? For instance, if we should adjourn—

Mr. PARKER. One moment. We adjourned to a possible date, a legal date, and a necessary date, namely, December 7.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. No, sir. The point I make is this, that the Constitution fixed Monday, December 7, as the time when a session of Congress should begin.

Mr. PARKER. Now—

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. It does not—

Mr. PARKER. Now, we assembled and meet on that day and we adjourned so as to assemble and meet on that day; but it does not say we shall begin on that day.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. That is the difference between "tweedledum and tweedledee." The proposition that I have stated more clearly in this statement: Suppose that on the 5th day of March, before the expiration of our term, the Congress passed a resolution to adjourn to the 7th of March. Would not that operate as a sine die point sine die?

Mr. PARKER. We can not reason at any rate in any argument sine die without the concurrent action of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. If the House have the adjournment under its power to adjourn three days at a time or for an indefinite time to the 7th of March, would not that then operate as a sine die adjournment of the House?

Mr. PARKER. We would have no power to meet on the 5th of March, after our term of office should expire, and therefore it would be sine die.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. That is the point I make.

Mr. PARKER. We would have power to meet on the 7th day of December, as we did, and [illegible] adjourned [illegible] the 5th day, and the adjournment was valid because I had the power to adjourn.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, as we have been [illegible] times until during this debate, the only question involved before us is as to the proper construction to be put upon some two provisions of the Constitution, one providing that the meeting of the ordinary or regular session of Congress shall be on the first Monday in December. And the other providing for the assembling of Congress in special session. I wish to say a few words in reply to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MARTIN], who has just spoken, and who is a very acute and accomplished lawyer, to be of very little weight, if any, in any way whatever this absolute command of the Constitution of the United States. Does anybody question that if the Congress of the United States should pass a law or a concurrent resolution, if one were needed, adjourning from the first Monday in December to the 15th of January, that that would not be a compliance with the command of the Constitution? Not at all. It might not be wise, it might not have been passed; nor should it weigh an iota in determining the question of the duty of Congress. We met on the first Monday in December in pursuance of a resolution of adjournment of the Fifty-first Congress, and we adjourned to a [illegible] Monday in December, unless they should be called together in special session by the President. It is said that there has never been a precedent established for such a resolution. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD], and that early Congresses went directly from a special session into a regular session and treated it as one session.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Just one moment. He has not cited a precedent as well as [illegible] F. Ellsworth of the greatest of our constitutional lawyers, introduced in the Senate a resolution declaring that a special session ended when it met by law when the regular session began. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] [illegible] a compensation, which was passed, was passed in a minute [illegible] without any discussion, was directly opposed to his contention. He therefore thought it of little importance. But the [illegible] Senator Edmunds introduced that resolution and that it received the unanimous vote of the Senate are facts entitled to great weight in this discussion.

But, Mr. Chairman, if it were true that there is no precedent contrary to the gentleman's contention, that, in and of itself, would not be conclusive. Congress had uniformly held that a question decided by the Constitution, passed a [illegible] and had a precedent [illegible] Supreme Court. Such, indeed, in the [illegible] it was overthrown in this Chamber, and [illegible] that time-honored precedent has been given the [illegible] by the Supreme Court of the United States. A bad precedent does not make good law.

There is a constitutional provision for an extraordinary, but there is also one for a regular session of Congress. If there were no constitutional provision for a regular session, we should be at the mercy of the President of the United States, as the people of session of Congress would have been to open the way to tyranny in the United States. Did that Constitutional Convention then fail to make provision for a regular session of Congress? No language could be plainer than this phraseology in the Constitution:

Congress shall assemble at least once in every year—

That is, Congress shall assemble at least annually—

That is, [illegible] meeting

[illegible] Monday in December, unless they—

Congress—

[illegible]

The language is mandatory. The meeting must be on the first Monday in December, and the first Monday in December comes regularly as the world revolves around the sun or turns upon its axis.

Under the Constitution, as [illegible] the 3d Monday in December Congress [illegible] a different day [illegible] by law.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] hit the [illegible] I had intended to [illegible] and to [illegible] the gentleman from New Jersey [illegible] I will yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [illegible]

MARTIN. I will yield to the gentleman from Maine [illegible] the 5th day of December preceding the first Monday in December, the day of that month should the House and the Senate by concurrent resolution have adjourned over the holidays [illegible] and of necessity [illegible] the Constitution, that Congress should [illegible] Monday in December, as Congress itself has enacted a law appointing a different day, and there is no such law.

[illegible] have been either a statute, or a joint resolution [illegible] President. This special session [illegible] November. Having met on the [illegible] Monday in December. As to the calling of the [illegible] a question for each man to answer for himself. I have [illegible] my time since the convening of the special session, and I never [illegible] is voted.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [illegible] understand that under the statutes this sum of money called "mileage" has anything to do with the compensation of a member? Or is it a part of the compensation added to the salary of a year?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I presume that may be so.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman yield permit me to read the words of the statute of 1866, section 17:

[illegible] from the seat of the general government, and in addition thereto, mileage at the rate of 8 cents per mile.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I desire briefly to refer to the argument made by the distinguished gentleman and lawyer from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD], in which he said that the Constitution does not provide for an extraordinary session of Congress nor for a regular session, and that there is no distinction between sessions, that they are all alike. Mr. Chairman, I beg to differ with the gentleman from Maine on this point. The word "extraordinary" is used in the Constitution in this connection:

He (the President) may on extraordinary occasions convene both Houses or either of them.

If the President "on an extraordinary occasion" convenes both Houses, it is an extraordinary session of Congress.

In Webster's Unabridged Dictionary he defines the word "extraordinary" as "not usual, not regular." An extraordinary session is therefore a session which is not a regular session. And would it not be a most remarkable thing, Mr. Chairman, if Alexander Hamilton and James Madison and Benjamin Franklin and George Washington and their compatriots and associates at Philadelphia in that wonderful Constitutional Convention had forgotten to provide for a regular session of Congress? If they had not provided in the Constitution for a regular session of Congress, then all would have been left to the discretion of the President, and should he choose to be a man of the ideas and of the disposition of Charles I, Congress would not assemble during his term of office. Not to have provided in the Constitution for a regular England were at the mercy of the Stuarts when they refused to assemble the British Parliament. And I am unwilling to believe that the great statesmen in that Convention, presided over by the greatest of all men, George Washington, forgot so vitally important a duty as the appointing of a date for the regular meeting of Congress.

Mr. MARTIN. Will the gentleman yield for a question? The gentleman has, I think, very clearly demonstrated that a regular session of Congress convenes on the first Monday of each December by operation of law. I should like to ask if it does not follow logically and legally that if a regular session convenes by operation of law, fixed in the Constitution, at a particular time, the session in force theretofore must conclude by operation of law at the same instant.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do not think that there can be any question about it. The answer, in my judgment, is yes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule, but the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I do not rise, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of answering the discussion, but I will say just a word in response to the suggestion made by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FULLER], who spoke with a great deal of force and a great body of argument, upon the analogy between a session of Congress and a session of Congress. I would concede that if the analogy is sound, his argument is entitled to great weight, if not, perhaps, be conclusive; but I wish to submit that the analogy is not sound, because a session of Congress, among other things, is returnable; motions are to be made within a certain time and pleas in abatement are to be filed. The court has no power to change the day fixed for its meeting. None of these things are true of Congress. No process is returnable to a session of Congress. Nothing is to be done by virtue of the law or the Constitution on the specific day of meeting, or within a particular [illegible] day; these are the elements involved in a session of court are entirely absent in connection with a session of Congress, and the analogy is not complete.

I [illegible] just a word with reference to the suggestion very [illegible] and forcefully made last [illegible] New Jersey [Mr. MARTIN], and that is with [illegible] as to whether the clause providing that the President may convene Congress from time to time is limited [illegible] ns to a special or extraordinary or Presidential session [illegible]. If so limited, beyond any question it would create [illegible] between the two sessions, which [illegible] the question pending.

[illegible] adjournment last evening I have taken occasion to read [illegible] son's Journal of the Constitutional Convention, and [illegible] upon that precise point, for the purpose of ascertaining [illegible] ght, if any, might be [illegible] and [illegible] to give the committee the benefit of the investi-

[illegible] that in the report of the committee on detail, made on August 6, 1787, that the clause in question appears in Article X, section 2, which reads as follows:

[illegible] give information to the Legislatures of the [illegible]

[illegible] man & Co. Ed.

This is the first time the clause appears in the proceedings of the Convention. It appears in a section [illegible] the powers and duties of the President with the clause antecedent [illegible] of Congress in an extraordinary session, where they would naturally be expected to appear. It will be observed that the two [illegible] are placed in separate and distinct [illegible] One [illegible]

[illegible] them on extraordinary occasions.

And the other—

In case of disagreement between the two Houses with regard to the time of adjournment, he may adjourn them to such time as he thinks proper.

In this section the argument of juxtaposition as a reason why the clause in question is a limitation upon the so-called "Presidential session" clearly fails.

In the report of the committee on style, which had no power to change any substantive provision of the Constitution and only had the power to perfect the language and arrangement of such on September 12, 1787, those two independent sentences are grouped together, making two clauses of one section in Article II, section 3, cited, 799, reading as follows:

He may on extraordinary occasions convene both Houses, or either of them, and in case of disagreement between them with respect to the time of adjournment, he may adjourn them to such time as he shall think proper, etc.

transposing the first sentence and slightly varying the second. Article X, section 2, down to and including the words "He shall commission all officers of the United States," as the report of the committee on detail, appears in the report of the committee on style, in Article II, section 3. The substance of the latter clause of section 2 remains entirely unchanged, and with some slight change of verbiage is found in sections 1 and 2 of Article II, in the report of the committee on style.

Under these conditions the argument of juxtaposition seems entitled to but little weight. There is nothing, so far as I can find in the debates in the Convention, to indicate that the clause of this section in the report of the committee on detail, and later on the report of the committee on style.

In the Federalist, in No. 68, written by Mr. Alexander Hamilton, who was also a member of the committee on style reporting the Constitution in the language in which it now stands, the clause is referred to and considered. This is the ground taken in which Mr. Hamilton is defining the powers and the limitations upon the power of the President of the United States, and with reference to this specific point he says:

[illegible] in the National Legislature in the [illegible]

Look for a moment to particulars. If [illegible] to a special session, it is a very important and [illegible] Mr. Hamilton is [illegible] to define in this paper the limitations upon the Presidential power and he [illegible] the two independent and [illegible] sessions. Therefore it is a fair inference that in his judgment he [illegible] the power of taken a part in the [illegible] and being [illegible] the language as it now stands, it was not limited to the operation to a special session, but applied generally. His first illustration of an analogous power is that "The British monarch may prorogue or even dissolve Parliament." This illustration, of course, can not be confined to special sessions, but applies to all sessions. Further, by way of illustration, he says:

The governor of New York may also prorogue the legislature of this State for a limited time; a power which, in certain situations, may be employed [illegible]

Applicable, apparently, to every session.

Of course it is not conclusive, but it is significant, and if the Chair please, I point to the fact that which Hamilton elaborates the proposition, he, in no sense [illegible] that it is confined in its application to a special session of Congress. If it is true that this clause is confined to special sessions, it is a most important limitation, and should have been emphasized rather than omitted by Hamilton. To hold that Hamilton omitted it is to impeach either his intelligence or candor, neither of which can be done successfully.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Chairman, the Madison Papers, as I recollect them, are commonly quoted by the gentleman from Maine. In [illegible] power similar to the power of the King to prorogue Parliament, was [illegible] in a separate sentence. When the Convention was assembled, the congress was [illegible]. "He might convene them on extraordinary occasions and" [illegible] Now, the introduction of [illegible] in my judgment, shows the [illegible] between the power of proroguing and the convening of the extraordinary session.

You must also read it, it seems to me, in view of the entire text of the Constitution. It is impossible to believe that a Constitution provides that neither House can adjourn without the consent of the other for more than three days, and that provides that [illegible] as a [illegible] of the Constitution of the United States [illegible] and legislative enactments and that the power of neither shall be exercised by any other, intended to confer upon the President of the United States, or vest in him rather, the power given by the unwritten constitution of England to the King of Great Britain to prorogue Parliament.

That power had been exercised by the King of England to the point of revolution. The exercise of it was one of the causes of [illegible] that led to the Revolution. Our forefathers were well acquainted with it, and they were in a remedial frame of mind, and when they inserted that conjunction they intended to limit the power of the President as to the practical dissolution, as proroguing is and always was when exercised by the King of England, in a case where he as President called them to carry out his views on legislation, demanding an extraordinary session. I do not know that it is at all important as affecting this bill, but I look at it as raising the question whether a President in partisan affiliation and sympathy with one House of a divided Congress—divided in a partisan aspect—may prorogue Congress if they disagree.

Hence we come to the fact that there is one joint resolution, and only one, that the President of the United States can not pass upon. Every law and every joint resolution must be certified to the President and receive his action, or in case of vetoing become effective as the votes of Congress independent of his view, with one or other. We preserve the right to Congress to adjourn. The joint resolution of the House and Senate to adjourn is the only resolution that the President of the United States is not called to pass upon when passed by Congress. It seems to me, therefore, that the framers of the Constitution did not intend that the President and one House of Congress acting in antagonism could prorogue Congress as the King had been accustomed, in fear or otherwise, to prorogue Parliament. However, as to the relation of this question to this bill, I am not entirely clear that it is governing. It is an interesting point, and I shall ask the leave of the House to continue the discussion of the question in print.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to continue his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, one suggestion only. I simply wish to say this——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state to the committee that the Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I would, perhaps, like to make this additional suggestion.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Maine to one thing that occasion has arisen under this section where the President may act. The Senate adjourned without day. The Senate adjourned by the declaration of its presiding officer sine die. This House has never adjourned sine die, therefore the Senate is not in session under the extraordinary call, while, if the view of the gentleman from Maine as to the continuous session is correct, we are in session under that call, and therefore a disagreement has arisen between the House and the Senate, and the duty or power of the President to act is conferred by the Senate, and he could invoke it and prorogue us to meet some other time.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I do not concede the gentleman's premises. I never will concede, neither do I think any court would hold, that the President of the Senate, on his own motion without a preliminary motion adopted by the Senate, could adjourn even that body without day. He has not that power, in my judgment.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I think the rule, Mr. Chairman, of parliamentary law is this: That when there is not dissent by a body the body assents, and that where the president or presiding officer of a body declares the body adjourned, and there is no objection, his ruling is assent by the body, and all preliminary matters of form are immaterial. If the president declares that body adjourned and there is not objection on the part of anybody and——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The body is not in a position to object after the drop of the gavel.

Nobody could then raise an objection as far as that is concerned. If the gentleman from New Jersey thinks that a presiding officer of a body, on his own motion, can terminate the existence of a body by his having adjourned sine die——

Mr. McDERMOTT. Not at all, they may proceed to displace him and elect another officer, but if they consent to it, it is the decision not of the Chair, but of the body, and a consent to adjourn sine die. Therefore there is a practical disagreement between the two Houses.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. No. I do not think that amounts to a disagreement. A disagreement between the two Houses results from the action of one body sending that action down to another. Here they have had no chance to disagree.

Mr. McDERMOTT. They have had the chance by continuing in session.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. It has never reached us as a legislative proposition. A disagreement between the two Houses results from something we have had the opportunity to concur with or disagree to, and this proposition has never been sent down to us.

Mr. McDERMOTT. It arises from the fact that the Senate adjourned sine die. There was no necessity to send it down to us if they had actually adjourned.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But the gentleman begs the question or assumes it.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Maine to this fact, that there is no regular way provided in the Constitution by which the President of the United States can obtain cognizance that there is a disagreement between the Senate and the House on account of adjournment. It is a peculiar resolution, in no wise to be certified to him, and the only concurrent resolution that is not certified to him.

Now, it does seem to me that where he calls a session he may suggest the adjournment, as the King used to, and if then there is a disagreement, he may prorogue it. I think the old practice was in the minds of those who framed the Constitution. I think he may suggest the adjournment, and if the House disagrees with the Senate in following his suggestion, he may prorogue them. I know of no way in which the President of the United States can get official knowledge of the fact that there is a disagreement between the House and the Senate as to the time of adjournment, nor do I know of any way in which at a regular session any such disagreement can ever arise.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The suggestions of the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey are involved in the concrete proposition as to whether or not this clause to which he refers is specifically applicable and confined to special session. I will not follow him in that discussion because, in my judgment, it is hardly worth while. I also fully appreciate the distinguished gentleman's position when he says that the report of the committee on detail left this proposition with reference to the power of the President to convene from time to time applicable to both sessions, but that the report of the committee on style changed it and confined the operation of that clause to the special session.

I call his attention to this fact, that, as we all know and everybody concedes, the committee on style had no power to change the substance of the Constitution; it was simply their purpose and duty to report it in better and more concrete shape, and if they produced that pronounced change, they transcended their power. That must be the obvious conclusion. Without any debate or discussion, it is a violent inference that they did so transcend it. I proceed upon the basis that the final draft of the Constitution is in entire harmony with the report of the committee on detail and was actually considered by Hamilton, March 14, 1788, when he wrote the great paper above referred to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order.

The question raised by the point of order made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] does not involve the question of whether or not Senators, Representatives, and Delegates attending Congress at this time should or should not receive mileage. That is a question for the Committee of the Whole to decide, and not the Chair. The question presented to the Chair is the parliamentary question of whether or not there is any existing law authorizing the payment of the mileage for which it is proposed to appropriate the amount stated in this bill.

The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill passed at the last session of the Fifty-seventh Congress appropriated for the payment of mileage to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates attending the first annual session of the Fifty-eighth Congress. This appropriation, however, was not available until the day appointed by the Constitution for the assembling of this Congress at its first annual session.

The Fifty-eighth Congress was convened by proclamation of the President of the United States November 9, 1903. Soon thereafter [illegible] the following resolution:

[illegible] of Senators, Members of the House of [illegible] Territories made in the [illegible]

By this resolution the money appropriated for the payment of mileage at the session of this Congress beginning on the first Monday of December last was paid to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates attending the session of this Congress convened by the President. By the wording of this resolution Congress declared that the session convened by the President was the first session of the Fifty-eighth Congress. It is now declared by the paragraph in this urgency deficiency appropriation bill that this is the second session of this Congress, and it is proposed to appropriate money for the payment of mileage to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates attending upon this second session.

The gentleman from Georgia makes the point of order against this paragraph, claiming there is no existing law authorizing the appropriation, and that therefore the paragraph is not in order under section 2 of Rule XXI, which is as follows:

2. No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill or [illegible] any

The Chair has spent some time in endeavoring to ascertain what, if any, law there is governing the payment of mileage. As a result of this investigation it has been ascertained that under various statutes Senators, Representatives, and Delegates attending the sessions of Congress have received mileage whether the session was convened by the President or assembled at the time fixed by the Constitution or by statute, the only exception being in the Fortieth Congress. When the act fixing the 4th of March for the assembling of Congress, in addition to the times fixed by the Constitution, was passed, by that act it was provided that Members and Senators of the previous Congress should not receive mileage for attendance upon the session beginning March 4, and for the information of the committee, and with its permission, the Chair will print, in connection with this ruling, these several statutes.

The act of 1874, repealing the increase of salaries of Members of Congress to $7,500 a year, revived the act of 1866, since which time there has been no legislation upon this subject. Therefore the act of 1866 is the law in force to-day in respect to the compensation to be paid to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates, and also the law now in force governing the question of mileage. This law reads as follows:

SEC. 17. And be it further enacted, That the compensation of each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress shall be $5,000 per annum, to be [illegible] Congress, and in [illegible] to be computed by the shortest route [illegible] traveled in going to and returning from each regular session.

It will be observed that the language of this act in respect to mileage is significant, and from it there can be but one conclusion, and that is that the mileage authorized to be paid is intended as [illegible] compensation without any particular reference to the expense incurred in traveling to and from the sessions of Congress, just as the law allows a certain per diem in addition to the salary paid to the officers and agents of the Government who are obliged to travel on the business of the Government or in the discharge of their duties. The language which follows is merely descriptive of how the mileage authorized to be paid is to be estimated. The law says it is "to be estimated by the nearest route usually traveled in going to and returning from each regular session." In the opinion of the Chair the words "regular session" do not mean alone the sessions of Congress convened under authority of the Constitution, but rather that this mileage is to be paid at any session of Congress lawfully convened, and the amount is to be estimated as stated in the act—that is, on the same basis that mileage is paid to Senators and Representatives when attending the regular or annual sessions provided for by the Constitution.

Of course no one contends that under this law Senators and Representatives and Delegates are entitled to more than one payment as mileage for attending one session of Congress. The question, therefore, of whether this paragraph is in order or whether there is any existing law authorizing the appropriation of this money turns upon the proposition of whether Congress is now in the session convened by the President of the United States or whether that session expired by operation of law and Congress is now in session under and by virtue of that provision of the Constitution which designates the first Monday in December as the day when it shall assemble in annual session.

When this Congress convened on November 9 the business of the Congress proceeded as usual, and it was in session on Saturday, December 5, 1903, the last secular day before the first Monday in December. In the House of Representatives, at the close of that day, as appears from the RECORD, the simple motion to adjourn was agreed to, and the Speaker announced, "The House stands adjourned," without adding, as usual, the day to which the "House stands adjourned." No resolution to terminate the session was proposed. In the Senate on the same day it was voted to take a recess until 11.50 a. m., Monday, December 7. On that day and hour the Senate met, and after the transaction of the usual business and the adoption of the usual vote of thanks to the presiding officer, the hour of 12 o'clock having arrived, the President pro tempore said:

Senators, the hour provided by law for the meeting of the first regular session of the Fifty-eighth Congress having arrived, I declare the extraordinary session of the Fifty-seventh Congress [illegible]

Immediately thereafter the President pro tempore called the session to order for the second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress.

In the House at the same hour the Speaker called the House to order and, after prayer by the Chaplain, directed that the roll be called by States to ascertain the presence of a quorum, and business proceeded as at the beginning of a session. The usual resolution was passed, notifying the President of the United States that the second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress was assembled and that a quorum of the two Houses was present and ready to receive any message which he might deem proper to submit.

This is a complete statement, as shown by the RECORD, of what took place in the two Houses of Congress on December 5 and December 7.

On the following day the Journal of the House records the fact that on Monday, December 7, the second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress assembled. The language of the Journal is as follows:

JOURNAL OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Begun and held at the Capitol, in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, on Monday, the 7th day of December, anno Domini one thousand nine hundred and four, being the second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress, which was begun and held under the Constitution of the United States, which was ratified by the conventions of the several States, and which was first assembled on the fourteenth day of March, anno Domini one thousand seven hundred and twenty-eighth year of the independence of the United States.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1904.

On which day, being the day fixed by the Constitution of the United States for the meeting of the second session of the Congress, the Senate, a quorum being present, the House of Representatives, a quorum being present, Members of the House of Representatives were sworn to their names.

This Journal declaring this to be the second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress was unanimously approved by the House. The Journal of the Senate reciting the same facts was likewise approved.

In the opinion of the Chair the question of whether this is a continuation of the session of Congress convened by the President or the second session convened under and by virtue of the provision of the Constitution fixing the time for the assembling of Congress is a mixed question of law and fact, and the Chair, as the presiding officer of this committee appointed by the Speaker of the House, in deciding this question is bound to take cognizance of what the House itself has done in determining whether or not this is or is not the second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress.

As a matter of law, the Chair is clearly of the opinion that the session of this Congress convened by the President of the United States terminated when the moment of time arrived for the Congress to convene in its regular annual session under the Constitution. That session of Congress there terminated by operation of law, not because there is any law fixing the limit of time that a session of Congress convened by the President should remain in session, but because of the constitutional provision fixing the time when the first regular annual session of this Congress should convene. The contention that because Congress was in session on the last secular day preceding the first Monday in December and that there was no formal termination of this session at that time, and that therefore this is a continuation of that session, seems to the Chair untenable. It would, in the opinion of the Chair, be as reasonable to say that because there will be no formal ending of to-day and no formal beginning of to-morrow therefore Saturday will continue forever or throughout our existence. [Applause.]

The illustration used by the gentleman from Maine to prove his contention that this is a continuous session—namely, that if the House was in the act of calling the roll upon the passage of some bill when the hour arrived for the convening of Congress in its annual or constitutional session that the roll call could not be further proceeded with—does not prove anything. As a matter of fact, and as the records of Congress show, that incident or circumstance has occurred on several occasions when the time for the termination by operation of law of the second annual session of Congress arrived. The opinion of the Chair that the first session of the Fifty-eighth Congress convened by the President terminated by operation of that provision of the Constitution which fixes the time for the beginning of the annual session of this Congress is not without precedent.

In the Fortieth Congress this same question arose. Just at the close of the extra session, Mr. Sherman, then a Senator from Ohio, said:

I can not see any object in passing this concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution he referred to was that the presiding officers of the two Houses should at a specified time declare their respective Houses adjourned without day.

Said Mr. Sherman:

The [illegible] the first Monday [illegible] the hour for meeting on that day [illegible] We could [illegible] adjourning, and the result is that the next session of Congress will [illegible] at noon on Monday.

Mr. Sumner, on the same occasion, said:

And that brings me to the exact point as to whether the present session should be prorogued [illegible] I do not propose the latter even for five minutes.

It was proposed to adjourn to 11 o'clock and 55 minutes.

Let one session come right up close upon the other, and then we shall exercise every prerogative of [illegible] Mr. President [illegible] Congress, we begin at the same moment the beginning of the new session.

These quotations, taken from the Globe, show that in the judgment of such men as Mr. Sherman and Mr. Sumner, two of the ablest men in either House of Congress at that time, if not ble or labor or expense, there would be some good, valid reason why a Member's compensation should be increased: but when I say that we were here on Saturday and adjourned over to Monday, were in session at 11.55 o'clock in what they call an "extra session" and met again in a few minutes, I want to know where is the reason that justifies us in increasing our compensation or justifies us in taking it?

Mr. SIMS. Now, then, in the Fifty-fifth Congress we had an extra session on the 15th day of March, eleven days after the Fifty-fourth Congress adjourned, and many Members did not go home in the brief interval between the Fifty-fourth Congress and the Fifty-fifth, and yet we passed a resolution giving them mileage, and, as far as I recollect, the gentleman assented to it. Now, if we gave that mileage, is it not an addition to the compensation not contemplated by the law?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know whether it is contemplated by the law, but it was expended, and, of course, increased the compensation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But Congress adjourned, and we went home. Of course some of the men did not go home, but Congress went home, as far as that was concerned, and I believe most of the Members of the House did.

Mr. SIMS. I am opposed to paying this, but not on the question of compensation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I want to add that the Committee on Appropriations reported this item to the House because it seemed to them to be in the line of precedents, as stated by the chairman of the committee, and in order that the House might have the opportunity to give it consideration, the subject having been officially brought to the attention of the committee by the following letter:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES U. S., OFFICE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS,
Washington, D. C., [illegible] 1905.

Hon. J. A. HEMENWAY,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations House of Representatives:

DEAR SIR: In the joint resolution approved March [illegible] 1903, [illegible] made in the appropriation, expenses, and mileage of Members of Congress, [illegible] provided for payment for transportation and mileage of Members of Congress for the present session [illegible] and the [illegible] been paid for attendance at the extraordinary session of the present Congress which assembled November 9, 1903.

I am daily in receipt of applications from a large number of Members of the Fifty-fifth Congress for mileage for the present session, [illegible] who claim that they are entitled to mileage for every regular session of Congress. In view of the manner in which the proposed and paid mileage stands under law, I respectfully ask the attention of your committee to the necessity to provide an appropriation in the deficiency bill or otherwise in the sum of $[illegible].

Very respectfully,
HENRY CASSON,
Sergeant-at-Arms, House of Representatives.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5, page 6, after the word "[illegible]," add the following:

"[illegible] Members of Congress [illegible] mileage appropriated in the [illegible] act to be [illegible] Treasury, and the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House [illegible] Members of Congress [illegible] and be taken up as a like item of money in the Treasury."

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What is the point of order?

Mr. HAY. That it changes existing law.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is simply a limitation upon the paragraph.

Mr. HAY. It is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Virginia if he has anything to say in support of his point of order.

Mr. HAY. It is already the law that all such sums shall lapse into the Treasury after the 1st day of July, and this is new legislation on an appropriation bill and practically repeals that law.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I think it is not necessary to argue that question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the general rule of parliamentary law that it is doubtful if, even, to change existing law under a form or form of a limitation.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, but here we propose to make an appropriation of $[illegible], and this amendment simply proposes that when so made the conditions upon which it is made shall adhere to the document itself. It does not change existing law, it simply limits the appropriation of this money to the time and the specific purpose for which it is offered.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I suggest to the Chair that it in no way changes the appropriation, it simply limits it after the money has been appropriated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that, there being no law on the subject of the disposition of mileage not paid, this would be a limitation upon this appropriation, and it is in order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a very few words on this general subject. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] is reported in the RECORD to have said yesterday—I could not hear him because of the great confusion—when I offered this amendment in a rather imperfect form:

I have often, sir, [illegible] this House, but in other legislative bodies, heard that [illegible] proposition, such as has been offered by the gentleman from Ohio, before.

Now, I want to simply disabuse the mind of the gentleman from Georgia that this is a silly amendment, or an amendment made as a joke. It is, to my mind, a very serious amendment, and I make it in all good faith and in all seriousness. If this money is due to the Members of this House, and I believe it is, each individual Member of the House has a duty to perform, first, in the question of the appropriation of the money, and that is a public duty that he owes to the whole body, and secondly, a duty that he owes to himself. If, in his individual judgment, this money ought not to be paid to himself, I provide a remedy by which he can put it back into the Treasury, and I call the attention of the gentleman from Georgia to the fact that he is in error when he says that we can put money into the Treasury of the United States.

He could not do it. If this money is appropriated and placed to the credit of a Member of Congress in the hands of the Sergeant-at-Arms, the gentleman from Georgia nor any other gentleman can put that money into the Treasury of the United States, for there is no law authorizing it to go in. I for one would not put any money, under these circumstances, into what may be called the "conscience fund," about which there is a provision of law. So I am right in saying first that there is no avenue by which this money can go back into the Treasury except by the provision of law, and that provision I purpose to incorporate in this bill.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. GROSVENOR. In a moment, when I get through. In the second place, but for the further limitation of this second proviso a Member of Congress, if he saw fit, could leave the money standing as a claim in his own favor to be barred by the statutes of limitation. It is a claim in his own favor at some subsequent date and a claim in favor of his estate after he is dead.

Now, we had some exploiting of propositions of this sort a good many years ago in this country. I remember a single case at the time of the "salary grab," as it was called, where a Member of Congress, whose name I shall not mention, voted against it and declared in a public interview that was telegraphed all over this country that he would not take it. Fifteen years afterwards I happened to be in the Treasury and a clerk there called my attention to the fact that, beginning seven or eight years after the gentleman had gone out of Congress, he began to check against that money and checked it all out. [Laughter.]

Now, my proposition is, and I think everybody will be in favor of it who desires to meet this question fairly, first, that every man shall vote as he sees fit on the question of the appropriation, and if the appropriation is carried, let him not undertake to dodge the responsibility that grows out of the appropriation of this money, but let him march right up like a man and do one of two things—either take the money or turn the money back into the Treasury, as he well may if he agrees with me in my position on this question. That, Mr. Chairman, is the purpose of my amendment. [Applause.] It is to put it beyond the manipulation in the coming election by demagogues. Stand up and take your money or give it back to the Treasury of the United States. That is the whole of it; that is all there is in this amendment. It is very simple, very plain and obvious, and the way to peace of mind and [illegible] of purpose and action on the part of every Member of this House. [Laughter and applause.] Now, I will yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, in my reply to the gentleman from Ohio yesterday that I did not need his advice about what to do with the money, or what I should do with it, I was under the impression that if the money was not drawn from the Treasury on the 1st of July it was covered back into the Treasury.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If I understand the law, and I am told by a gentleman recently Solicitor of the Treasury that I am correct, it takes two years before it lapses. But in this case it will be money in the hands of the disbursing officer belonging to the Member, and if my amendment is defeated it will remain for years.

Mr. MADDOX. Then how did the man that the gentleman refers to draw it out after seven years?

Mr. GROSVENOR. That was the trouble: a question arose whether the money was an ordinary appropriation, and it was decided that it became a credit to him against the Government and was not an appropriation within the meaning of the statute. Therefore it would never lapse back.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, from my view of the case, from what I believe to be the law, I think I am still right in respect to that matter that this mileage would lapse back into the Treasury on the 1st day of July unless it were drawn out.

Now, I want to repeat that when the gentleman talks about demagogues and wants us to march up to the issue, I want to say that I will meet him on the issue at this place or any other place. I never dodged a question that came up in this House during the twelve years that I have been here.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, I have no controversy with the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. MADDOX. Then, I can not understand what the gentleman meant when he referred to demagogues; I am the only man that has spoken on this matter.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I only used the word in reference to a question to be met hereafter.

Mr. MADDOX. I want to say to the gentleman, without giving him an opportunity to use up my time, that I stand ready now and have upon all propositions, as I always have in this House on all occasions, to vote upon any proposition, and I intend to do it now. Now, what have we got presented to us? In a few words I want to briefly state my position. The Chair has ruled, and we accept the ruling, that we have had two sessions.

But there was only a shadow of time, something which can be only imagined, that existed between those two sessions. We were all here or ought to have been in our seats when the adjournment took place and when the new session began. By my side, perhaps, sits a man from the Pacific coast, taking probably $2,500 of mileage, myself $270, and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. DENNY] $16, and yet, without traveling or incurring any expenses, the gentleman from the Pacific coast will add to his salary $2,500 and the gentleman from Maryland $16 and myself $270, so that the effect of it is to add to our salaries a sum of money for doing absolutely nothing and with no consideration given therefor, besides operating as a gross discrimination against some of us.

Now, the question is, Is it expedient, is it honest, to do anything of that sort? We have been calling upon these various Departments for a statement of the expenditure of money for carriages and automobiles and things of that sort that were not provided for by law. I want to say to you, gentlemen of the committee, that if you expect to have any effect upon these Departments and upon the country toward correcting these evils you must first sweep before your own door; the spring must be clear if you expect the water to be clear below it—the fountain must be pure. We have the right as Representatives to vote this money, under the ruling of the Chair, into our pockets, if we see proper, but the question is, Are we equitably entitled to it? That is the question. I do not think so, and I shall vote against it.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

"[illegible] and after the passage of this act no [illegible] Members of the [illegible] session [illegible] payment of any session for which he has received or is entitled to mileage."

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, that is not wholly original with me, for it represents the principle of a law that was passed in 1852, and which may be in force to-day, and I have no doubt that it will surprise this House to know that that was apparently originated to cure an abuse which arose in that center of economy and altruism, the United States Senate. At that time the Senate had obviously contracted the habit of taking mileage for the executive session which is always called at the beginning of every Presidential term, and so in 1851 a law was passed prohibiting any Senator from taking mileage for the session beginning March 4, 1853, and the sessions every four years thereafter. The next year—in 1852—Congress went a step further and made this principle apply to both House and Senate by a law which said:

The above act shall apply to all extra sessions of Congress of the Senate convened within ten days after the adjournment of a regular session.

In other words, it provided that whenever one Congress comes within ten days of another the second Congress is not entitled to mileage. I fancy that Congressmen in those days were just as fond of mileage as we are; that they did not legislate from any unwillingness to take it, but that it was under the stress of public opinion that they refused to take mileage for one session when it came within ten days of another; and it seems to me the same public opinion holds to-day and that although, of course, we have a right to vote ourselves any amount of mileage, as we have the right to vote ourselves any amount of compensation, at the same time public opinion recognizes that when one Congress ends and another begins immediately there is no travel and there ought to be no mileage. It seems to me that the same law which they passed then offers a good example for us to follow to-day, and that we ought to adopt this amendment which I have offered, and thus settle the practice conclusively. If this fails, I shall vote for the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], to strike out the appropriation; but that still leaves us with a technical legal claim on the Treasury which any subsequent appropriation bill may satisfy. This amendment of mine not only accomplishes more perfectly the object he aims at now, but it also settles the law and the right for the future.

I think myself we ought to go a step further. I think we ought to consolidate all these different methods we have of getting compensation. I would strike out all mileage and give every Member of the House $500 in lieu thereof. That would cost the Treasury about the same as now, and would make the division among the Members much more equal, although that would favor those who live near by as the present law favors those who live far off. I would strike out the stationery and give every Member $125, as at present. That makes $625. I would strike out clerk hire, for which we get $1,200, and strike out all the limitations about it by which we are not allowed to make our own contracts. That would make $1,825. Then I would give every man $675 more in lieu of office rent and repeal this law that we have passed to build a big office building. I think the interest on the money required to erect that building, and its running expenses, would amount to more than $675 per Member, and I think with that sum each Member could get accommodations more satisfactory to himself than the office building. This would give to each Member $2,500 in lieu of mileage and stationery and clerk hire and office rent, and allow him to expend it as he pleases. It would not cost the country, I believe, a dollar more than it is paying to-day, and it would not be giving us anything more except in the office rent, but I think it would make it a great deal more comfortable for us all. It would allow us to make any contracts we please about our clerks. Each man could pay as much and save as much as he pleased, and while benefiting us would not cost the country anything.

But, of course, that would not be permissible here, as it would be clearly subject on this bill to a point of order and ought to be passed on carefully by a committee.

But I think myself that all these perquisites, as they might be called, ought to be wiped out, and we ought to give ourselves the money to use as we please. I do not believe the people think that we are overpaid to-day, and, of course, it is only because we are afraid of public opinion that we do not raise our salaries. This proposition of mine would not raise our salaries in the sense of costing the Treasury more than we do to-day, but at the same time, by consolidating our different accounts, it would be to our advantage and convenience. I think that we ought not to take this extra mileage, whether it is technically compensation or not, because, although mileage has come to be a mere matter of phrase and is not used to pay for our traveling expenses, yet the people, the country at large, look upon it as compensation for going home and coming back, and if we take it now they will say that we are taking an allowance for thus going home and coming back, when, in fact, we had just a second in which to make the journey. Therefore, while we have unquestionably a legal right to it and this appropriation simply carries out existing law, I think we would be very unwise to take it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] whether he offered this amendment as a substitute for the text of the bill or as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. As a substitute for the text of the bill.

Mr. BAKER. I should like to ask the Chair whether the law cited by the gentleman from Massachusetts is the present law or not? If it is the present law, must not the Chair rule that this section is out of order as new legislation?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not the law; the gentleman from Massachusetts did not so state.

Mr. BAKER. I asked the Chair that question because I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts to say he was in doubt.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not the law. The only law on the subject to-day is the act of 1866.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, the question of order having been disposed of, the real question involved in this proposition is now before the House. It is raised by the presence in the bill of these paragraphs providing for mileage, and by the motion of the gentleman from Alabama to strike them out. The question is now whether we ought to adopt that motion or ought to pass the bill with those paragraphs retained in it.

In my judgment, the motion to strike out ought to prevail. I do not believe that the Chairman is correct in his construction of the law in regarding mileage as a part of our compensation. I do not believe that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is correct in his conclusion that there is no doubt about the correctness of the construction given to the statute by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole. On the contrary, I believe the compensation is $5,000 per year, and in addition to the compensation, mileage at a specified rate is allowed. Now the reading of the provision itself:

"That the compensation of each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress shall be $5,000 per annum, to be computed from the first day of the present Congress."

That language of the clause last quoted has reference, of course, to the particular Congress which passed the act, and has no meaning now, so that, commencing that clause and bringing the remainder of the words into closer connection, the provision is:

"That the compensation of each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress shall be $5,000 per annum, and in addition thereto mileage."

At the specified rate.

The construction which gentlemen put upon these words "in addition thereto" makes them return to the "$5,000." That is the construction of the Chairman, and the construction which the gentleman from Alabama adopts. I do not take the same view. The words "in addition thereto" mean, I think, "in addition to the compensation." The compensation is $5,000, and in addition to the compensation mileage is given. I believe the language properly carries that meaning without construction, or, if considered, requires that construction as the only proper construction.

But if the "mileage" is "compensation," why should the Representative from California or the Delegate from Hawaii have greater compensation than the Representative in Congress from the city of Baltimore, who has but about 40 miles to travel?

I know the answer will come very readily, "Because the Delegate from Hawaii or the Representative from California has very much farther to travel than the Representative from Baltimore." Had he farther to travel to attend this session of Congress, calling this the second session?

If there is a division between these sessions, so that instead of this being a part of the session which began the 9th day of November we are in another session which began the first Monday in December, the session beginning the 9th of November ending at the same moment of time when the third session begins—however that may be, and that has been determined by the ruling of the Chair, as affecting this matter, every only knows that it was an absolute physical impossibility for a new Member of Congress or new Delegate to go to his home and return thereon in the short period of time, or supposed period of time, existing between the ending of the one session and the beginning of the other.

Then, if "mileage" be "compensation," the Representative in Congress from the city of Baltimore is certainly entitled to just as much of the mileage provided by this bill, and entitled to it by just as good a right, as the Representative in Congress from a district in California or the Delegate in Congress from Hawaii.

Are we really entitled to this mileage? Waiving the question whether we have the legal right to vote it to ourselves, are we entitled to it? The mileage, I believe, is intended to cover the necessary travel from our homes to the place of the assembling of Congress and the return, at the conclusion of the session, from the place where Congress sits to our homes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if we did not and could not make this trip—and there was no mileage earned and supposed to be earned by us in coming to this place—I have never heard that we could be paid for a journey we did not make. Why, Mr. Chairman, if we could do that, there would be some of us who would be tempted to make the journey, if we could get paid for it, when we did not make it. I suppose I am perfectly good for my mileage when I make the journey, and I propose for myself and my colleagues that we will be paid for what we do, and we will not be paid for what we do not do. I believe that is the sentiment of the House. I know that is the sentiment of my colleagues. I believe that is the sentiment of the country.

In that belief I for one shall vote to strike it out, shall vote against the retention in the bill, shall vote against the passage of the bill if it be left in it, shall, if I can get recognition, if it remain in the bill, offer a motion to recommit the bill with instructions to the Committee on Appropriations to strike it out. I shall do this just simply in the exercise of my judgment and the performance of my duty as I see it, without any reflection upon anybody, and without assuming any superior knowledge or any superior virtue in the matter.

That is all I desire to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. BAKER. Do I understand the Chair to rule that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio is in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair held that it was.

Mr. BAKER. Then I will discuss that as well as the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, whatever may be the legal aspects of this matter, it seems to me perfectly obvious that the Members of this House must decide it as a question of morality, as a question of equity. I can not agree with those who construe the language of the statute to mean that the $5,000 salary and the mileage taken together are compensation. There can, in my judgment, be no such construction. The $5,000 is the salary of every single one of us as Members of this House. The mileage is obviously to equalize the difference in the cost of reaching Washington. That being so, if it is impossible, as it is, waiving the question whether there was an immoderate space of time between the adjournment of the first session and the convening of the second, it is perfectly conceivable that there could have been any traveling on the part of the Members of Congress who were doing their duty.

If they were here attending to their duty as Members of Congress they could not have done any traveling between those two sessions, and obviously that being so no one can claim any right to mileage for the second session of Congress. To admit that they have a right to compensation is to say, as in the words of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND], that Members from California shall each get $1,250 more compensation than the law permits while gentlemen from Maryland or New York shall get $5,000 and no more. Of course there could be no such intent when the statute was passed. The statute clearly was to equalize the disadvantage, to equalize as between Members of Congress the cost of reaching this body, and there can be no claim in equity for the payment of mileage when there has been no possibility for anyone to return to his home and to come back in the interval of the second session, even if it is assumed to be a second session.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, is not debate on this amendment exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. If the point of order is made, the Chair will have to hold that debate is exhausted on this amendment. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move to strike out the last word of the amendment.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I suggest to the gentleman that that is an amendment to the amendment now pending, and is not in order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the motion to strike out is not in order as an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, is not in order.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Well, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that ten minutes of debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto—

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Five minutes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Put it at ten minutes. I ask unanimous consent that in ten minutes debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment and paragraph be closed in ten minutes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. A substitute—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks that all debate be closed. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I suppose it is conceded that this is an [illegible] to the pending amendment, and I also suppose that [illegible] that proposition. I wish to say a few words in opposition to the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio. [Mr. GROSVENOR.] I do not know how the House may be disposed to vote upon this question, but I do know that it is a question that should be discussed and vote be taken upon it. As the gentleman from Missouri has said, there is not any conceivable reason why this mileage should be paid. Congress should be just enough and square enough and true enough to its conscience as a body to vote in favor of striking out this paragraph allowing mileage.

It is very true, as the gentleman from Ohio has stated, that no man is compelled to take this mileage money after it is once voted; but it is also true that one of the great evils of this country to-day is governmental extravagance, and this Congress should set an example to other Departments of the Government by refusing to vote to its Members compensation which none of them can claim and which none of them can be tempted to accept if the question is squarely put to them.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that it is not fair, nor wise, nor in the public interest for Congress to vote a questionable compensation and then let each Member to decide for himself whether it is right. This would be under this amendment to allow a man to legislate for himself and decide for himself whether mileage should be allowed. This is an important question, not for the amount of money involved, but in the principle involved, and this Congress should not vote money for any purpose which is not justified by public service and by public needs.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Ohio in offering his amendment is betraying the question which is really before the House, and, as I said, he places it in a light in which it should not be placed. I think the House of Representatives, now that the question has been raised, should set the example to all the Departments of this Government of refusing to vote public money not legitimately required for public purposes. There has been no traveling necessary for public purposes at this session; let there be no mileage allowed.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am one of those who would receive or be authorized to receive a considerable amount of money if this mileage should be voted. The amount is larger perhaps than the average Member receives, but I believe that not I, nor any other Member of Representatives as an authority, should say emphatically in his vote, "The public money shall not be used in these cases, and shall not be authorized in other cases, for any purpose when not legitimately required for public uses and public needs."

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I think will settle all this trouble. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if his amendment is an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, or an amendment to the substitute.

Mr. GILLETT. I offer it as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

[illegible] appropriation shall be paid to any Member [illegible] that he did in point of fact [illegible] the Post-office and Post-roads [illegible] [Laughter.]

Mr. DEARMITT. I ask the gentleman to put in "and that he paid his fare going to and coming from." [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey is not in order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and [illegible] was [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts for the text of the [illegible]

Mr. [illegible]. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that [illegible] be reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the substitute offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The [illegible] Mr. Chairman, I would [illegible] "adjournment or end." I suggest that amendment to the amendment making it "adjournment or end."

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I will accept the suggestion [illegible]

Mr. GROSVENOR. [illegible] is clearly subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was not made.

Mr. GROSVENOR. They are now proceeding to perfect the amendment, and when it is perfected I desire to make the point of order.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. It is too late, Mr. Chairman, for the point of order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I make the point of order—

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Why, it is too late.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why, they are just perfecting it and are making changes in it.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. After an amendment has been once offered and is in order, any amendment to perfect it is in order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not know whether it is or not.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I will submit it to the Chair.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Very well, I do not care.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not state that the gentleman from Massachusetts in order to make his amendment will have to withdraw it and then offer it in the modified form.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Well, I do not dare to do that, because I fear the point of order will be raised; therefore I would prefer to have it as it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can offer it as an amendment to be voted on.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I offer as an amendment that the words "or end" be inserted after the word "adjournment."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts proposes an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "adjournment" insert the words "or end;" so as to read "adjournment or end."

Mr. SHOBER. I make the point of order on this substitute—the point of order being that it is a piece of legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order comes too late—it has been debated.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the motion of the gentleman from Alabama is pending——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I submitted two motions. There are two paragraphs in the bill, one providing mileage for the House and one providing mileage for the Senate. I moved to strike out both paragraphs, and I ask unanimous consent to have both paragraphs now be voted upon at once.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the vote will be on the motion to strike out both paragraphs. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is now on the amendments offered by the gentleman from Alabama to strike out both paragraphs.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. MADDOX. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will order that this vote be taken by tellers, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] will act as tellers.

The question was again taken by tellers; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 167, noes none.

So the amendment was agreed to. [Great applause on the Democratic side.]

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I now ask leave to return to the bottom of page 44 for the purpose of making the point of order that I raised yesterday. I will read the whole paragraph, a part of which I object to:

The objectionable part of this paragraph is the words "removal of intruders," in lines 21 and 22, "removing intruders and." Now, for the purpose of [illegible] these words, I offer an amendment, which I understand will be satisfactory to the chairman of the committee. I move to amend the paragraph by striking out, in line 21, "removal of intruders;" and in line [illegible] the words "removing intruders and."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

[illegible] for the purpose of placing allottees in unoccupied [illegible]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the point of order if the amendment is satisfactory. I understand it is satisfactory to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. HEMENWAY. There is no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be considered as agreed to without objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks upon this question in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the object of my amendment is to strike out the words "removal of intruders" from lines 2 and 3 on page 12 of the bill, for the reason that if those words are left in the bill the Indian inspectors—J. George Wright and Guy P. Cobb—or the Indian agent could use the power of the Government to remove any person residing on Indian lands that they might for any reason desire to remove. The bill as amended will only permit them to remove trespassers from lands already allotted to some individual Indian for the sole purpose of placing the allottee in possession of his land.

Mr. Chairman, this paragraph as amended is in exact accord with section 28 of the act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, which simply authorizes "an Indian agent upon the application of the allottee to place him in possession of his allotment."

Mr. Chairman, I object to placing in the hands of these Indian inspectors the power to remove, at their discretion, any person that they might call an intruder from any land in the Indian Territory. This power, in my judgment, has been used and could and would again be used by these Government officers for private speculation, and the power thus given them would enable them to make money illegitimately out of their official positions.

Mr. Chairman, I am aware that I am making a strong charge of official corruption against public officials; but, sir, there is abundant proof to sustain my charges, and if this Congress would do its duty the Interior Department's conduct of affairs in the Indian Territory would be fully and fairly investigated by Congress and the guilty parties brought to justice.

I understand that Mr. Bonaparte and a Mr. Chalmers have been sent to the Indian Territory to investigate the charges of grafting and corruption coming from that unfortunate Territory; but no report has been furnished us from these gentlemen. I believe that the unfortunate condition in that Territory is largely due to the arbitrary, stored law-defying, and vacillating course pursued by the present Secretary of the Interior. Any man who is naturally an autocrat, with autocratic powers placed in his hands by Congress, is a dangerous man to intrust with the property rights of a vast and rich country like the Indian Territory.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. S. M. Brosius, an agent of the Indian Rights Association, went to the Indian Territory last August, and in his official character and after a full investigation made the following report to Mr. Garrett, the president of the Indian Rights Association. This letter was sent by Mr. Garrett to Secretary Hitchcock, and is as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill to ratify and amend an agreement with the Sioux tribe of Indians of the Rosebud Reservation, in South Dakota, and making appropriation and provisions to carry the same into effect.

Whereas James McLaughlin, United States Indian Inspector, did on the 14th day of September, A. D. 1901, make and conclude an agreement with the male adult Indians of the Rosebud Reservation, in the state of South Dakota, which said agreement is in words and figures as follows, to wit:

This agreement made and entered into on the 14th day of September, 1901, by and between James McLaughlin, United States Indian Inspector, on the part of the United States, and the Sioux [illegible] residing on the Rosebud Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, witnesseth:

ARTICLE 1. The said Indians [illegible] Rosebud Reservation, S. Dak., for the consideration [illegible] grant, and convey to the United States [illegible] right, title and interest in and to all that part of the Rosebud Reservation in said State described as follows, to wit: [illegible] Missouri [illegible] and conveyed by [illegible]

[illegible] It is agreed that of the amount to be expended for and paid to said Indians on [illegible] Texas [illegible] women, and children, [illegible] cash payments shall be made within four months after the ratification of this agreement.

[illegible] Reservation, S. Dak., of [illegible] and forty-eight more than a majority consented to [illegible] of that bill. This bill is substantially the same as the bill I have just referred to, except that [illegible] in view of a suggestion made by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in which he said he had no objection to the passage of this bill provided the Indians were insured of as much money as they would have received under the treaty, instead of [illegible] was provided in the bill [illegible] fixed the price at $3 per acre for all lands [illegible] first six months and $2.50 for all lands taken thereafter.

It was thought by the committee that this would certainly insure to the Indians as much money as they would have received under the original treaty, and, in my judgment, it insures their [illegible] more. There is no opposition to the passage of this measure, so far as I know. The Indian Bureau and the Secretary of the Interior have both approved it, providing we fix a price, as we have done, that will insure the Indians as much money as they would have received under the original treaty. The Committee on Indian Affairs has considered it fully and at [illegible] spent several meetings of the full committee con[illegible] report of the committee is unanimous. I do not [illegible] the attention of the House in more [illegible] the bill, and unless the gentleman desires to ask [illegible] I will reserve the balance of my time.

[illegible]LEY. Mr. Speaker, I observe that in section 4, relands, it is provided that the Government pay for [illegible] Is that the usual appropriation that is put in all bills of this character?

Mr. BURKE. I am glad the gentleman has asked me that [illegible] I would state that under the enabling act under which [illegible] South Dakota was admitted to the Union it was pro[illegible] sections 16 and 36 in said State should be reserved for [illegible] the common schools of that State, and it further provided that as to the lands within an Indian reservation the pro[illegible] until the reser[illegible] and the land restored to the public [illegible]

In March of that same year Congress ratified a treaty with the Sioux Indians in South Dakota by [illegible] the enabling act, to pay outright out of the Treasury the money [illegible] 16 and 36 of that land at the price stipulated for in the treaty.

Mr. FINLEY. Then, as I understand the gentleman, he bases [illegible] on or equity for this provision upon the enabling act admitting South Dakota into the Union?

Mr. BURKE. Yes.

Mr. FINLEY. And not otherwise?

[illegible]. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. [illegible]LEY. I believe that we are reading the bill. Is the bill open [illegible] amendment?

The SPEAKER. Not while it is being read. It will be open for [illegible] when the reading is completed.

[illegible] the reading of the bill.

[illegible]. Mr. Speaker, I am [illegible] for the opening [illegible] a portion of the Rose[illegible], in South Dakota, being that portion of the [illegible] County. In 1901 a treaty was entered into [illegible] and Indians on the part of the United States, by [illegible] Indians agreed to sell to the Government this land for [illegible] bursed by [illegible] of the lands to settlers, it never [illegible] than through the Committee on Indian Affairs, which [illegible] reported it favorably. It was [illegible]

[illegible] luding days of the last session of Congress a new bill was prepared, substantially as this bill now provides, and [illegible] provided that the lands should be ceded by the [illegible] Government, disposed of to settlers under the provi[illegible] to be [illegible] Congress because of lack of time, but during the [illegible] that bill was submitted to this tribe of Indians for their [illegible] and forty-eight more than a majority consented to [illegible] of that bill. This bill is substantially the same as the bill I have just referred to, except that [illegible] in view of a suggestion made by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in which he said he had no objection to the passage of this bill provided the Indians were insured of as much money as they would have received under the treaty, instead of [illegible] was provided in the bill [illegible] fixed the price at $3 per acre for all lands [illegible] first six months and $2.50 for all lands taken thereafter.

[illegible]LEY. Mr. Speaker, I observe that in section 4, relands, it is provided that the Government pay for [illegible] Is that the usual appropriation that is put in all bills of this character?

Mr. BURKE. I am glad the gentleman has asked me that [illegible] I would state that under the enabling act under which [illegible] South Dakota was admitted to the Union it was pro[illegible] sections 16 and 36 in said State should be reserved for [illegible] the common schools of that State, and it further provided that as to the lands within an Indian reservation the pro[illegible] until the reser[illegible] and the land restored to the public [illegible]

Mr. BURKE. Yes.

Mr. FINLEY. And not otherwise?

Mr. BURKE. No.

Mr. FINLEY. What is the number of acres of land that have been granted by the National Government to the State of South Dakota for school purposes [illegible]

Mr. BURKE. Sections 16 and 36.

Mr. FINLEY. About how many acres does it amount to?

Mr. BURKE. I could not state.

Mr. FINLEY. The State is quite rich in school lands, is it not?

Mr. BURKE. Yes.

Mr. FINLEY. About what amount of money will be required from the Treasury of the United States to pay for these lands provided for here in section 4?

Mr. BURKE. Not [illegible] about $70,000—I think $72,000 or [illegible] I am going to ask to amend the bill by striking out [illegible] and inserting "$75,000." The actual amount, I think, will be about $72,000, as nearly as I can calculate.

Mr. [illegible]. I reserve the balance of my time and yield ten [illegible] to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER].

Mr. BAKER. Oh, make it fifteen.

Mr. BURKE. I hope the gentleman will be satisfied with ten minutes. We want to get through [illegible] as quickly as possible.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, I [illegible] that it will [illegible] when the vote on this bill is taken whether I speak for five or fifteen minutes. Yet, Mr. Speaker, because this bill involves what seems to me a violation of the principle which should [illegible] with reference to the ownership of land because it [illegible] settlement, I desire to enter my protest against [illegible] on these grounds.

I regret very much, Mr. Speaker, that I did not know until a [illegible] ago that this bill was to be discussed to-day. I [illegible] have liked a short time, if but an hour, to send [illegible] to the attention of the House, so as to am[illegible] remarks I shall now have to make spontaneously.

Mr. Speaker, what is it that this bill proposes to do? From the [illegible]point from which I shall discuss the bill we can [illegible] from the discussion. I am not going to raise the [illegible] point: the point is what is to become of that land when it comes into the possession of the United States and the ownership [illegible] of the people as a whole.

The bill, [illegible] a policy which has obtained in the past. Is that not so?

Mr. BURKE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAKER. Now, Mr. Speaker, that policy to my mind is a fatally defective policy—a policy which in a large measure is responsible for the economic conditions that exist in the United States. [illegible] Congress on the other side will say that the [illegible] in this country were never more prosperous than they are now. Let us concede for the sake of argument that is so; that they are more prosperous than they ever were; yet that does not alter my position that they would have been infinitely more prosperous than they are, relatively more prosperous. That they have ever been so is the fact that the United States has allowed this natural [illegible] to be [illegible] of its public lands. They have permitted [illegible] land, and no matter how low the price [illegible] as the result of [illegible] population—aside from the natural [illegible] of the increase of value, goes into the private pocket of the individual who was fortunate enough, perhaps shrewd enough, or quick-witted enough, or anything else you may choose to call it, to get there a little ahead of some other one and by [illegible] in many cases [illegible] for a mere song a property that may have been the real value at the time of the purchase, but which subsequently attached to that land as a result of population [illegible].

Now, in what particular does this policy violate what should in my judgment be the policy of the United States? It violates it in this way: it says to the man who is shrewd enough to go there and arrives a day, a month, or a year ahead of somebody else—I care not what the period of time may be—he shall have the exclusive "ownership" of that land; he shall enjoy all the [illegible] which subsequently attaches, no matter what causes that [illegible].

In other words, you are by this and similar bills perpetuating—you are offering a premium to [illegible] in land speculation in the United States, and land [illegible] of this country, as it has been the curse of every [illegible] country in the world.

The evil results which have followed the existing systems of entry and purchase of public lands are clearly illustrated in an article by J. L. McCreery, of this city, entitled "Our system of distributing the public lands."

In illustrating some of the fraudulent methods employed, which no doubt in the main are due to the fact that the present system offers great premiums in the shape of whatever increment of value may subsequently attach to land by reason of increase of population, etc., he says:

Why do men engage in these gigantic land frauds? Is it conceivable that they would do this, that such practices would be engaged in if the leasing system obtained, if they knew that no matter what the increase in the value of the land its annual rental would increase in like proportion? Certainly not! They do this, they are willing to lose even their own souls because of the great prizes offered them for the possibility of a large increase in the value of the land, which at some time in the future they will be able to squeeze out of the genuine settler, the man who is really looking for a quarter section of land upon which to build a home and rear a family. Periodical appraisements at brief intervals would destroy this form of land speculation and all the fraud which attaches to it.

The methods which Mr. McCreery cites are no doubt largely responsible for the existence of enormous land holdings by companies and individuals. Every schoolboy knows the enormous increasing power of accumulated capital. As these large estates increase in size and number the greater will be their power to absorb the smaller farms adjoining them. Our farms of 500 acres and over would now cover an area more than five times the size of the great State of Indiana, with its 2,000,000 and over inhabitants. That is to say, about 115,940 men own a vast area of about 126,000,000 acres of the best farming land in the world, and which should be divided among 10,000,000 people, and which is capable of giving support, well-ordered homes, and happiness to that vast number of people. And when we consider the further awful fact that about one-half of this vast expanse of 126,000,000 acres of land, which within the memory of men still living was parceled out by our Government to our citizens in small farms, is now at this early day described by and owned by 31,540 men and corporations, the situation is still more alarming. In one of his speeches Daniel Webster once said: "A free government can not long endure where the tendency of laws is to concentrate the wealth of the country in the hands of a few, and to render the masses poor and dependent." In the light of the above facts, can there be any doubt as to the tendency of our present land laws, and that radical changes in our land laws are absolutely necessary?

The extent of many of these large estates is simply astounding, as is shown by the following list of a very few of the large land owners of this country:

	Acres.
Col. D. C. Murphy	4,000,000
Three [illegible] owned by four men	3,000,000
The Stanford [illegible]	1,000,000
John W. Toward, a farmer in North Dakota (nearly as large as Rhode Island)	704,000
Ex-Senator Dorsey	500,000
Miller & Lux, San Francisco	450,000
Mr. McLean, of California	400,000
William A. Clark	350,000
New York [illegible]	300,000
[illegible]	300,000
[illegible] Cattle Company	[illegible]
[illegible]	200,000
[illegible]	200,000
[illegible]	200,000
[illegible] family, of California	150,000
[illegible] Coal and Iron Company	100,000

But a still more alarming feature lies in the enormous alien ownership of our land. In addition to the numerous smaller alien holdings here, fifty-six foreign persons and corporations own more than 26,000,000 acres of our land—an area equal to four of the great States of Ohio, Kentucky, or Virginia. The enormous size of some of these holdings of land in this country by foreigners may be seen by the following partial list:

was one of the great railroad lawyers of the country, Thomas G. Shearman, who had not only been attorney for some of the great railroad systems—among others, for James J. Hill, of the Great Northern—but at the time of his death was counsel of that great Rockefeller institution, the National City Bank. Mr. Shearman repeatedly said, "that neither the preferred nor the common stock of the railroads of this country represented any actual investment of capital (if we exclude money paid and stock issued to legislators—not legislatures—for their franchises), but that the railroads as a whole had not originally cost to exceed 35 per cent of the par of the bonds; that from 25 to 50 per cent of the preferred was issued as an extra inducement to the bankers who bought the bonds, and that the balance of the preferred and practically all of the common stock was divided between the promoters of the railroad, the legislators, and the intermediaries who secured the franchises.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what should be the policy of the United States? The policy of the United States should be to lease these lands and all other lands which it owns; to lease them for short periods of years, and at the end of such short period let there be another leasing, giving to the Government whatever increment of value has attached to these lands by reason of the increase of population that has taken place in the meantime, by reason of the increase of invention, by the improvements of government, or anything else. For you must remember that there is no invention, there is no improvement of government, fire, police, or anything else, there is no increase of population, but what adds to the value of land. The policy of the Government, as I say, should be to lease the land for brief periods, and at the end of these periods of lease the land should be reappraised and men should be permitted to bid, and if some one else beside the owner of the improvements gets the land of course he would be recompensed the full value of the improvements.

Mr. LACEY. I should like to ask my friend how many orchards, he thinks, would be set out in Dakota and Iowa if a man had a three years' lease on the land and the chance of somebody else taking it away from him at the end of that time?

Mr. BAKER. I will answer the gentleman from Iowa by saying that I have said nothing whatever about the length of the period of lease. My own judgment, however, is that it ought not to be more than five years. Therefore, I will meet his question. Let me say to the gentleman that if the owners of the land are assured, as they will be, that they shall have the preference of opportunity to secure the new lease, there will be no difficulty. And I will say that the people of the United States are not going to pass any law interfering with the present system of land tenure that does not to a very large extent favor the men who are in possession of the land. Why, the whole system has been to favor these men in the past.

My friend from Iowa asks "how many orchards would be set out in Dakota and Iowa if a man had a three years' lease on the land and the chances of somebody else taking it away from him at the end of that time."

I do not imagine that the people of Iowa or South Dakota are much different from those of Illinois. In the latter State one man, really an alien, Lord William Scully, of London, owns from fifty to sixty thousand acres of the best farming land there. We are told "that he rents it at the highest cash rental, requires the tenants to build their own houses, barns, etc., and until the State prohibited it they had to pay the taxes on the land. Since then he has added the tax to the rent." From his tenants he receives about $150,000 per annum for the privilege of merely existing on his soil.

This shows not merely that men will rent land, but that they are doing so on a large scale from private individuals, and I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to this, for here they not merely lay out their own orchards, but they build their own houses, barns, etc., upon this rented land. And they are compelled to do so because of the policy which is perpetuated in this bill under which individuals are encouraged to engage in land speculation on a gigantic scale.

They are encouraged, aye, almost invited, to engage in the shameful practices I have referred to. Because of the tremendous prizes which this system offers, fraud, robbery, and sometimes arson are engaged in. Any and all means are adopted by the shrewd, cunning, and unscrupulous, who are frequently even in these cases the rich and the powerful, to get title to immense tracts of the public land, not for occupancy and use, but to withhold from use, for the more land thus withheld the greater premium these men can squeeze out of the real settlers either in original purchase price or in annual rentals. That even the possession of great wealth does not deter men from engaging in such practices is shown in the decisions of the General Land Office, volume 12, January 1 to June 30, 1891, which, on page 34, recites:

[illegible] land entries were filed in that [illegible] acres, which at once passed into the hands of Mr. J. B. Haggin, and for which he paid to the receiver $3,744.45. Haggin's claim was that he had loaned money to these 151 entrymen, and that they had assigned to him their "final certificates."

What the present value of these 35,000 acres of land may be I have no means of knowing, but it is quite possible that their ownership thus obviously fraudulently acquired is the basis of at least one of the millions he is reputed to possess.

Time and time again we are told that perpetual ownership of the fee is absolutely essential to induce men to cultivate the land. It is constantly asserted that unless the land is sold for all time the occupier will not improve it; that, according to the inference of the query of my friend from Iowa, no one will plant orchards thereon. This, in the face of the fact that for over three hundred years the leasing policy—the policy of paying the rental for the use of the land into the public treasury instead of into private pockets—obtains in Freudenstadt, Germany, as set forth in an article by Henry Labouchere in his paper, the London Truth. He says:

For instance, there is Freudenstadt, a hamlet in the valley among the Alps in the southwestern part of the German Empire, 45 miles of [illegible]. That region has been favored with but few natural resources, but [illegible] three and four hundred years ago [illegible] land. [illegible] whatever natural wealth or resources were found to accrue [illegible] [illegible] community [illegible] The theory and practice has been persisted [illegible] some price of valuable timber which the people dig and plow for [illegible] This man who do the digging receive day's wages, but what they [illegible] day's sold the pay for the carcass" what remains "represents" [illegible] treasury. Upon the hillsides is some serviceable timber. The men who dig down and pile up the timber are paid day's wages; when the timber is sold its value as it stood uncut upon the stump—in short, the "stumpage"—goes into the treasury.

What a pity a few thousand such monks, intelligent in economics, did not come to this country instead of the William Penns who transplanted here the English system of selling the land.

The income from these sources pays their share of the tax levied for support of the German Empire, pays their own officers, builds their houses, and pays their teachers. Hence their children have not been taxed a cent in three hundred and more years. Their income always exceeds their expenditures. In 1882 this surplus was divided among the inhabitants per capita, each man, woman, and child receiving in terms of our money $40. The amount distributed in 1890 would have been $10.55, but the citizens voted to apply it to building water works.

The folly of the present system of permanently alienating the land is clearly set forth in Mr. McCreery's article, from which I quote:

The refusal of the Government to use for its own support the rental value of its ordinary land, the royalty of its minerals, the stumpage of its timber compelled it necessary to pass other laws most oppressive, unrighteous, and demoralizing. The tariff laws, resulting in smuggling, provoking perjury in the custom-house, and when honestly enforced woefully discriminating against the poor man. Internal-revenue laws, inducing the making of "moonshine whisky," the murder of revenue officers, and other forms of lawlessness.

But when I ask the average farmer, "Would you not like such a change in the tax laws as would remove you of one half the tax you are now paying, and place it on the shoulders of the land speculators, the mine owners, the timber syndicates, the oil companies, and others who are now enriching themselves by monopolizing the bounties of nature?" he answers, "The old plan, by which I and my ancestors have been fleeced in the past, is good enough for me." When I ask the average laborer, "Would you not like a system of taxation that would furnish employment to a million more workingmen than can now find employment (half a million in the cities and another half a million in the country) and raise the wages of all?" he turns upon me with a sneer and says, "You are a crank and an anarchist. Get hence!"

I could very well afford to go, for while the farmer and the workingman are paying twice the tax they need to they are also paying at least half of mine. But alas! this is not merely a question as to which shall pay his own or the other's tax, but one of honesty or morality and national welfare. Aside from the fact that our system of land laws opens invitingly wide the door to gigantic frauds upon the Government and upon individuals and offers an enormous premium on perjury, their effect, even when enforced in strict accordance with the intent of the legislative power that enacted them, is consequently pernicious.

He says:

If it be demoralizing to train a nation to become a set of liars when confronted by tax assessors or custom-house officers; if it be demoralizing to educate the young to the idea that labor is degrading and that the most respectable and honorable thing in life is to enrich one's self by being a parasite upon one's fellow-creatures; if it be demoralizing for the Government not only to throw away its present resources, but to do so upon a lottery plan which encourages gambling and a horde of kindred vices; if it be demoralizing to increase the number of the landless multitude who have no stake in the welfare of our nation; if it be demoralizing to have a million idle men among us, constituting a "reserve" ward in every city and a great army of tramps traversing the country; then I have proved the proposition that in addition to being the parent of fraud and perjury, our land laws, even when honestly and faithfully administered, are a source of widespread and woeful demoralization.

You say, if you do not permit private ownership, there will be no security of tenure; there will be no inducement for people to go on and improve their land. To any man who cares to make that statement upon this floor I wish to say that some of the greatest buildings in the city of New York are situated upon leased land—that some of the most valuable buildings in the city of New York have been erected upon leased land, upon land owned by the Sailors' Snug Harbor corporation land that for generations has been leased from time to time. The entire usufruct of that land goes to that private corporation—the Sailors' Snug Harbor—and does not go to the men who own the buildings, who use the buildings, and carry on great mercantile affairs. Yet you will say that it is necessary that there shall be permanent private ownership of land before men will engage in business enterprises.

Mr. Speaker, go into any one of the large cities of the United States, and what will you find? You will find hundreds of thousands of individuals congregated in such a small area that it is [illegible] impossible for them to breathe separately. The crowded [illegible] of New York City, the crowded condition of Chicago, [illegible] that exist in those and other cities and that also [illegible] here in the capital of the United States, are directly due to this policy of encouraging people to withhold land from [illegible] that they may be able to exact an ever-increasing tribute [illegible] who subsequently use it, after paying a brigand's ransom for it.

I have said that the existence of slums in our great cities is directly traceable to the policy which is continued in this bill of selling the public lands outright. This policy of outright sale, together with the policy of assessing unused land at but a fraction of its value, creates overcrowding—that is, the slums—and which has been recently shown to exist right here in Washington to an alarming degree. To what extent land speculation is encouraged in the District of Columbia by this foolish policy of [illegible] entirely exempting unused land from taxation is shown in [illegible] of Paul T. Bowen, who in January, 1896, then being a [illegible] Treasury Department, purchased 2.3 acres of land in [illegible] southwestern part of the District, near Chevy Chase, for $1,840. When he bought it it was assessed at $225 an acre. The following year the assessment was reduced to $200 an acre as "agricultural" land at $1 on the $100, and was continued at that rate until January, 1901, when he sold the land for $5,000, making a net profit of $3,137—170 per cent—in five years. This land sold for an out $2,200 an acre and was assessed at $200 an acre—about one-eleventh of its value. I suppose the assessors assessed it as "agricultural land" so as to help the farming industry.

The following from the Washington Post gives but one illustration of the results that follow this encouragement to land speculation:

[Washington Post, January 8, 1902.]

The object of the resolution, argued Mr. M. I. Weller, was to provide for an equalization of taxation and proper valuation of these parcels of land [illegible] for speculative purposes. The Government property adjoined [illegible] a plot containing 71 acres from a tract of 250 acres. The portion bought by the Government was about one-fourth of the whole, and the [illegible] by the assessors at $85,000. The actual valuation [illegible] and at the prices of real estate men the price [illegible] Government was by no means high. As one instance of the [illegible] more startling was shown by Mr. Weller. The Government [illegible] another piece of property beyond the [illegible] $2,400 was paid. He had [illegible] back up the [illegible] and found it to be $3,000, less than 6 per cent of the amount that the Government paid for it.

One of the disastrous effects which have followed our adoption of the English land system, which is perpetuated in this bill, is [illegible] in an editorial paragraph in a recent issue of the Public, a paper which I stated on a previous occasion discusses current affairs in a manner that can not help but clarify the thought of those who read its editorials:

How American sympathy went out to the evicted Irish some years ago. [illegible] were turned out of their homes for nonpayment [illegible] New York City. Apparently the only difference is in the fact that [illegible] during the year has a shadowy thing special in [illegible] New York overcrowded and your wages about twenty times as high as in the [illegible] year of Irish evictions. In proportion to population the [illegible] Whereas the Irish evictions of the last year represented [illegible] of population, those of New York numbered about 1 to [illegible] of population.

Does it not constitute an indictment of the present system of [illegible] public land, thus encouraging land speculation, which has produced the same evils here as have afflicted Ireland for generations?

I have said that our policy of permanently alienating the public lands was copied from England. That is true. I wish I could say it is also true that this country is ready to follow England in a change in this very policy which she seems to be on the eve of making, or at least which she gives unmistakable signs of being likely to do in the near future. My Republican friends some five years ago suddenly became such great admirers of England and the policy of territorial aggrandizement of her Tory ministers that they "benevolently assimilated" the Filipinos. Recently they have been even more warm in their expressions of admiration for Joseph Chamberlain's cynical, retrograde policy. No more are we told that it is necessary to twist the British lion's tail on every occasion that offers; on the contrary, our American Tories even seemed to be about to invite that renegade radical, Chamberlain, who is out-Torying the Tories, to come over here and take charge of the rapidly approaching campaign for "protection and plutocracy"—I beg pardon, for "protection and labor."

I admit that their pro-Chamberlain ardor has apparently somewhat cooled with the English election returns of the past six weeks. With constituency after constituency, rural as well as urban, recording themselves against a resuspension of the corn laws or any other form of protection, our Republican friends are probably not quite so sanguine of what will come out of a British general election.

While it is gratifying to observe that Chamberlain is not succeeding in his attempt to hoodwink the British workingman into believing that he can lift himself up by his bootstraps—that he can tax himself rich, that a tax upon foodstuffs will benefit him—it is even more gratifying to observe that the Liberal party there, the prototype of the Democratic party here, is not content to meet Mr. Chamberlain with the mere negative proposition of "leaving well enough alone," nor to emulate Marcus Hanna in his "stand-pat" policy, but are rather showing an unmistakable disposition to go to the root of the matter.

One of the great London magazines, the Contemporary Review, has in its January number an article entitled "The need of a Radical party." If we were for American consumption, I suppose it would have called it "The need of a radical Democratic party."

This article, in describing what is needed to combat and successfully overthrow the revival of protection, says:

[From Contemporary Review for January.]

There [illegible] a great question which will live means in [illegible] with the Government, which it will [illegible] that the land question goes to the root of [illegible] "Man has [illegible] save Heaven's manage, and in Christian man and he land are parted. It [illegible] surprising that not only [illegible] and friends of Donald [illegible] view this question. What far reaches is the [illegible] the [illegible] to the rearing of [illegible] The [illegible] of agriculture the fact that a yearly increasing load of [illegible] and work on the soil, and a yearly decreasing proportion feed a increasing [illegible] [illegible] the population of [illegible] in the last [illegible] years a further decrease of 20 per cent has taken place, while in fatal testimony to the tendency to make land the sport [illegible] of the rich rather than the performance of the entire people, the number of gamekeepers has increased 25 per cent in the same period. Is it possible to state a fact of greater social significance?

It may be profitable to ask right here why the number of English agricultural laborers has declined 52 per cent in fifty years, while gamekeepers have increased 25 per cent during that period. The answer is not hard to find. It is found in a system of taxation in England, as here, which places nearly all the burden of local taxation upon improvements and upon personal property, while land values almost escape taxation. Let England but reverse this policy. Let her exempt improvements and other forms of labor products from taxation and place the burden of taxation where it naturally belongs—on land values—and her dukes, marquises, and earls will no longer find it profitable to breed rabbits and foxes. The land will then be cultivated, and farm laborers will not need to immigrate here or to Canada to look for employment. It is land monopoly, made possible because land is not taxed according to its value, that drives the farm laborer from the country of his birth, while gamekeepers are employed to drive his fellow off of "my lord's" land. Our policy of selling the public lands and then placing the burden of taxation upon the settlers' improvements, while the land speculator almost entirely escapes, is producing in America the same evils.

The writer goes on to describe further the desertion of English fields and the degradation of the landless laborers, and asks: "What are the remedies?" He answers:

Not the discredited device of protection, which the laborers will not have at any price, but the reform of our land system for land system [illegible] the more effective bar to the employment of the wealth so discovered that [illegible] and Malthusian theorist of the pressure of population on the means of subsistence be and forever and that, as Prince Kropotkin shows, the land of [illegible] enough out of the earth to feed not merely the foreign-fed manufacturers of beauty, but double and treble that number.

The writer continues:

Municipal bodies charged with the growing burden of improvements, the [illegible] of transport and other expenses, the appalling waste of [illegible] are rapidly coming to Mr. Lloyd's conclusion, that the taxation of ground values lies at the root of the housing problem.

As it is inevitable that we in this country must ultimately conclude.

The article then shows the reasonableness of this method of taxation and violently attacks Mr. Chamberlain's proposals, calling them a "monstrous piece of economic atavism"—an attempt to shift more and more of the burdens of the state upon industry and wages.

The conclusion of the author is that "the land question is ripe for action."

The Contemporary Review is not alone in pointing to the taxation of land values (in England sometimes termed the "taxation of site values," at other times "taxation of ground rents") as the policy which the Liberal party must adopt to successfully and completely defeat Chamberlain's protection propaganda. For the London Speaker, the leading Liberal weekly, in its editorial of January 9, says:

We have to attack not merely the false remedies the protectionists are offering us, but the real abuses and injustices they are defending.

It proceeds:

For this reason we are delighted to notice the emphasis laid by the Independent Review on the necessity of land reform a subject which occupies two articles in the January number of that periodical. The first article, [illegible] from the pen of the editor, destroys in a terse and luminous style [illegible] the historical grounds for land monopoly. The second, written by Mr. Charles Trevelyan, [illegible] for the taxation of land [illegible] opinions in favor of treating this question as one of immediate urgency have been expressed often enough in these columns.

The Speaker urges the Liberal party to grapple fearlessly with the land problem, and says "the case for action is unusually strong."

Mr. Chamberlain proposes to increase the price of food without relieving at all the pressure of rent, and [illegible] measures of [illegible] grappling with the problem in its various aspects, for the land question is just as important in Ireland as in England.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BAKER. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to one section of the bill.

Mr. BURKE. I do not think it would be in order to offer an amendment. I can not accept it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to an hour, and after the expiration of that time the bill is open to amendment, unless the previous question operates.

Mr. BURKE. Well, I do not yield to an amendment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will say to the gentleman that I am in favor of the bill. I believe it is correct in its policy. I believe that these reservations should be opened up, but I do not believe in the provision of the bill that provides that after the four years' time has elapsed that the remaining portion of the unsold land should be sold in unlimited quantities under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe. I desire to offer an amendment providing that the amount sold to any one man shall not exceed 640 acres. I would limit it to 160 acres if it were agricultural land, but I presume all the agricultural land will have been taken within the four years and that there will be no agricultural land to be taken up.

Mr. BURKE. Does the gentleman want to limit the amount to 640 acres?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; to 640 acres.

Mr. BURKE. Is that all that the amendment provides?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is all that part of the amendment provides.

Mr. BURKE. I do not object to that.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There is another amendment which I think should be made to this bill. If there were valuable minerals in this land the minerals should not pass with the land and be subject to entry. I believe that the miners are entitled to as much consideration as the homesteader.

Mr. BURKE. There is a general law that protects that.

Mr. BAKER. I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again state to the gentleman from South Dakota that he is recognized for an hour.

Mr. BURKE. I understand that, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. And that the bill is subject to amendment unless the gentleman at the end of that time asks the previous question.

Mr. BURKE. I stated that I had no objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas, to limit it as he states, and after the disposition of that I shall ask for the previous question upon the bill and amendments to its passage.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from South Dakota that the Chair understands the rule to be this: In the hour that the gentleman controls the bill is not subject to amendment, and that so far the amendments have been read for information. Now, if the gentleman yields the floor the bill will be subject to amendment.

Mr. BURKE. I am not yielding the floor, Mr. Speaker, and I ask for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is asked for.

Mr. BAKER. I shall object, Mr. Speaker, unless I can have an opportunity to offer my amendment.

Mr. BURKE. I ask that the bill be amended as suggested by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent——

Mr. BAKER. I object, Mr. Speaker, unless I can have an opportunity to offer my amendment. You can vote my amendment down in a second.

Mr. BURKE. Do I understand that the amendments of the committee are now considered as pending?

The SPEAKER. The amendments reported from the committee are pending. The gentleman from South Dakota can offer an amendment if he sees proper, and then call the previous question. He can test the sense of the House at any time he desires.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "interior," in line 12, page 10 of the bill, insert the words "not more than 640 acres to any one purchaser."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That covers the ground of my amendment.

On motion of Mr. BURKE, the previous question was ordered.

The question was taken on the amendment, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Do I understand I can not now offer an amendment?

The SPEAKER. The previous question is now operating.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FINLEY. Merely for a matter of his information. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from South Dakota to the proposition to amend the amount of appropriation by reducing it from $90,000 to $55,000.

Mr. BURKE. I am going to offer that at the proper time. I move to amend, Mr. Speaker, in section 5, in line 11, to strike out the word "ninety" and insert "seventy-five."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BAKER. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. FINLEY. I move to recommit the bill with instruction to report back a reduced appropriation from $90,000 to $55,000, in line 10, page 11.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves to recommit the bill with instructions to the committee to report the same back immediately with an amendment, striking out the word "ninety" and inserting the word "seventy-five" in line 10, page 11; so as to make the appropriation $55,000 instead of $90,000.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. What will be the status of the bill if the gentleman's motion prevails?

The SPEAKER. It will have to be reported back by the committee forthwith if this motion is adopted.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I report back the bill H. R. 10448 with an amendment, in accordance with the direction of the House.

Mr. BAKER. A parliamentary inquiry. Has the committee had a meeting?

Mr. BURKE. I now ask the previous question on the bill and the amendments to its passage.

Mr. BAKER. You can not——

The SPEAKER. One moment. The Chair is informed, and his recollection without the information concurs with the information, that this is the usual proceeding and that there are precedents. The Clerk will read section 1022 of Hinds's Parliamentary Practice.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 1022. A bill may be recommitted with instructions that it be reported back forthwith, and this request may be made at any time in the consideration of the committee and is not subject to the point that it had been considered in the Committee of the Whole if it has previously been considered there.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I now ask the previous question on the passage of the bill and the amendments.

Mr. BAKER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. Do I understand that under the rules it is not necessary for the committee to meet when the bill was recommitted?

The SPEAKER. Such has been the practice with such instructions.

Mr. BAKER. All right; I want to get that clear. Now I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment. The fate of that amendment is known. Probably there will not be another vote for it in this House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to offer an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BAKER) the ayes were 110 and the noes 1.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point of no quorum.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may be permitted to offer his amendment. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAKER. I withdraw my point of no quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may offer an amendment.

Mr. MACON. I object.

Mr. BAKER. I raise the point of no quorum, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PAYNE. Evidently, Mr. Speaker, there is no quorum, and we can vote on this Monday morning to accommodate my friend from New York. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Pending that, the Chair will submit the following personal request:

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BADGER indefinitely, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT.

The motion of Mr. PAYNE was then agreed to.

Accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday next at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the president of the Capital Traction Company, submitting a statement of the receipts and disbursements for the year ended December 31, 1903—to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Samuel B. Harris against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Postmaster-General, submitting a reply to the House as to the use of horses and vehicles in his Department—to the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Navy submitting an estimate of appropriation for reimbursement of the owners of the tug Hustler—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. HENRY of Texas, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. SENATE.

MONDAY, February 1, 1904.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD EVERETT HALE.

Mr. CHARLES H. DIETRICH, a Senator from the State of Nebraska, appeared in his seat to-day.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Friday last, when, on request of Mr. HANSBROUGH, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal will stand approved.

SOLDIERS' HOME AT MARION, IND.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of deficiency in the appropriation for the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, Marion Branch, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, $5,000; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BOARD FOR PROMOTION OF RIFLE PRACTICE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for the service for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1903, for expenses of Board for Promotion of Rifle Practice, $850; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF CAPITAL TRACTION COMPANY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the annual report of the Capital Traction Company for the year 1903; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

JOURNALS OF CONFEDERATE STATES CONGRESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 28th ultimo, a copy of the Journals of the Provisional and the First and Second Congresses of the Confederate States of America, now in the custody of the War Department.

The papers comprise about seven octavo volumes, and, if there be no objection, the Chair will refer them to the Committee on Printing without any order in reference to the printing, leaving the Committee on Printing to determine what shall be done.

Mr. BATE. I think that course will be agreeable.

Mr. BACON. Is it a recommendation of the Secretary of War?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes; a communication from the Secretary of War.

Mr. BACON. What is the purport of the communication?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It transmits the Journals of the Provisional and the First and Second Congresses of the Confederate States.

Mr. BACON. I understand, but I wish to know what is the purpose of the transmission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The papers were transmitted in order that they might be printed.

Mr. HALE. I think it is in reply to some resolution adopted by the Senate asking the Secretary of War to send in these papers.

Mr. BACON. That is what I wished to know.

Mr. HALE. It is a matter of historic value, and if it goes to the Committee on Printing they will report as to the printing.

Mr. BATE. Let it be printed and lie on the table, please.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are seven octavo volumes.

Mr. BATE. Oh, no; just the communication from the Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be printed and referred, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. FORAKER subsequently said: Mr. President, I understand that while I was absent from the Senate for a few minutes the Chair laid before the Senate the papers transmitted by the Secretary of War in response to a Senate resolution adopted on the 28th ultimo, calling for a copy of the Journals of the Provisional and the First and Second Congresses of the Confederate States of America, and that they were referred by the Chair to the Committee on Printing.

I ask that that reference may be reconsidered and that the papers may be printed as a Senate document. I think there will be no controversy as to the propriety of printing the document. It is something which has been prepared by the War Department at a very great expense of time and trouble.

Mr. BATE. I think that is all we desire on this side about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And without any further order in relation to the printing?

Mr. FORAKER. I understand that it is not necessary to make any order under the rule. It is a document prepared by the War Department, called for by the Senate and transmitted to the Senate in response to a resolution adopted by the Senate. The document is one entirely proper to be printed and the purpose in asking for it was to have it printed. So I——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What the Chair was asking was as to the future in addition to the number to be printed under that order, and as to how many additional copies the Senator would desire to have printed? There is a limit fixed by the rule to the number that can be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. FORAKER. Let it be printed as a Senate document. Then, after we have had a chance to look at it, if we want to have additional copies we can adopt a resolution providing for the printing of additional copies for the use of the Senate and also for the use of the House.

Mr. BATE. For the present I think that is the correct course.

Mr. ALDRICH. What are the papers?

Mr. FORAKER. Copies of the Journals of the Provisional and the First and Second Congresses of the Confederate States.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is that the document which the Chair stated is in seven octavo volumes?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. GALLINGER. It seems to me that some committee ought to look at it before it is ordered printed. Does the rule apply to this document that if the printing exceeds the cost of $100 the question shall be referred to the Committee on Printing?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not. When the request is made that it be printed as a Senate document there is no limit as to the cost.

Mr. FORAKER. It is the same as in the case of any other Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The same as in the case of any other Senate document.

Mr. FORAKER. It is a document prepared by the War Department; it comes under the rule, and it is one, I think, the public will be interested in seeing.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am quite clear in the opinion that this will be a document of much interest to Congress and to the people of the country, and yet it is a fact that one of the most striking and startling extravagances of Congress is in the matter of printing. Our homes and our committee rooms are filled with books and documents that are never consulted. I wish that there might be some way devised whereby we could economize somewhat in the item of printing.

So far as this particular document is concerned, I shall be very glad indeed to have a copy of it, and if the Senator from Ohio is clear in the opinion that it ought to be printed, of course I shall interpose no objection.

Mr. FORAKER. I feel that way about it. It has been prepared under the supervision of the War Department, and it belongs to the history of the country. I think it ought to be printed.

Mr. BATE. I ask if this is the same document that was presented a while ago and went over?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the same. It was referred to the Committee on Printing without an order to print.

Mr. BATE. So I understood.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks that that reference may be reconsidered and that it may be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. BATE. Does the Senator from Ohio indicate the number of copies that shall be printed?

Mr. FORAKER. No; I simply ask that the usual number of copies may be printed—that is quite a considerable number—and after it is in document form and we have had a chance to look at it we can provide for the printing of further copies, whatever number may be necessary.

Mr. BATE. I think the first printing should be as suggested and then we can provide afterwards for additional copies if necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio to reconsider the vote by which the document was referred to the Committee on Printing? The Chair hears none. Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio that the papers be printed as a Senate document? The Chair hears no objection, and that order is made.

Does the Senator, after it is printed as a document, desire any reference of it?

Mr. FORAKER. No; I do not suppose any reference is necessary. It will be printed simply as a Senate document and will be distributed among Senators, each one having his allotment, as all other Senate documents are distributed.

ENGINEER CORPS OF THE ARMY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a General Staff report relating to the increase of the Engineer Corps of the Army, together with a draft of a proposed bill on that subject; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

RECESS APPOINTMENTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 26th ultimo, certain information relative to recess appointments of Army officers; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. TILLMAN subsequently said: I have examined the papers sent by the Secretary of War in answer to the Senate resolution, and in order to facilitate the understanding of their contents by the members of the Senate in the morning before they come here, I ask that they may be printed in the RECORD as well as printed as a document. Otherwise Senators could not see them or get hold of them until they came to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PATTERSON in the chair). The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the papers to which he refers may be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. What is the document?

Mr. TILLMAN. It is the answer of the Secretary of War to the resolution of the Senate in regard to the appointment of certain officers, and my sole purpose in asking that it may be printed in the RECORD is that Senators may see it in the morning, which otherwise they would not have an opportunity of doing. It has already been ordered printed as a document.

Mr. ALLISON. Is it a very long document?

Mr. TILLMAN. It is not a long document, sir. I have examined it, and it will not take two pages of the RECORD.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall not object, then, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina? The Chair hears none, and the document referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The papers referred to are as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 29, 1904.

To the Senate:

I have the honor to reply to the following resolution of the Senate passed January 26, 1904:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, instructed to send to the Senate information in the nature of answers to the following questions:

"First. What officers in the Army were appointed during the recess of the Senate commencing between March 19, 1903, and November 9, 1903? Were commissions issued to these officers, and if so, of what character? What officers failed of confirmation during the special session beginning November 9, and ending December 7, 1903? Have these officers been reappointed, and have commissions been issued to them? If so, what is the character of the commissions, and what authority of law is there for the same?"

A list of the officers in the Army appointed during the recess of the Senate commencing between March 19, 1903, and November 9, 1903, is annexed herein, marked "A."

The ordinary recess commissions were issued to these officers, in terms expiring at the end of the next session of the Senate.

The only information which the Secretary of War has as to what officers have failed of confirmation is derived from the Senate. By comparing the list of nominations sent to the Senate with the list of confirmations communicated by the Senate to the President it appears that the officers named in Schedule B, annexed hereto, had not been confirmed at noon on the first Monday in December, 1903.

All the officers specified in Schedule B have been reappointed, and recess commissions of the character specified above have been issued to them in the understanding of the Department that the authority of law therefor is found in Article II, section 2, paragraph 3, of the Constitution, which reads as follows:

"The President shall have power to fill all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate by granting commissions, which shall expire at the end of their next session."

Very respectfully,

ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT.
OFFICE OF THE ADJUTANT GENERAL,
Washington, January 27, 1904.

Respectfully returned to the Chief of Staff with the following information, called for by the within resolution of the Senate of January 26, 1904:

First. A list of officers in the Army appointed during the recess of the Senate commencing between March 19 and November 9 last. The nations of appointees of the Army appointed during the recess specified, in which only are appointees currently given in the list of Executive nominations received by the Senate November 10, 1903, and published in the Congressional Record of that date. The list thus published is inclosed to save the time of transcribing all the names.

Officers receiving recess appointments whose names do not appear in the list of the Senate (Lieut. F. E. Hodgman, Artillery Corps, presented herein as a second lieutenant, and who, resigned during the session and accepted a commission in the Senate, and superintendent Sergt. Maj. Bernard Hodgins, Twenty-first Infantry, presented to be a second lieutenant of infantry, but not mentioned in the Senate nominations) are included herein because the Department prefers to be guided by the Senate. Commissions, signed by the President, were issued to all these officers of the character desired by the United States Senate, as stated when it was asked. These commissions in terms expire at the pleasure of the President of the United States for the time being and until the end of the next session of the Congress.

A list of those officers who failed of confirmation during the special session of the Senate beginning November 9 and ending December 7, 1903, is not available. The Department has no record of such failures. These officers were reappointed and given commissions of the character stated in the preceding paragraph. These commissions authorize the same character as those issued during the recess preceding November 9, 1903, that is to say, they expire at the end of the next session of the Senate.

Second. A list of those officers who failed of confirmation during the recess of the Senate commencing November 9, 1903, that is to say, December 8, 1903, and ending December 7, 1904, inclusive, and the character of the commissions issued to them. Answer: The only information which the Department has on this point is that derived from the Senate. By comparing the list of nominations sent to the Senate with the list of confirmations communicated by the Senate to the President it appears that the officers named in Schedule B, annexed hereto, had not been confirmed at noon on the first Monday in December, 1903.

All the officers specified in Schedule B have been reappointed, and recess commissions of the character specified above have been issued to them in the understanding of the Department that the authority of law therefor is found in Article II, section 2, paragraph 3, of the Constitution, which reads as follows:

"The President shall have power to fill all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate by granting commissions, which shall expire at the end of their next session."

Very respectfully,

ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of War.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 32) providing for the editions to be printed of the annual and special reports of the Librarian of Congress, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that of the annual and special reports of the Librarian of Congress hereafter submitted to Congress, but including the report for 1903, there shall be printed and bound in cloth 7,500 copies, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 4,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 500 copies for the use of the Library of Congress.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE IN PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3962) to provide for an additional judge of the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, to report it favorably with amendments. The business has become very much congested there, and if there is no objection I should like to have the bill acted upon at the present time.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was in section 1, page 1, line 3, after the word "President," to strike out the words "of the United States;" so as to make the section read:

That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint one district judge, in and for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, who shall possess the same powers, perform the same duties, and receive the same salary as the present district judge of said district.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 2, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect immediately.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

A. C. HAWLEY.

THOMAS KENNEDY.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. CLAPP, by request, on the 25th ultimo, reported adversely thereon, and it was postponed indefinitely, as follows:

Resolved, That Thomas Kennedy be employed to the Sergeant-at-Arms as laborer on the Senate building, at a salary of $840 per annum, to be paid from the contingent expenses of the Senate, the said employment to take effect January 1, 1904.

COURTS IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. NELSON. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 707) to amend an act entitled "An act providing the terms and places of holding the courts of the United States in the district of Minnesota, and for other purposes," approved April 26, 1889. On account of the importance of the subject, I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 4 of the act, so as to read:

SEC. 4. That regular terms of the circuit and district courts shall be held as follows: In the fourth division, on the fourth Tuesday in May and the third Tuesday in November; in the second division, on the fourth Tuesday in April and the fourth Tuesday in October; for the third division, on the first Tuesday in June and the first Tuesday in December, for the fourth division, on the first Tuesday in April and the first Tuesday in October, for the fifth division, on the second Tuesday in January and the second Tuesday in July, for the sixth division, on the 23d February in May and the second Tuesday in November.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUIS J. SOUER.

Mr. TILLMAN. I move that the Committee on Appropriations be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution (H. R. 1) for the relief of Louis J. Souer, collector of internal revenue for the collection district of Louisiana, and that any part of the money now in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated be appropriated and paid to Mary A. Souer, widow of said Louis J. Souer, in the deficiency appropriation bill, and that it be proposed to the pending deficiency appropriation bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

R. 38) for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of General Orders, No. 195, War Department, June 29, 1863, for the presentation of medals; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,775,000 for an exposition to be held at the city of Portland, Oreg., in the year 1905, to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the exploration of the Oregon country by Lewis and Clark, intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the Argentine Republic from $10,000 to $12,000, intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 to provide for the removal of snow and ice from crossings, cross walks, and gutters of the District of Columbia, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DUBOIS submitted an amendment providing for the issuance by the Secretary of the Interior of a patent in fee to Nora G. Hazlett, a Caddo Indian, for not to exceed 40 acres of the remaining 80 acres of the 160 acres of land heretofore allotted to her in the Territory of Oklahoma, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $441,580 for the purchase, installation, operation, and maintenance of a submarine military cable for connecting the headquarters, Department of Columbia, with military garrisons in Alaska, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the military appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEWART submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000 to pay such contingent expenses of the Choctaw and Chickasaw citizenship court and such officers as the Secretary of the Interior may deem proper, and also $1,136.25, the amount of the expended balance of the appropriation for contingent expenses as provided in act of July 1, 1902, of $5,000 remaining on the books of the Interior Department December 31, 1903, to the credit of the Choctaw and Chickasaw citizenship court; also $2,680.65 for one stenographer to each of the judges of the Choctaw and Chickasaw citizenship court to be appointed by them respectively, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MALINDA GORDON.

Mr. KEAN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be and he hereby is authorized and directed to pay to Malinda Gordon, widow of Thad Gordon, upon a bill in the Senate of the United States, [illegible] at the rate of [illegible] per annum, from the date of her husband's death, [illegible] to be charged to the contingent fund of the Senate.

HISTORY OF DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Mr. PENROSE submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, [illegible] there be printed [illegible] the History of the Department of Justice, [illegible] for the use of the Senate, and [illegible] for the Department of Justice.

PROCEEDINGS OF NEW PANAMA CANAL COMPANY.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be and he hereby is authorized [illegible] the Senate, under date of January 28, 1904.

STATUE OF JAMES MARQUETTE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the thanks of Congress be tendered to the people of Wisconsin for the statue of James Marquette, the renowned pioneer and explorer.

Resolved, That the clerk be instructed to transmit a copy of these resolutions to the Governor of the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, I rise to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution just presented.

I desire only to state that in 1893 the proposition embodied in the resolution was passed upon by both Houses of Congress, and the State of Wisconsin was thereby authorized to present the marble of Pere Marquette, notwithstanding the fact that he was not technically a resident of the State. It was then that it was presented, and it was accepted by the Senate of the United States with appropriate speeches and ceremonies.

The present resolution is only a complementary tender of thanks to the people of the State of Wisconsin for the presentation of this marble. The Senate having twice expressed its views upon this subject, and this being nothing but a complementary resolution, I can see no reason, sir, why any committee of this body should be troubled with it.

I therefore ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

REMOVAL OF SNOW AND ICE.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 98) to provide for the removal of snow and ice from the streets, cross walks, and gutters of the District of Columbia was read twice by its title.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, that is an emergency matter, and I ask present consideration for it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read to the Senate.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the sum of $5,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to be expended under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for the removal of snow and ice from the streets, cross walks, and gutters on the streets, avenues, and other public places in said city, one-half of said sum to be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half out of the Treasury of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. HALE. There is so much confusion in the Chamber that we do not know even what measure this is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a joint resolution from the House appropriating $5,000 for clearing the streets of snow and ice.

Mr. HALE. Now, let me ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether all the appropriations for removing snow and ice, which become at times here very serious obstructions to travel, are made by precedent—whether we wait until a snowstorm comes and blocks the streets and stops business to a degree and interferes with travel? Does Congress always appropriate precedent as the occasion comes around? If it does, why [illegible] some appropriation bill to provide a [illegible] to cover an entire session of Congress?

We have been in Washington put to the greatest inconvenience for the last month. We had one fall of snow, ice formed, it was difficult to get to business places, travel becoming very hard, and as that melted it precipitated into another storm with a great deposit of snow in Washington a few days ago. Now we are approximating four or five days after the evil has fallen upon us for relieving it.

I should be glad to see the Commissioners intrusted with a fund for an entire session, so that the moment a snowstorm begins all their hundreds of men, if necessary, could be put on, and we could, as they do in other cities and not wait for the slow process of the snow melting and removing itself.

I suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, not in any way finding fault with him, because these matters originate in the other branch, that we had better provide in some of the general appropriation bills for a fund which the Commissioners of the District of Columbia can use at once and not wait a couple of days of delay after every storm.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the suggestions of the Senator from Maine as regards the particular matter of snow and ice I think are wise. We have been dealing with this question for a good many years on the District of Columbia appropriation bill. Snow has fallen and ice has accumulated during all these years, and as the Senator from Washington [Mr. SPOONER] says to me, there will probably be the case in the future. Of course I will not participate as to that.

We and for several years increase the appropriation as it came from the House from $[illegible] to $5,000. Uniformly the House regarded as too small if additional appropriations were needed they would be supplied, so that we yielded. I think that was the case [illegible] at least, perhaps more. An appropriation of $[illegible] was inserted in the District of Columbia appropriation bill [illegible] for the purpose of removing snow and ice.

At the beginning of this session there was a special appropriation of $[illegible] for that purpose. I believe it would have [illegible] during the prevalence of the first storm or the bill would have passed [illegible] last week. I believe beginning on Thursday. The Senator from Maine will support me if I make a mistake. It passed on Friday. The House of Representatives on Friday passed the joint resolution which has just been read before the Senate but passed it too late in the day for consideration in this body. The impression was so general on Friday that we would probably adjourn over until to-day, which is Monday, leaving the streets and ice [illegible].

Mr. HALE. In the air?

Mr. ALLISON. Not in the air, but on the trees and streets and sidewalks. Now, this is the first opportunity we have had to act upon the joint resolution. The Chair has kindly laid it before the Senate, and while I agree with the Senator from Maine that it comes rather late, it is better now than not at all. In the future I shall be glad to have the Senator from Maine exert his power upon the Committee on Appropriations to secure a reasonable permanent appropriation for this purpose and place it in the hands of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. I think that ought to be done.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NEBRASKA SENATORIAL INVESTIGATION.

Mr. DIETRICH. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege. By a Federal grand jury at Omaha I have recently been indicted for alleged violation of the laws of the United States, and on a trial of the indictments before a Federal court at Omaha was discharged by the Federal judge without the cause being heard upon its merits, upon the ground that my acts were no violation of the Federal law.

Before taking further part in the deliberations of this body I owe a duty to the Senate, whose honor has been assailed, to the State which in part I represent, whose credit has been attacked, and to myself, whose integrity has been impugned. If guilty of the least of these charges, I deserve to be driven from this high place in disgrace and receive the severest penalty of the criminal law. Confident in my innocence, I desire to submit the whole matter to the Senate.

The reason of my being denied a full trial was clearly brought out in a published statement made by ex-United States Senator Charles F. Manderson, from which I will quote the following:

When the indictment was brought on for trial the business of the district attorney was apparent. He knew that DIETRICH was not a Senator of the United States until he had qualified by taking the oath of office. In my opening statement he put unnecessary and improper emphasis upon the fact that while DIETRICH was elected Senator in March he did not have the certificate of election and the Legislature composition of were having discussion over his credentials. The district attorney argued the admissibility of such evidence and that the court had ruled against us. We had necessarily introduced the book of the testimony for the prosecution, and the opportunity was thus lost to prove to those disposed to smirch the character of a Senator-elect that he had been duly elected by the Legislature, he had taken the oath of office, and he was a Senator, he had a right to be heard, for the reason that some of them would be heard and the jury would be instructed by the court at the end of the Government's testimony to return a verdict of not guilty.

[illegible] nothing for Defendant's counsel to do except to challenge the sufficiency of the evidence of the prosecution and demand that the case should be dismissed at the end of the testimony for the prosecution. [illegible] to be given before those interested in Senator DIETRICH's character were satisfied that we had upon the merits [illegible]. I knew that the charges were strongly supported by Senator DIETRICH, and I was anxious that he should have been glad to have had a full trial upon the merits, but as judge Vandeventer said, referring to the statement of District Attorney Summers, "the case has been rendered unnecessary, and it is the duty of the jury to find him not guilty."

Mr. President, I shall make no remarks in extenuation, nor shall I present any defense, except that which is sustained by the best of evidence. I strongly deprecate that I could not have had a full trial upon the merits of the case, and in order that I may have an opportunity to establish my innocence upon the facts and evidence, as well as upon the law, I ask that the resolution which I send to the desk may be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska submits a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the President pro tempore shall appoint a committee of five to investigate and report to the Senate all the facts connected with the appointment of Jacob Fisher as postmaster at Hastings, Nebr., and the issuance of his commission as such postmaster, and the issuance of his commission and receiving his official oath of office, and the payment of his salary as such postmaster, and the expenses of such investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will necessarily have to be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that he strike out from the resolution the last clause and have the resolution in that form now adopted. Subsequently, by a separate resolution, he can obtain authority for the committee to take testimony.

Mr. DIETRICH. I ask that the change suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts be made in the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska modifies his resolution by striking out the last two lines.

Mr. LODGE. Let the resolution be read as it will stand when modified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution as modified will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution as modified, as follows:

Resolved, That the President pro tempore shall appoint a committee of five to investigate and report to the Senate all the facts connected with the appointment of Jacob Fisher as postmaster at Hastings, Nebr., and the issuance of his commission as such postmaster, and the receiving his official oath of office, and the payment of his salary as such postmaster, and the expenses of such investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. It seems to me, Mr. President, that this resolution clearly belongs to one of our regular committees, the Committee on Privileges and Elections, because it involves the rights, privileges, and honor of the Senator from Nebraska. That, it seems to me, is the proper committee to which the resolution should go. I move that as an amendment.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from South Carolina will, upon reflection, conclude that this matter does not belong to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as it does not relate to the question of the election of a Senator or a privilege, but relates to a charge against a Senator in this body. I have examined very thoroughly the precedents from the beginning, and I know of no instance where a question of this kind has been referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. In the case of Senator Matthews, of Ohio, and in the cases of other Senators in every instance the matter was considered by a special committee composed of five or seven Senators. That is the usual course. I therefore hope the Senator from South Carolina will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have no other desire regarding the matter except to expedite the investigation as much as possible. I merely thought that, instead of having a special committee of five appointed, as we already had a regular committee, the matter would be taken in the usual course by being referred to the regular standing committee. But of course I want to take whatever is the usual course.

Mr. BURROWS. The course I have suggested is the usual course. As to the suggestion of the Senator that it would expedite action upon the resolution by referring it to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, I think it would rather retard it, because that committee has all it can do at the present time.

Mr. TILLMAN. I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as it has been modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore subsequently appointed Mr. HOAR, Mr. PLATT of Connecticut, Mr. SPOONER, Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, and Mr. PETTUS as the committee provided for in the resolution submitted by Mr. DIETRICH.

REPORT OF THE PHILIPPINE COMMISSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Philippines, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the information of Congress a letter from the Secretary of War, dated January 28, last, accompanied by the annual report of the Philippine Commission, dated December 15, 1903, and the appendix to the report, showing the progress made in the work of the Government of the Philippine Islands, and the recommendations of the Commission for such legislation as may be deemed necessary by the Congress of the United States for the government of the Philippines, and for other purposes, approved July 1, 1902, and amended by an act making appropriations for salaries and expenses of the Commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1903.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, February 1, 1904.

CLAIMS IN ARIZONA COUNTIES.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 111) to authorize certain officers of the Treasury Department to audit and certify claims of certain counties of Arizona.

Mr. HALE. Has the morning business been concluded, Mr. President?

Mr. MORGAN. I prefer to get through with the morning business before proceeding with other matters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is one resolution lying on the table.

Mr. HALE. I suggest to the Senator from Utah that he wait until the conclusion of the morning business.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought it had been concluded.

Mr. HALE. No.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I will withhold the request for the present.

WILLIAM D. CRUM.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], coming over from a previous day; which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. TILLMAN on the 29th of January, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, instructed to send to the Senate information in regard to the appointment of William D. Crum as collector of the port of Charleston, S. C., and that he also send to the Senate the papers that gave him the office.

First, is William D. Crum now holding a commission as collector? If so, give date and send to the Senate a certified copy thereof.

Second, Was his second appointment made in accordance with law, and if so, which law?

Third, Is there any law or precedent for the holding of an office of this kind by a [illegible] official?

Fourth. Is it the contention or intention to claim and exercise the authority to make such appointments during a constructive recess, as this appears to be?

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from South Carolina is not in his place at present. I am not sure but that he would be willing to have the resolution referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. TILLMAN entered the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from South Carolina to the fact that a resolution has just been read before the Senate, submitted by the Senator, calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for information as to the appointment of Mr. Crum.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, upon fuller investigation of the information already furnished by the Secretary of the Treasury and the present status of the matter, I feel that the Senate already has all that it needs for the intelligent disposition of the case.

There is, however, another resolution which I had the honor to offer, which was sent by the Senate to the Secretary of War, bearing upon the question of a constructive recess and the issuing of commissions of some kind to certain officers of the Army, which I understand has not yet been responded to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that it was responded to this morning.

Mr. TILLMAN. I had not heard of it. If that information is already here, I should like to have it laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has already been laid before the Senate, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then I ask that it be now read, so that I may determine what course I may wish to take in reference to the pending resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter of the Secretary of War has been sent out to be printed. It is quite a lengthy document.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, Mr. President, possibly I had better let the whole thing go over until to-morrow, when the reply of the Secretary of War will be printed, and we can get the whole subject together and act on it. I ask that the resolution may go over, retaining its place, until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

CLAIMS OF ARIZONA COUNTIES.

Mr. SMOOT. I now renew my request for unanimous consent of the Senate for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 11.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. 11) to authorize certain officers of the Treasury Department to audit and certify claims of certain counties of Arizona. It authorizes the Auditor for the State and other Departments to examine all claims which may be presented in proper form by the different counties in Arizona Territory, and to ascertain the amount due each of said counties on account of legal costs and expenses incurred from March 3, 1889, to June 30, 1899, in the prosecution of Indians under the act of March 2, 1889 (27 Stats., p. 333), for which the United States is liable under act of March 3, 1899 (31 Stat. L., v. 25, p. 1094), and which have been paid by said counties, the amounts so found to be certified by the Secretary of the Treasury to the Speaker of the House for a deficiency appropriation.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERATION OF PANAMA TREATY.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I desire to say that I am anxious that the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of the Panama treaty very soon, and that if there are any addresses to be made by Senators before we go into executive session I hope they will be prepared to make them as the opportunity offers. The general discussion has proceeded for a good while, but not to the extent it ought to have gone in occupying the time of the Senate daily. I hope hereafter Senators will be ready to speak in open session, if that is the place for them to speak, as opportunity may present itself. I say this because I am very anxious that we shall very soon get into executive session for the consideration of the Panama treaty.

PURCHASE FROM NEW PANAMA CANAL COMPANY.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I desire to call up Senate resolution No. 57.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama calls up a resolution, which will be read.

Mr. MORGAN. I have made a little modification of it, and I will ask the Secretary to read the resolution as modified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama has modified his resolution, and it will be read as modified.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. MORGAN December 15, 1903, as modified, as follows:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General is directed to inform the Senate whether he has made, or is making, an inquiry of the United States, a purchase from the New Panama Canal Company of any property rights, jurisdiction, or concessions that were granted by the Republic of Colombia to N. B. Wyse for the purpose of constructing a canal across the Panama, or any interest in the Panama Railroad, or any part of the stock of the Panama Railroad Company, whatever, which may be held by the New York and Panama Steamship Company, or whether attempted or contemplated another or other state or government in the place of any or all such property authorized to be made by the New Panama Canal Company.

2. And that he will inform the Senate as to the terms of such proposed purchase, the consideration proposed to be paid for such property, and such other rights and privileges that may be asked for by the Panama Canal Company relating thereto, so as to inform the Senate fully as to the nature of the transaction.

3. That he will inform the Senate as to any participation of the Government of France in such purchase or sale, whether the same is proposed or contemplated and whether any and what agreement has been entered into between France and the New Panama Canal Company concerning the possession, the government or the fortunes of Panama in respect of said purchase and sale of the property and rights of the New Panama Canal Company.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, it is my purpose, in asking the Senate to vote this resolution, to get the facts that are not yet within the reach of the Senate which affect our duty in acting upon article 22 of the Hay-Varilla treaty.

I will present facts that are of record in support of the resolution, which, I believe, will demonstrate the necessity for its adoption. I think they will be found sufficient to enable us at least to avoid the unwise and humiliating connection with the New Panama Canal Company that the Hay-Varilla treaty forces upon the United States.

It is my purpose to present truly and upon facts of record what is one duty in the state of affairs now existing in Panama and that recently existed in Colombia, and to prevent, if I can, the unnecessary and unwarranted intrusion of the New Panama Canal Company into the treaty relations we are engaged in establishing between the people of Panama and the United States.

To do this I will examine and present the facts now of record that relate to the foundation of the claim of that company to the grossly unjust demands set up in this treaty and to its persistent interference with our Government in its efforts to construct an isthmian canal.

For, whatever else is done or accomplished by the Hay-Varilla treaty, there is no reason or justice in so shaping it that it shall confer upon the New Panama Canal Company any other benefits or advantages than it is entitled to under the concessions it holds from Colombia. When these are fully secured to it justice will be done.

When the full measure of their rights under the obligations of their contracts is secured to them our duty will be performed. That company has no claim to our regard or sympathy for any services they have rendered to the United States or any other country. On the contrary, it has been an incubus on the French people that has stripped millions of them of the fruits of their toil by fraud, amounting to robbery, and is now demanding for its members what rightfully belongs to those people, most of whom belong to the laboring classes.

If we must deal with them in this treaty, as I claim that there is no just reason or excuse for doing, let us give them all they can justly demand when they have complied with the obligations of their contracts.

I invite the scrutiny of the Senate and of all persons to the history I will give of the operations and dealings of those who own and control the New Panama Canal Company, taken from the undisputed records.

In what condition was the canal question when this company first intruded itself into the policy of the United States and undertook to control it?

The importance of this inquiry and of a full response to it can not be exaggerated.

The Clayton-Bulwer treaty did not apply to Colombia. It applied in its operative provisions only to the political division known as "Central America," which never included Panama. When that treaty was abrogated every international difficulty as to the construction of an isthmian canal disappeared.

The President who cleared away these obstructions and by his wise forecast opened the way along the valley of the San Juan River, which the people approved with rejoicing and with gifts of money to construct the canal, was William M. Kinley.

The Senate had twice rejected treaties with Colombia to construct a canal at Panama, once in the Administration of President Johnson and again in that of President Grant.

The people considered that route as condemned; and it was. But when Congress in both Houses had adopted the Nicaragua route in different Congresses by such majorities as are seldom given to any measure, the Panama Canal Company appeared and urged its demands upon us, first under the lead of De Lesseps and the old company. Then came the New Panama Canal Company, with Bonnardel, Hutin, Cromwell, and Bunau-Varilla as its leaders and promoters. The purpose of these men was to gain absolute control of the movement and to turn over the wreck of the Panama Canal to the United States for the highest possible price, through the assistance of Marroquin. De Lesseps's efforts to destroy our policies were directed to the breaking down of a competitive waterway through Nicaragua, in which he failed, and his company went into bankruptcy.

In the Hay-Herran treaty these plans were thus formulated: The New Panama Canal Company was to get the sum of $40,000,000; Colombia was interested to the amount of $10,000,000, the price of her concessions, and $1,000,000, the price of her stock in the New Panama Canal Company, and $4,500,000, the cash value of lands returned to her, and a perpetual annuity of $250,000, to continue without end. To accomplish this raid it was necessary to destroy the project of the Nicaragua Canal, that McKinley had secured by the protocols of December 1, 1900.

He passed away, and his successor turned the whole power of the Administration in favor of the Panama route and against the Nicaragua route. Not questioning the right of the President to thus exercise his preference, I can safely say that it is not in the power of man to remove or to impair the great record that sustains the Nicaraguan route as being the most feasible and practicable route for an isthmian canal. No such record was ever made and none was ever sustained by higher authority in any controverted matter than that which rests upon the immutable foundation laid by Commodore Maury and built upon by many scores of the greatest engineers in the world.

I do not propose to surrender the final hope or purpose of the people of the United States to realize the value of the counsels of these great men in opening a canal on the Nicaragua route.

Especially will I not sacrifice the rights already secured by President McKinley and by the Spooner law for this vital, national purpose. Above all I will not assist in this work of fatal injury to the country by voting to destroy the great work he has done. I can see nothing but breach of faith and dishonor in such a course.

Treating the proposed canal at Panama as a work that will be undertaken, and hoping, against my own conviction, that it may be successfully accomplished, I feel as deep an interest as any member of this body that there shall not be added to the enormous physical difficulties that stand in the way of success any sort of connection with or responsibility for the scandalous reputation of the old and new Panama Canal companies on the part of the United States.

I wish to point out to the Senate a way in which the Panama Canal can be constructed without incurring on the part of the Senate any just accusation of complicity in those scandals, which have driven a Cabinet minister from office in the United States and have caused the resignation of an entire government in France, and have consigned so great a benefactor to the world as Ferdinand De Lesseps—an innocent man, as I hope and believe—to a felon's grave.

I wish to present record evidence that will establish the fact that the New Panama Canal Company, to which article 22 of this treaty secures great powers over the United States, that are backed by the power of France, has not only taken by succession and inheritance the crimes of the old company, and that its membership consists, in large part, of the persons who gave the old company its bad reputation, but that it has added a darker defamation and worse wrongs to that wretched history by its own acts.

The history of the new company has its origin in the wreck of the old company, that was brought about by some of its controlling men who are now the principal stockholders and managers of the New Panama Canal Company—the same men with whom we are now dealing.

To prove this I will quote from the final report of the Isthmian Canal Commission of November 1901, on page 83, and from the testimony of Hon. Samuel Pasco, given in the hearings before the Committee on Interoceanic Canals:

> The liquidator (of the old company) found himself laboring under several great difficulties, first with the obstructive record left by the special agent, [illegible] Bonaparte Wyse, [illegible] and secondly the fact that the Panama Canal Company was a new corporation on the 28th day of October, 1894, with a capital of 100,000 shares of 25 francs each, 50,000 of these shares were given as fully paid to the Colombian Government in consideration of the concessions, which the terms of the contract of the concession dated December 18, 1893. Thus the cash capital of the company was reduced to 875,000 francs, or $168,750, a sum deemed sufficient for the preparatory operations contemplated.
> The services connected with the formation of the old company, which had led to the prosecution and conviction of the Lesseps and other prominent persons, had made it difficult to secure over that amount. Suits had been brought against certain loan associations, administrators, contractors, and others who were supposed to have profited by the extraordinary methods of the old company. A series of compromises were made with those persons by which it was agreed that they should surrender stock in the new company, each such [illegible] to be dropped. Washington Bonnardel, nominated to make up the 875,000 francs, after deducting the sums thus obtained and those to be obtained by public subscription, was to be subscribed by the liquidator. The stock was subscribed as follows, viz:

	Francs.
Baron Eustache	[illegible]
Credit Lyonnais	[illegible]
Societe Generale	[illegible]
Credit Industriel et Commercial	[illegible]
Administrators of the old company	[illegible]
Artigue, Sondereggar & Co	2,250,000
Baratoux, Letellier & Co	2,250,000
Jacob brothers	500,000
Courroux, Hersent & Co	500,000
Various persons to the number of 60, who had profited by syndicates created by the old company	3,985,700
Hugo Oberndorffer	[illegible]
Public subscription	3,848,000
The liquidator	15,885,000
Total	[illegible]

(See fourth report of the liquidator to the court, dated November 26, 1896, pp. 8, 9, and 13.)

The old company and the liquidator had raised by the sale of stock and bonds the sum of $[illegible].

The securities issued to raise this money had a face value of $[illegible]. The number of persons holding them is estimated at over 200,000.

Mr. Pasco testified as follows:

> The CHAIRMAN. Is that report among the appendixes?
> Mr. PASCO. Yes, it is just.
> Senator MORGAN. Have you a copy of it?
> Mr. PASCO. There was a copy in the possession of General Ernst, I think. He will be before you next week.
> Senator MORGAN. Is it in French or English?
> Mr. PASCO. I think it is in French. He and I had it there. We had all these reports and examined them.
> Senator MORGAN. You of course had information upon this very important and rather peculiar situation, as to the men who were being pursued, I suppose, in the legal proceedings of course, probably civilly and probably criminally, for the purpose of recovering money from people that you had obtained from this company and had misapplied and misappropriated. You had the names of those persons?
> Mr. PASCO. That is generally but I know of
> Senator MORGAN. Are all of those mentioned here part of those transactions?
> Mr. PASCO. I do not know the history of every person named. There were compromises and I did not know the history of all those compromises. I only know the fact that there were compromises were made and contributions were made to the stock of the company.
> Senator MORGAN. Now, you saw enough in the proof before you, the evidence before you, to authorize you to make this very strong statement about them?
> Mr. PASCO. This was prepared by General Ernst, and it is a part of the chapter on the Panama route.
> Senator MORGAN. And the Commission authorized it?
> Mr. PASCO. Oh, yes; it is stated as a part of the report of the Commission.
> Senator MORGAN. It is a finding of fact by the Commission?
> Mr. PASCO. Yes; this is the best information that the Commission had upon the subject.
> Senator MORGAN. Who were these administrators of the old company who were supposed to have profited?
> Mr. PASCO. I can not tell you who they are.
> Senator MORGAN. I do not mean the individuals. What office was it that they held? You call them the "administrators" of the old company. What is an administrator?
> Mr. PASCO. I can not give you any information with reference to the stockholders other than they are stated.
> Senator MORGAN. Do you know what that means—"administrators of the old company"?
> Mr. PASCO. No; I do not know what it means.
> Senator MORGAN. Did you find any where in the statutes or charter of the old company any such officers as administrators?
> Mr. PASCO. No; I have not thought it necessary to examine.
> Senator MORGAN. You have not examined into that?
> Mr. PASCO. No, sir.
> Senator MORGAN. "Various persons to the number of 60 who had profited by syndicates created by the old company." I want you to explain that. How had they profited by the syndicates created by the old company?
> Mr. PASCO. I suppose that is a part of the matter referred to on the previous page. I can not remember the history of these subscriptions, but it does not affect the fact that they had been [illegible].
> Senator MORGAN. Public subscription, 3,848,000 francs. I suppose that was by the general public.
> Mr. PASCO. The general public put their money in.
> Senator MORGAN. And then the liquidator comes in with 15,885,000 francs.
> Mr. PASCO. Yes.

This proof might have been added to if our Commissioners had thought it worth while, but what they have stated is conclusive of the fact that this New Panama Canal Company was a forlorn hope to relieve a situation in France that demanded any remedy that would ease it. Frauds were to be forgiven; judgments and claims for damages were to be released; convictions were to be annulled; pardons were to be granted, and the robbers and convicts were to organize this new company and take over all the assets of the old company on their agreement to complete the canal. And these are the men we are dealing with.

To show the conditions that forced France to create this company, as the last hope of quelling serious public disturbance, I will quote from the work of Professor Keasbey (pp. 430–432) on isthmian canals, etc.

He says:

> The pace grew quicker as the years went by, until 1887, when the funds ran short, and only about two-fifths of the canal had been dug.
> Lesseps had been obliged to go to France [illegible] to sell fresh issues of stock and issue new bonds. But these sources of revenue soon came to an end. The stock then began to be sold out at a large discount and fresh issues on the bonds could no longer be floated. De Lesseps continued to make fresh promises at every stockholders' meeting, but with so little to show for the money already spent the losers of the members worked to be so easily averted. To stave off the inevitable crisis the press had to also be bribed more liberally than ever and to keep the condition of affairs from being brought up in the Chamber deputies and even distinguished senators had to be bribed.

The company's affairs were now in a desperate condition, and at this juncture it was decided to abandon the work [illegible] and resort to the lock system, thus reducing the amount of excavation [illegible] public cards. But this was a fatal modification, for [illegible] a sea-level canal, but De Lesseps was authorized to his Panama project [illegible] and even with the reduction in the amount of excavation [illegible] canal was to be raised [illegible] over $200,000,000 according to the new estimates. A new contract was nevertheless made with M. Eiffel, the famous engineer, to construct the new works and embankments [illegible] the company then began to appeal to the Government for the approval of the lottery loan, but was again refused. [illegible] up with its obligations [illegible] and exactly [illegible] the plan. [illegible] it was [illegible] came and [illegible] had to be suspended.

A parliamentary inquiry was at [illegible] in the hope of saving the enterprise, but [illegible] and conducted quite well, mentioning the fact that there were sixty persons in the list of the convicted and pardoned felons whose names are not given, and it is intimated in the report that the French Government was unwilling that these names should be disclosed. Three sixty persons subscribed 2,285,700 francs to the stock of the New Panama Canal Company, the scapegoat for the sins of those malefactors that has been turned loose, not to perish in the wilderness, but to fatten in the rich pastures generally of the United States.

If this resolution is adopted and fully answered, it will bring to light those refugees who are being so carefully concealed from observation, and some of our synthetic conservators in the boards of the old company will be unearthed. If the stories that fill the newspapers as the intending life-saving [illegible] surrounding the attorney are true, M. Bunau Varilla was among the contractors and others who brought this ruin on the old Panama Company. He makes it his boast of distinction in commending himself to the President as envoy extraordinary from Panama, that he is "the champion of the old Panama Canal Company." Let us see, also, if he is justly accused of being one of its robbers.

Eiffel, a noted French engineer, was convicted in the French courts of having defrauded the old company, and was heavily fined and sentenced to penal servitude for a long term.

He is to profit by section 22 of this treaty to the extent of not less than 33 per cent on his investment of 10,000,000 francs in the stock of the New Panama Canal Company, in addition to purchasing his pardon from the penitentiary by making that subscription.

This resolution of inquiry is directed to the Attorney-General, instead of the Secretary of State, for the reason that the President directed that all negotiations with the New Panama Canal Company should be conducted by the Department of Justice, at the time the Hay-Herran treaty was under consideration, and I have not learned that this arrangement has been altered with reference to the bargain that is to be made under the Hay-Varilla treaty with that company.

If any Senator can inform me that this matter is now in the hands of the Secretary of State, I will ask to change the resolution to meet that fact.

The resolution calls for information in the absence of which it is impossible to act on section 22 of the Hay-Varilla treaty without intelligence or safety.

No part of that treaty places a limit on the sum to be paid by the President for the concessions, rights, or property of the New Panama Canal Company, which, under the Spooner law, was limited and not to exceed $40,000,000.

Treaty no limit whatever as to the price of these claims is fixed in the Hay-Varilla treaty in a portion of instances that no one can fail to understand. It must mean that a greater sum than $40,000,000 is demanded, or is likely to be demanded, by the New Panama Canal Company for these claims and properties, when the contemplated purchase is agreed upon and consummated, in which case the President will have the discretionary right, under article 22 of the treaty, to make an advance in the price to be paid for this property.

Even an honest and just claimant could not decently make such a demand; when it is made for the New Panama Canal Company, its authority is an insult to the country.

That article of the treaty first describes the property and the rights of every description in that it permits that company to sell to the United States, and then, in the last paragraph, it provides that the title of the United States is to become absolute as to Panama when "a contemplated purchase" of these things from the New Panama Canal Company is "consummated." After granting to the United States the supreme and exclusive sovereignty over the canal zone, in article 3, to be paid for at the sum of $10,000,000, we should we not be permitted to exercise the same right that Colombia had to compel the canal company to work out its contract. Why should that company become the real sponsor of the rights ceded to the United States in article 3 of the treaty?

I will insert a copy of that treaty in an appendix to my remarks. [See Appendix A.]

The property and rights thus to be purchased from the canal company by the President include everything acquired by it under any law or concession of Colombia to Napoleon B. Wyse and his assignees or successors, and some other property rights acquired from other sources, including the rights of that company in the stock and property of the Panama Railroad.

If the rights of Colombia in respect of these concessions passed to Panama, under a rule of law that Mr. Hay claims exists as rights that "run with the land," when we pass from that land [illegible] as we shall presently see. Were on the canal zone when Colombia ceded, and when the bonds that had passed through his hands were issued, he [illegible] between Hay and Bunau-Varilla [illegible] defraud purchased the canal, leaving [illegible] the most difficult portion to be done [illegible]

[illegible] then found that the canal had already cost over $[illegible] and still [illegible] the work of [illegible] the French Government in Panama [illegible] ries, profits, commissions and [illegible] which [illegible] thing [illegible] $[illegible] had been paid for [illegible] the various [illegible] The [illegible] to Panama for the eight years [illegible] over [illegible] or as one of the commission's witnesses put it, one third of the funds was spent legitimately, one third was squandered, and one third wasted."

These extracts from Professor Kinchey's work are but a faint picture of the terrible condition of the people and Government in France that was created by the frauds and the failure of the old Panama Canal Company.

Who were the men that brought this ruin and disgrace upon France?

The report of Admiral Walker shows that they are, in large part, if not exclusively, the same men who, as contractors and directors of the old company, had robbed it of hundreds of millions of francs and then organized the New Panama Canal Company, and still own its stock and that they are here now pushing its domicile on the United States to aid them in recovering the money they put into it, for which we are asked to provide not less than 33 per cent profit. Unless all accounts are false, M. Bunau-Varilla was among the men who wrecked the old company, and he is now the minister plenipotentiary of the new company, engaged in making the supreme law for the people of the United States in this treaty, and largely for his own benefit.

This is the most startling adventure that has been attempted on any government in modern times, and I have found no parallel for it in older history.

I must ask the Senate and the President to pause and take breath, at article 22 of this Hay-Varilla treaty, which is intended to force this outrage upon the country, and to consider the evidence I will produce to prove it. It will not take much longer time at most than was consumed in the very hurried final act of settling and signing that treaty, which enabled Bunau-Varilla and his associates to make the thrifty speculation in the bonds of the old Panama Canal Company on or about the same day on which it was signed.

Admiral Walker and his associates seem to have been easily put off in their researches into the frauds, robbery, corruption, and the pockets granted to the members of the New Panama Canal Company.

The lawyer on the Commission, Mr. Pasco, could not escape from making some mention of the matter, in the guarded language I have quoted from that report, but the Commission was very deferential to French repugnance and conducted itself well, mentioning the fact that there were sixty persons in the list of the convicted and pardoned felons whose names are not given, and it is intimated in the report that the French Government was unwilling that these names should be disclosed. Three sixty persons subscribed 2,285,700 francs to the stock of the New Panama Canal Company, the scapegoat for the sins of those malefactors that has been turned loose, not to perish in the wilderness, but to fatten in the rich pastures generally of the United States.

If the stories that fill the newspapers as the intending life-saving [illegible] surrounding the attorney are true, M. Bunau-Varilla was among the contractors and others who brought this ruin on the old Panama Company. He makes it his boast of distinction in commending himself to the President as envoy extraordinary from Panama, that he is "the champion of the old Panama Canal Company." Let us see, also, if he is justly accused of being one of its robbers.

Eiffel, a noted French engineer, was convicted in the French more humiliating to the Senate on the part of the President than to withhold from this body the state of facts as to the contemplated purchase, which is known only to the President and his advisers, and yet to demand of the Senate that this contemplated contract shall be ratified or approved before its terms are known to us or, it may be, even to the President.

I will not dwell upon the relations of confidence that the Constitution creates between the President and the Senate when they are cooperating in the enactment of supreme law for the United States in conjunction with a foreign state.

This relation ought to prevent the withholding of any fact from the Senate on which it must necessarily pass in enacting a supreme law for the United States, or in enacting such a law with studied omissions in the text that he and the Panama Canal Company may fill at pleasure.

I am quite aware that the confidence of the relation that existed and was so conspicuously manifested by President Washington and his contemporaries and successors has given place to the evil spirit of political partisanship to such a degree that the President and the Senate are often found in severe political antagonism. I am quite satisfied that there is a spirit of political domination that frowns down all efforts of the minority in the Senate to gain information that might be inconvenient in the political policy of the President, and that such requests are regarded as being of the same class with the offense of lese majeste that is so firmly prosecuted in the European monarchies. But there are still rights and duties that should control our conduct in these highest matters of state that for one I will not voluntarily abandon, nor will they be denied to me, as a Senator, without protest.

The Senate is required by this treaty to enact a law that is void on its face for its uncertainty, or else it is only the delegation of power to the President to remove the uncertainty in the law by supplying all the terms of the contemplated contract of purchase in accordance with his own will and at his discretion, without submitting it to the Senate, as a part of the treaty-making power, or to Congress as the lawmaking power, either for consideration or concurrence. This is a domestic matter, in which no foreign government can participate.

If it is only a power of attorney to make such a contract of purchase and to inject it into the treaty after the Senate has ratified it, Panama has no right to assist in conferring such extra-official power upon the President of the United States by treaty, with the consent of the Senate, for that would be a simple act of municipal legislation.

[illegible] the power, or the act to be performed, is too indefinite to be made an enactment of supreme law. If it is anything in the form, substance, or spirit of a statute law, it is a bestowal of unlimited discretion upon the President to make a purchase of certain property from the New Panama Canal Company on such terms as to price and payment or such other terms as he may, in his discretion, see fit to make; and the Republic of Panama can not participate with our Senate in such an enactment.

If it stopped there and is only operative as a power of attorney it would be a discretion that might be in some way controlled by Congress, or in some way as yet unknown by the Senate before the action of the President would be finally completed or "consummated."

Consent of this the Senate is required, in advance of any action, declaration, or promise on his part as to what he proposes to do, to ratify all that he may do in making such a purchase and to make it a supreme law of the United States, so that Congress would be under a moral if not a legal obligation to "consummate" the purchase by paying the price for it that the President may see fit to bind Congress to pay.

He agrees to pay $40,000,000 for this property, which is the sum fixed as the maximum in the Spooner law, the time of payment and the question of title are also left to his discretion. Or, if he is willing to raise the price to any sum that meets the demands of the New Panama Canal Company, that price is to be ordained if the Senate ratifies that treaty.

A situation such as this could not be otherwise than indefensible, essential on the part of Senators who respect the rights of the Senate, the Constitution, or the rights of a free people.

The gross of this situation is far greater than its absurdity when the facts and conditions that have made it the leading feature of the strange policy of the President in dealing with Panama are understood.

Admit that Panama is an established republic, independent of Colombia, which it is not true under the principles of international law, and that the New Panama Canal Company has ceased to be a political citizen of Colombia, which is not true as matter of fact or law; and that Panama has the right which Colombia had to consent to the sale by the Panama Canal Company of the concessionary rights through the Wyse concession, and that they are severed from Colombia and have passed, irreclaimably, to Panama, which is not true; and that such rights can be conferred on the United States by this treaty, which is not true. Admit all this, and we will only have reached the margin of the real purpose and effect of article 22 of the Hay-Varilla treaty. That article establishes another fixed qualification upon these rights, which is that we shall never own them until we have purchased and paid for them under agreement with the Panama Canal Company.

That treaty gives to Panama the power to deny to the United States the absolute right to the full ownership and possession even of the canal zone after we have paid her $10,000,000 for it until we have made and "consummated" "the contemplated purchase" of the things that are mentioned in article 22 of the treaty from the New Panama Canal Company.

The Spooner law and the Hay-Herran treaty did not give to Colombia any such authority over our dealings with the New Panama Canal Company as this treaty gives to Panama.

In the Spooner law the sum to be paid for all the rights and property of the canal companies was not to exceed $40,000,000. In this treaty there is no limit. In the Spooner law the purchase of that property was required to be arranged for before a treaty with Colombia could be made, and Colombia had no part in the terms of the purchase or anything else except to consent that the canal company might enter into agreement with the United States for its purchase.

Did Panama impose these fetters upon us in the majesty of her sovereign powers or are they self-imposed by the United States?

Did Panama require that we should first make the contemplated purchase from the Panama Canal Company, on its own terms, before our purchase of the canal zone from her should confer upon the United States the absolute right to the property for which we are required to pay her $10,000,000 at the time of the exchange of ratifications of this treaty? And was this done for some great reason of state, that might be important to the glory and power of Panama and might be demanded by the nobility of her sentiment toward the New Panama Canal Company, or toward M. Bunau Varilla, the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of Panama, who signed the treaty with Mr. Hay? Panama had no purpose in prescribing this handicap on the United States, or in any other part of this proceeding, except to do the will of the Panama Canal Company.

This twenty-second article of the Hay-Varilla treaty introduces a third "high contracting power" into this factory for making supreme law for the United States that is a stranger to this country in every sense except as a conspirator against our Treasury and the peace and the welfare of the people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PATTERSON in the chair). The Senator from Alabama will suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, unless otherwise ordered, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business, which is Senate resolution 82, submitted by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

Mr. CULLOM. I hope whatever is the order regularly may be laid aside until the Senator from Alabama concludes his remarks.

While I am up, Mr. President, I do not desire to call attention especially to what the Senator is saying, but I think he is getting a little outside of the rule in discussing the twenty-second article of the treaty which is before the Senate in executive session.

Mr. MORGAN. I am discussing the effect of the treaty, particularly one article of it, upon the people of the United States.

Mr. CULLOM. I know; but I submit to the Senator whether according to the rule he is not going beyond what under the practice prescribed he has a right to in the premises; in other words, whether he is not violating the rules of the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. I am not criticising at all the treaty as a law document as it will be when it goes on the statute books of the United States as the supreme law.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator is discussing the treaty.

Mr. MORGAN. I am not criticising the motives of anybody who has had any hand in negotiating it. I am merely showing, as well as I know how to show, that it is an act of injustice to the reputation of the people of the United States that the New Panama Canal Company should be allowed to intrude into it in any way whatever.

Mr. CULLOM. I understand; but I submit to the Senator on his own judgment whether, in discussing the twenty-second article of the treaty, which is now before the Senate in executive session, he is not overstepping the rule without authority from the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, let us test that by the next matter that I was going to say. This twenty-second article of the Hay-Varilla treaty——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama will suspend for a moment. The Senator from Illinois asks, as the Chair understands him, that the regular order be laid aside so that the Senator from Alabama may continue his remarks.

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly. I supposed that had been done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered. The Senator from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. MORGAN. I am speaking now, and have been speaking, and I will be speaking about what I call a third high contracting power that has been brought into this treaty with power to regulate its destiny, with power to prevent its operation after we have ratified it, until that third power is satisfied in respect of an agreement that is contemplated to be made with it that it has been fully compensated.

Mr. CULLOM. While I think the Senator is outside of the rule governing executive and legislative sessions, yet I am not disposed to make the point if he will bear in mind that until otherwise authorized he shall keep within the rule of the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. The point could have been more appropriately made five times during this debate than it can be made upon the proposition I am now discussing, for the reason that I am not discussing the act of either of the contracting powers to the treaty, but of a third high contracting power that is intruded into it by its provisions. I want to say that that third contracting power could not be allowed any day in court, except to receive power conferred upon it by the people and Congress of the United States according to their contract.

This twenty-second article of the Hay-Varilla treaty introduces a third "high contracting power" into this factory for making supreme law for the United States that is a stranger to this country in every sense, except as a conspirator against our Treasury and the peace and the welfare of our people. The New Panama Canal Company is that high contracting power. It has arrived and has concluded its agreement between France and Panama—that is, outside of this treaty—that its rights and claims of every kind under the laws of Colombia shall be solemnly guaranteed and protected by Panama as the successor government to Colombia.

Then Panama agrees with the United States, in the Hay-Varilla treaty, that the rights of Colombia, under the Wyse concessions and its extensions, for the construction of a canal at Panama shall not inure to the United States directly, but shall come through the New Panama Canal Company. With those rights and powers we could compel the New Panama Canal Company to complete the canal, but this treaty provides that we shall annul and surrender those rights and obligations, instead of having the right that Colombia had to compel that company to complete the canal or else to forfeit all of its concessionary rights, without compensation for any of its canal property, or else to seal them to the United States on fair terms. It is the canal company that is made the vendor of these alleged rights to the United States under this treaty, not Panama.

What reason can any just man give for requiring the United States not only to surrender these rights and powers to the Panama Canal Company but to become entirely subservient to the power of that company and to force our Government to buy the property from it, instead of compelling that company to perform the contracts it made with Colombia, if we choose to require that this shall be done?

We engage with Panama, in this treaty, to purchase those rights at a sum to be agreed upon with the New Panama Canal Company, and until that is done and the purchase is consummated the rights of Colombia under the Wyse concessions are not to pass to the United States as against Panama.

This can mean nothing else but this: That until the United States pay Panama the canal property and railroad stock, at a price to be settled with the New Panama Canal Company, Panama will grant no canal concessions to us in absolute right.

When this treaty is ratified the Panama Canal Company will stand over us with a rod, and France will compel Panama to adhere to and execute the twenty-second article of the Hay-Varilla treaty in its letter.

When we are thus tied up by this treaty with Panama the dugging of the canal will not be begun by the United States until the demands of the New Panama Canal Company as to the price of its property are paid, whatever that price may be.

Before the Senate can afford to enter that trap it should at least know the terms of the "contemplated purchase" of this property and the price we are to pay for it.

Other rights of other persons and of other states and corporations exist in that canal zone that are appurtenant to the land, such as the right of New York to protect the property of the Panama Railroad Company and of its stockholders, and their right to refuse to sell their stock and to surrender the property of the company to the United States. Why are we not required to purchase these rights before we can get a title to the railroad from Panama? Who do we ignore the rights of the New York corporation, while we set these French corporation wreckers in authority over the Government of the United States?

There is a meaning in this scheme that is far deeper and more to be sought after and unearthed than the mere inconsistency of this treaty provision.

The answer is plain enough. It is that the Panama Canal Company is the pet of the Government of the United States and the life—the raison d'être—of the Republic of Panama, and it must be provided for and settled with before this treaty can become operative in constructing a canal at Panama.

We are trifling with ourselves and with the American people when we assume that Panama has any interest of her own in shaping the terms of the contemplated contract we are to make for the purchase of the property and alleged concessions of the New Panama Canal Company acquired from Colombia.

Her interests are only to comply with the demands of the Panama Canal Company, that she does not dare to refuse.

She sells us the canal zone, within which these things are all located, and confers upon the United States the supreme and exclusive sovereignty over the canal zone in article 3 of the treaty, for which it was pay Panama $10,000,000 on the ratification of that treaty, but she annexes a condition to our purchase that we must first purchase and pay for the property of that company at the sum it may demand.

Why should Panama concern her mighty spirit with cares for the welfare of the New Panama Canal Company and proceed to amplify this grant of the 10-mile zone to us by adding, in article 22, that the grant should not be absolute until a contemplated purchase of the concessions and property of the New Panama Canal Company in that zone is consummated?

This demand of Panama in favor of the New Panama Canal Company as to that contemplated purchase is so strange, unnecessary, and apparently unnecessarily intrusive that it demands some explanation from the Government as to the facts and reasons that have caused us to tie our hands and submit to the will of Panama and the New Panama Canal Company and of France in the leading purpose of this treaty, which is to compel the United States to treat the New Panama Canal Company as the owner of the paramount beneficial interest in the canal zone and in all the railroad and canal rights and property in that zone, and to pay Panama $10,000,000 for the privilege of purchasing that interest from the New Panama Canal Company at such price as it shall choose to compel us to pay.

It is the privilege of purchasing these claims, concessions, and properties from the New Panama Canal Company for which we are to pay Panama $10,000,000 that comprises the real consideration for that payment.

Panama's largest money interest in her bargain with the United States is the perpetual annuity of $250,000.

If the concessions made by Colombia to N. B. Wyse and sold by him to the old Panama Canal Company and turned over to the New Panama Canal Company by the liquidator of the old company, with all the rights, duties, and obligations that were assumed to them, have passed to Panama, the sale to the United States of the 10-mile canal zone in which these rights and properties exist conveys the property subject to these concessions, with all conditions, rights, and obligations appertaining thereto.

This result is accomplished in the third article of the treaty by conveying to the United States the supreme and exclusive sovereignty over the canal zone.

Under this act of cession, for it is only that, the full power of Congress is conferred to legislate for that zone and everything and everybody in it. Congress, under our Constitution, in legislating with respect to the rights of the New Panama Canal Company, would be bound to respect and preserve all the vested rights of the New Panama Canal Company within that zone as they exist under the laws of Colombia.

If any of those rights are to be extinguished by purchase from the New Panama Canal Company, Congress must provide the laws under which such purchase can alone be made and the money can be appropriated to consummate it, and all future processes of law applicable to any rights, duties, and obligations within that zone should be left open and without embarrassment to the legislative powers of Congress.

There is no right arising out of these concessions made by Colombia, no duty that they impose on Colombia or the canal companies, or on anybody else, which follows the transfer of the sovereignty of the 10-mile zone to the United States that the Congress is not as completely invested with the power to enforce and charged with the duty to respect under our Constitution as if the whole of Colombia had been ceded to and incorporated into the territory of the United States.

In the Hay-Herran treaty the United States was to have a perpetual lease, for canal purposes, of a 6-mile zone from the coast at Colon to the coast at Panama, as that treaty was interpreted by our Government.

In the Hay-Varilla treaty the supreme and exclusive sovereignty is ceded to the United States over a 10-mile zone, which lies between the 3-mile limit in the Caribbean Sea, off the Bay of Colon, and the 3-mile limit in the Pacific ocean, off the Bay of Panama.

Within this 10-mile zone and out to these limits the sovereignty of the United States is as supreme and exclusive as it is in our possessions in Alaska, New Mexico, or in any of our insular possessions.

Now, in this situation it became necessary for the purposes of the New Panama Canal Company that the powers of this nascent Republic should be employed in shaping this treaty so as to qualify and limit the sovereign powers of the United States over the canal zone, and so as to compel us to purchase its claims directly from that company at such a price as it would agree to take, and through this result the last paragraph of article 22 was inserted.

It has no other office, function, or meaning, and that alone is its fixed purpose.

The New Panama Canal Company has failed to get the $40,000,000 from the Treasury of the United States in consequence of the defeat of the Hay-Herran treaty, and it determined not to lose it and, if possible, to increase that stipend under the Hay-Varilla treaty.

If this treaty is ratified with article 22 in it, that company will certainly succeed in getting the $10,000,000, and will most likely be able to compel us to largely increase that sum.

Or, if it is ratified with article 22 stricken out, the New Panama Canal Company and the Republic of Panama have the assistance of France already pledged for the maintenance of all French interests in Panama, and especially that the Colombian concessions to the Panama Canal Company shall not expire until the 31st of October, 1910.

I again quote the language of M. Delcassé, the French minister of foreign affairs, in answer to an interpellation in the Chamber of Deputies, to prove this statement, as follows:

LATEST INTELLIGENCE—M. DELCASSÉ ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

PARIS, November 3, 1903.

In the course of the debate on the budget for foreign affairs in the Chamber of Deputies this afternoon M. Delcassé, the minister for foreign affairs, [illegible] the statement of the negotiations of the Hay-Herran treaty. He argued [illegible] that the Government had not been [illegible] in the negotiations, which contained a dozen [illegible] rather than words, and with [illegible] France was not [illegible] open hand. [illegible] the Government had officially received and the United States of Panama, he pointed out, had participated with the utmost [illegible] instant, for reasons to which they were not called upon to express opinion.

The Government of France would not express an opinion—

[illegible] the Government to interfere in the domestic affairs of another country. [illegible] Government of Panama [illegible] Hay and the United States [illegible] received notice of that fact and from the moment it [illegible] new republic [illegible] the negotiations necessary for the maintenance of [illegible] they had only to consider what guarantees of interest [illegible] a French point. They were not quite free from apprehension for a certain [illegible]

[illegible] months past it had been said at Bogota that the decision of the [illegible] Government to grant an extension of six years from 1904 for the [illegible] had been completely [illegible] and that in [illegible] the concessions [illegible] Panama. If that treaty had an [illegible] Panama, it would never have received the sanction of France. [illegible] France, in the interests of France and French [illegible] respected. They had received the following [illegible]

[illegible] Panama solemnly, expressly, and definitely undertakes [illegible] the French company in the exercise of its rights, which have been acquired in [illegible] before November 3, 1903, [illegible] relating to the Panama railway, the transmission of [illegible] and the neutrality of Panama. All these conditions are maintained, and [illegible] that we expect from the success on up to 1910.

[illegible] that Panama had [illegible] for them to do so, and, as a matter of fact, had already been done by the constitutional [illegible] of the United States—authority to permit the agents of France to enter into relations with all the agents of the new Republic of Panama.

Permit what?

The agents of France to enter into relations with all the agents of the new Republic of Panama.

No answer has been attempted to this dangerous and dishonorable situation in which our Government is placed by this treaty. The American people will not fail to see and understand this matter or resent the humiliation of having France called in by Panama and the canal company to coerce us into an utter subordination to this combination.

Panama pledges herself to France to maintain and interpret in the most liberal spirit the contracts made before November 3. This does not refer alone to contracts made with Colombia, but to contracts between the canal company and the United States.

If Senators will examine the official proceedings of that company of December 30, 1903, in connection with the statement of M. Delcassé, they will see that this pledge covers all contracts, including those heretofore made with the United States. They will also discover, in running these developments back to article 22 of this treaty, the most unworthy and humiliating chapter in American history.

It has been carefully withheld from public scrutiny and we are indebted to the garrulity of M. Bunau-Varilla and Assistant Secretary Loomis at the banquet of the Quill Club for what light we have on this unprecedented attitude of our Government.

Their flamboyant utterances would have been at once set down to the credit of the adage, "In vino veritas," but for the fact that the banquet was presided over by the Reverend Doctor Tipple.

The astonishment of the country was subdued to serious reflection when the President gave his open and official approval to what was said by these high functionaries. In the part of his oration that is most important, Mr. Loomis said:

WHAT MIGHT HAVE BEEN.

Reflect for a moment on the grave possibilities which confronted the Government as it peered into the future and sought to provide adequately for the safety and [illegible] of a [illegible] thousand miles [illegible] If the proceedings in Panama had not succeeded [illegible] the American navy, guided by the experience of its most hardy officers, and have treated on [illegible] that the Nicaragua route was as impracticable as the [illegible] of the Panama canal [illegible] at Bogota would really be [illegible] a new [illegible] treaty [illegible] the meantime Congress had [illegible] power [illegible] have anticipated the [illegible] I may add a second [illegible] as a well-informed person [illegible] the consummation of France would not have stood serenely by and witnessed [illegible] thousands of her people [illegible] the [illegible] Bogota [illegible] French company of [illegible]

[illegible] Loomis to Paris [illegible] notes that the [illegible] of the French commission was expected [illegible] French [illegible] Mac[illegible] have [illegible] with the Colombians and [illegible] that [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible] and property of foreign [illegible] French [illegible] would [illegible] the Colombians for a long period. This would have [illegible] Panama [illegible] Mexican [illegible] and we should [illegible] Panama [illegible] French [illegible] have been [illegible] and Panama [illegible] the canal [illegible] was expected to furnish the space to set and the world in flames.

What could have been the threatened situation at Panama that caused Loomis and Varilla to look back at what was so darkly ominous and to shudder at our narrow escape? It was the same that hurried our Atlantic and Pacific fleets to Panama and Colon with an armed of naval power that was never before exhibited by the United States. It was the same that brought the fleet under Admiral Robley Evans to Hawaii from the Chinese station at a moment when our interests in Manchuria and all of China gave our commercial people great anxiety. It was the same that caused M. Thiebaud to assail the French Government with bitter reproaches, before an assembled multitude in Paris, for not having sent warships to Panama in advance of the uprising there.

It was the demand of the New Panama Canal Company, assisted by the compact set forth in the answer of M. Delcassé to an inquiry in the French Chamber of Deputies on the 3d of November, which I have just read, that caused this warlike commotion and alarmed the fears of the Administration.

France made these demands on Panama, and they were conceded before the Hay-Varilla treaty was signed in such hot haste on the 18th day of November, 1903. It was only four days later when M. Delcassé made his official statement to the Chamber of Deputies, which I have just read to the Senate, announcing the compact with Panama and its knowledge of its independence.

The signing of the treaty was such an extraordinary affair that it gave to the country the amusing idea that it was an opera bouffe performance, in which M. Bunau-Varilla sold the title.

The newspapers brought out the fact that it was signed while Amador and Boyd, who were joint commissioners with Bunau-Varilla to negotiate it, were en route by rail from New York to Washington for that purpose. They had never seen the proposed treaty and could not have known its provisions, and they must have been within two hours' travel from Washington, on a fast express train, when the treaty was taken to Mr. Hay's sick room and was signed by him and Varilla, who met his accomplices coming at the door, and hurriedly thrust the great scrip behind a lapel.

They deeply resented the affront, but reciprocated their indignation. It was soon stated in the newspapers that Varilla's exaltation over this strategy was due to the realization of millions of dollars in a deal in Panama canal securities by the announcement that the treaty had been signed—a fact that has not been denied, so far as I am informed. But this financial scheme, of which Mr. Hay was ignorant, had nothing to do with his part in this semitragic act.

He was influenced doubtless by the same emergent policy of the Administration that caused Assistant Secretary Darling of the Navy, to send orders ahead of time to Panama to be on the lookout for "the uprising" and to repel any interference with it.

Haste was required to put the Panama "uprising" in possession of the governing power there and in Colon, but greater despatch was needed to prevent France from intervening and to justify her with the provisions of article 22 of the Hay-Varilla treaty, and Mr. Hay "accepted the situation."

Mr. Hay must have known the facts that Loomis afterwards gave forth in momentous oracles at the Quill Club banquet.

They were dark surmises that France was preparing to appear at Panama with war ships to contest with the United States the occupation of Panama and for the protection of French interests, and especially the interests of the New Panama Canal Company, and, finally, as an ultimatum, to demand the extension of the Wyse concession from 1904 to 1910, that had been conceived in fraud, sustained by war, in which we had given it aid, and nursed by Marroquin and kept alive by the blood of the people of Colombia.

The twenty-second article of this treaty and the compact between France and Panama secured these fruits of fraud and violence to the New Panama Canal Company and completed the triumph of Cromwell and Varilla. When it was signed he supposed that his triumph was complete, and our Government was in a more tranquil mood.

The fleets were dispersed and the United States guard at Panama went into camp to protect the Republic of Panama while the treaty should be matured in the Senatorial incubator, and Varilla and Loomis were permitted to explode their joy at the Quill Club banquet that we had escaped a war with France. It was not Colombia, it was France, that gave occasion for our grand display of naval power at Panama, and it is the surrender of the Administration to these demands of France, in article 22 of this treaty, that has suddenly ended our great war preparations, that included both the Army and the Navy in the projected military campaign at Panama.

The people could not take it seriously that all this war preparation was needed to protect Panama against Colombia, whose great General Reyes was in Washington suing for peace. They laughed at it as a political pageant, gotten up like the fight of Ransey Scott with the unseen foe in Longstreet's Georgia Scenes.

They were mistaken. There was an enemy in sight; there was a casus belli; there was an ultimatum; there was a surrender and a capitulation, which is set forth in article 22 of the Hay-Varilla treaty.

Time was too short to admit of delay in the signature of the treaty on that fateful evening. France had to be placated and could not wait for the information even of the contemplated purchase of the property of the New Panama Canal Company. So it was postponed until a future time, but was safeguarded with a provision to which Panama assented, that our most important rights in Panama should not become absolute until the contemplated purchase of the things mentioned in article 22 is "consummated."

This article is as the apple of the eye to Cromwell, Varilla, and the pardoned felons of the New Panama Canal Company.

For one, I wish to know what it will cost us before I assist in its ratification. I am willing to assist in every movement, right or wrong in policy, to which the country is committed, even in pursuit of policies that my conscience can not approve, but I am not willing to join in a surrender to fraud and iniquity such as France requires us to accept in the twenty-second article of this treaty.

The wars of the Administration, even if they are wrong but have become unavoidable, demand my support as the bitter side of patriotic duty, but its surrenders to the New Panama Canal Company, on the demand of France, to avoid a threat of hostilities or the failure of a political exploit, is one thing I will not vote for.

I will now further identify M. Bunau-Varilla with the movement of the New Panama Canal Company by quoting an extract from his address at the Quill Club banquet.

He thus states the cause of the rejection by the Colombian Congress of the Hay-Herran treaty.

It is known now that the cause of that rejection was the plan to twist the attitude of that corporation with the Panama Canal Company, in order to declare forfeited the concession and appropriate to itself the Panama Canal and these properties. Thus, in November, when the Colombian Congress was closed, it had succeeded in vainly persuading the President of that country to consummate the usurpation, and thus it had succeeded the very intimate of the President, and finally it had succeeded the very intimate of the President, exposed the people of the Isthmus by destroying the possibility of any satisfaction of the canal.

The result of these acts, which were virtually crimes, was to provoke on the Isthmus a revolution, and throughout the whole world a feeling of indignation against the nation, which is evidenced by the fact that within ten days after the revolution the Republic was recognized and had entered into diplomatic relations with nearly all the nations of the earth.

Varilla and Cromwell have long been hunting in couples to destroy the Nicaragua Canal as the only means of protecting the property of the New Panama Canal Company on the United States.

To get credit for importunity in what he calls a work for Science he has affected to be in some sort the enemy of the New Panama Canal Company. If his enmity has any moral reason to support it, he has not alluded to it. If it is supported by any other reason he can not assume in the face of his public speeches, that a canal on that route is of doubtful success.

His alleged enmity to that company deceives no one, especially in the face of his diatribe against Colombia for endeavoring, as he says, to levy "blackmail" on that company.

In a lecture before the American Academy of Political and Social Science he says, among other accusations:

But she was futile and in vain, and certainly the violent desire of appropriation thanks to a feast in the concessionaire of the canal, in holding the Panama Canal Company and the Republic of Colombia, the property of the French company was too strong for the Bogota politicians, and in closing up themselves in a fool's paradise they let the date of the 23d of September drop without having shown any disposition to comply with the requisitions of vulgar courtesy toward the United States.

MASTERFUL PIECE OF ROGUERY.

Such a disposition of mind seems incredible, and we hesitate to think it possible that a nation can be represented by a responsible body who frames into law such a [illegible] piece of roguery [illegible] conspiracy to obtain its property [illegible] There is not the slightest doubt, however, that it was to whom we read the [illegible] of August 6, which is a [illegible] document, which we read another page [illegible] and, in fact, a masterful piece of roguery, which the Bogota Congress heard before the dissolution at the end of October.

In this report the Colombian Congress [illegible] in diplomatic terms by the recommendation of approving the proposition to bring into [illegible] the Panama Canal concession, [illegible] the conditions for which the purchase money had been paid, and thus to nullify the whole property of the canal company in order to sell with free hands to the highest bidder [illegible] United States, with [illegible] on the price of the property, [illegible] easily made, thanks to a great commission on the price of the property.

This recalls the insolence of Genet, minister of France, but Genet criticised our Government for not responding in a sense of gratitude to France, while Varilla flatters the President, which makes all the difference. Washington dismissed Genet, while Roosevelt hugs Varilla to his bosom.

An enemy of the New Panama Canal Company would never have indulged in such violent criticisms of Colombia for claiming a fourth of the "blackmail" that he and Cromwell were trying to levy on the United States. It was an interested friend of the Panama Canal Company, whose friend he was informed, that utilized these criticisms against Colombia.

He knew that the breach of all the contracts of that company and its claims with Colombia had caused revolt and war in that Republic, and that the very demand that he was then pressing and is still urging for the extension of the Wyse concession from 1904 to 1910 was the cause of that war.

Colombia had wasted for twenty-four years for the canal, under contracts with these French companies, and when they confessed their inability to complete the work, and, to avoid the forfeiture of their concessions, they were trying to close a "business arrangement" with the United States for the sale of property that had cost them less than $12,000,000 for the sum of $40,000,000, it was neither unjust nor in any sense improper that they should have been required to pay Colombia a small part of their winnings in a game that never had an equal in depravity.

They had inflicted upon Colombia a debt of $6,000,000 and the loss of scores of lives in their violation of the laws and consequent war, that terminated in the subjugation of Marroquin, and now they demand that Panama and the United States shall accept and confirm that outrage in the ratification of this treaty under a threat of the displeasure of France.

I say this person, while he was a diplomatic guest near this Government, should not be permitted in the interests of such a cause and imprecation toward an American Republic, whose independence was then recognized and resented at Washington, as Colombian ministers have been received for three quarters of a century, is far below the conceptions that the world has entertained of the dignity, sanctuary, and honor of the grand Republic.

Now, no matter how late in the execution of the concession from 1904 to 1910 is entitled to our respect, or what sacrifices of blood and money it has unjustly cost the people of Colombia, we have over the canal zone sought to make a compact between France and Panama, as above set forth, and we confirm that compact.

I need not pause to demonstrate the determination of France to control the construction of a canal to cross Panama. Every Senator who knows the history of Congress since 1880 will be able to denounce this compact between France and Panama as being in contempt of the decisive action of all our Presidents and Secretaries of State even further back than 1880 and of both Houses of Congress.

In this treaty we pledge and then expressly abandon this declared policy of the Republic of France and Panama.

I am not considering the fair or false to express any opinions of my own as to the propriety of the line of policy we are observing with reference to Panama or Colombia. My purpose is to lay before the Senate such extracts in the history of these transactions as the known facts disclose and to obtain the information from the Government that will support or refute or will explain the true situation.

Before I enter upon the examination of the specific points of the inquiry made in this resolution, I will state, as briefly as possible, an outer result that is [illegible] to be accomplished by the New Panama Canal Company, through the ratification of this treaty, as to which there may be some doubt as to asking that Congress should be informed about it.

The fact I will now state is perfectly understood by the men who are exploiting the enterprise in Washington and Paris, and also by speculators in the bonds and stocks of the old Panama Canal Company.

The ratification of this treaty will repeal every appropriation of money in the Spooner law for the construction of a canal on the Nicaragua route, which result is earnestly desired by some who claim that they are patriotic.

That result being accomplished, the New Panama Canal Company will have destroyed its only competitor, and with France at its back and with our President's determination to have a canal at Panama endorsed from any where, the whole subject of a canal will be relegated to the condition it was in after the abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and the whole controversy will have to be again fought over. In that battle the Nicaragua route can not participate for this treaty forbids it. This treaty will then force Congress to consummate this "contemplated purchase" at the peril of having no canal.

This repeal of all the canal appropriations, under the effect of this treaty, destroys all the work that has been accomplished toward the construction of any canal.

I have no censures, but great commiseration for those who will assist in this fatal movement. It is both needless and dangerous. But I can not forbear again to call the attention of Congress to the terrible situation this treaty will create, and to implore the law-making power to reach forth a mighty arm and exert all its great powers to relieve the country from a blunder that will be felt for many generations.

I will now turn to the facts that involve the New Panama Canal Company in full and direct responsibility for the last paragraph of article 22 of the Hay-Varilla treaty. In doing this I will make statements that are based upon the correspondence in reputable journals, as the President does, and will ask the Senate to assume as to the resolution before the Senate, to affirm or deny these statements. It is thus stated, and I therefore so assert:

1. That M. Bunau-Varilla was active and persistent in arranging to bring about and to promote the secession of Panama from Colombia, and that this plan was agreed to between him and influential persons in the United States and conferences were held in Paris and in New York about the time it was ascertained that the Colombian Congress was opposed to the ratification of the Hay-Herran treaty.

2. That in the capacity of an engineer in the employ of the old Panama Canal Company, and then as a contractor, he acquired considerable wealth and when that company failed he was largely interested in its bonded indebtedness and its property, or in stock of the company, and is now, or was when he was sent as minister from Panama, largely interested in the contemplated purchase of the property of the New Panama Canal Company, that is provided for in article 22 of the Hay-Varilla treaty.

3. That M. Bunau-Varilla, in announcing his appointment as minister from Panama to the President of the United States and to many official functionaries, proclaimed himself as the champion of the Panama Canal and advertised himself that his new official position was closely correspondent with his splendid career in the promotion of that canal.

This also includes his writings and his public lectures, directed especially to the destruction of the Nicaragua route.

While it is not surprising that M. Varilla, as minister from Panama, appointed by cable while he was in New York, should have considered his personal interests in negotiating and signing the Hay-Varilla treaty, particularly in article 22, it is surprising that he was considered a fit person to assist in making a treaty that was intended to become the supreme law of the United States and to bestow on him and his associates such money as they might be able to wring from the Treasury of the United States under a "contract" upon which our treaty rights are made to depend.

If a Member of Congress should make such a contract with any other person, to get money out of the Treasury of the United States in that way, he would not easily escape condign punishment.

He would, in that matter, amenable to our laws, but, under the laws of nations, he is persona non grata. He is not a fit person.

I will not speculate further in the connection of M. Varilla with the revolt in Panama, as a conspirator, except to say that he is a citizen of France and had no patriotic reason for attempting to free himself from the alleged oppressions of Colombia toward its people.

His interest in contracts on the canal, out of which he had grown rich, and the glory of a new raid on the Treasury of the United States, and of crushing out his old foe—the Nicaragua Canal—was enough to make him frantic, and I do not criticise him for being in that condition. But I do insist that the Senate of a great nation has powers to scrutinize and agree to supreme laws that most deeply affect and ruin some one of our peoples should some upon carefully and faithfully, especially in connection with article 22 of this treaty. That article provides for immense benefits to Varilla and his associates and enables them to bring all the other purposes of this treaty to naught if it is adopted.

In the relations he held to that movement and to the Panama Canal and to the money we are to pay for it and to this treaty, that compels the purchase of the property of the Panama Canal Company, old and new, and to the hurried negotiation and signing of this treaty that cut off the commissioners sent by Panama while they were en route by rail from New York to Washington, there is imperative reason why the Government should explain that transaction to the people. I hope to finish that opportunity in the answer to this resolution. The President has taken Varilla into his confidence with these importations upon Lake and has thereby engendered suspicion as to the right of M. Varilla to sell to us the alleged property of the people of Panama. I pass information which our people cannot be being true it is denied that he had any lawful authority to sell his square miles of the land of Panama to the United States.

Leaving these other matters connected with the Panama secession out of view for the present, I will now present to the Senate some other reasons why the President should inform the country as to the particular matter of the contemplated purchase of the concessions and property of the New Panama Canal Company within the canal zone ceded to the United States, as I have shown, and the consummation of that purchase, as a condition on which our purchase of any right or property from Panama is to become absolute. Why were not the terms and cost of that purchase settled with the canal company before the treaty that binds us to it was signed? What was the cause of this reckless and unauthorized haste?

I believe that it was, first, to assure France that we would accept the terms she had already imposed on Panama as a condition of the recognition of her independence, and that we would provide for them in the treaty now before the Senate, and would even go higher in our bid for the property if the canal company should so require.

Before this treaty can be safely considered, I submit that it is the plain duty of the Government to inform the Senate of the state of facts as to this contemplated purchase.

This duty seems so clear and obvious that the plainest person can see it, and the most astute mind can not furnish a satisfactory reason for withholding this information from the Senate.

I need not dwell on this matter, for everybody must see the necessity for this information in advance of the final action of the Senate on this treaty.

In the Committee on Foreign Relations the examination of this treaty has been without any light on this matter. Members of that committee were denied the privilege of moving an amendment to strike out article 22 of that treaty, and they on last time I have had the opportunity to present the facts and reasons to strike that section. The treaty is still without information from official sources as to any thing that has been done or is expected to be done in making or consummating the "contemplated purchase" provided for in that article.

With whom is the President to make this "contemplated purchase" of the property and other things claimed by the New Panama Canal Company?

Eiffel was a contractor for the locks, and he subscribed 10,000,000 francs to the stock of the new company.

The Crédit Lyonnais was heavily interested in contracts for work on the canal. It subscribed 4,000,000 francs.

Artigue, Sonderegger & Co. were contractors on the Culebra cut. They subscribed 2,000,000 francs.

Baratoux, Letellier & Co. had the contract on the Pacific cut of about 10 miles.

The Isthmian Canal Commission, in their final report, say:

All contractors had failed to complete the work assumed by them because [illegible] the close of the year 1888.

The group of defaulting contractors was compelled by public sentiment, and by the only hope of escape from heavy amercements on suits pending against them and, in some cases, of confinement for delinquencies such as were made in the French courts, to accept Lieutenant De Lesseps's proposition to carry the Panama Canal, changing De Lesseps's plan from a sea-level canal to a canal with locks.

The New Panama Canal Company was organized under this agreement, as is stated in the report of the Isthmian Canal Commission, which I have already read to the Senate from pages 83 and 84 of their final report.

These are some of the most prominent despoilers of the old company, whose funds from [illegible] Panama and Panama stand by to guarantee their contracts on the United States.

But to make this statement more complete and accurate, and to show their breach of faith, I will copy the third section of article 5 of the agreement under which the New Panama Canal Company took over, without consideration, all the rights and property, of every kind, from the liquidator of the old company, under the orders of the French courts:

Third. The rights of every nature in the Panama Railroad belonging to the estate in liquidation and continued by M. Cottron under section 4 of [illegible] shall become the property of the present company (the New Panama Canal Company) [illegible] and after the stockholders meeting provided for by article 15 hereof without any pecuniary compensation, but upon the express condition that the canal [illegible] within the time fixed by the [illegible] of concession within such time said rights shall revert to the [illegible] government.

M. LAMPRE. [illegible] on account of the contemplated [illegible] Nicaragua Canal.

They became so much afraid of the Nicaragua Canal that they dropped in their offer from $[illegible] to $[illegible] at a single bound.

Now, there is not a fact in these statements that can be disputed, except upon the hypothesis that the officers who made them had been guilty of falsehood.

These official facts show, in a light that is perfectly clear, first: That the New Panama Canal Company consists almost exclusively of men who had [illegible] by the French courts for these crimes, or by reasons from judgments or indictments to solve rule to the canal stock of the new company. Third, that they made the agreement with the court, to complete the canal, as I have above copied. Fourth, that Colombia was given [illegible] francs of paid-up stock in the new company as compensation for consenting to this arrangement. Fifth, that the company was organized by the payment of [illegible] francs or $[illegible] cash subscriptions of stock into its treasury.

Sixth. I will now quote from the sworn statement of M. Edouard Lampre, the secretary of the New Panama Canal Company, when he testified as a witness before the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, on the 11th day of January, 1899. I present this statement to prove that the subscriptions to the stock of the New Panama Canal Company are men of straw and are able, out of their private means and credit, to pay the $40,000,000 it was then estimated that it would cost to complete the canal, and that were the [illegible] stock and the control of the Panama Railroad, which was taken over by the New Panama Canal Company, they could have performed their contract to complete the canal, if that was possible.

M. Lampre's deposition is as follows. The questions asked him related generally to the letters to President McKinley and to Mr. Hay, and especially to the letter of Bonnardel, president of the board of directors, to the President of the United States, dated Paris, November 18, 1898, which I will place in the appendix to my remarks:

M. LAMPRE. [illegible] on account of the contemplated [illegible] Nicaragua Canal.

They became so much afraid of the Nicaragua Canal that they dropped in their offer from $[illegible] to $[illegible] at a single bound.

Now, there is not a fact in these statements that can be disputed, except upon the hypothesis that the officers who made them had been guilty of falsehood.

What do they show?

The first answer is that this new company never had the honest purpose of keeping their contract to complete the canal. They [illegible] the ability to raise $40,000,000—their estimate for completing the canal, with their private fortunes.

The second answer is that they confined the working capital of the new company to the $12,000,000 cash paid in by them, and never made even an effort to increase it by further sales of stock or by the issue and sale of bonds, and thereby prevented the possibility of completing the canal.

It had already cost the French people and the foreign stockholders and bondholders the sum of 1,329,094,074.74 francs, not including unpaid interest.

With interest included, this sum amounts to over 2,000,000,000 francs.

These figures are taken from the final report of the Isthmian Canal Commission, part 11, pages 21 and 22.

These expenditures have only left a trench in the earth, with [illegible] of any kind except the plant. A great part of the ditch [illegible] up and, with the embankments, is to be again dug out [illegible] if we build the canal there on our plan.

[illegible] a [illegible] more conclusive statement of facts could not be made than is here presented to prove that the New Panama Canal Company never had the intention or expectation of completing the canal with the private resources of the stockholders or by any appeal to the French people for any assistance.

[illegible] that they were [illegible] by the assistance proposed to be given to the Nicaragua Canal is a cheap invention in avoidance of the truth. As soon as the old company got to work, two years before the new company was formed, the United States took up the construction of a canal at Nicaragua, with determined purpose to aid in its construction.

[illegible] to the stock of the New Panama Canal Company had fortified themselves against a possible loss of money in their agreement to complete the canal by two arrangements: first, by the extinguishment of all demands by the old company against them for their frauds and breaches of contract; and, second, by the arrangement made with the court, which I have already quoted, that the Panama Railroad should remain the [illegible] of the New Panama Canal Company; and should never [illegible] to the liquidator of the old company in any event.

If the completion of the canal failed or should be abandoned the railroad was to remain "inalienable" in the hands of the new company on the payment of 20,000,000 francs, or $3,000,000, to the liquidator of the old company.

The stock in the railroad had cost the old company 98,286,186.73 francs, or $18,657,000. (See report of Isthmian Canal Commission, pt. 2, p. 23.)

Under this stipulation they get the railroad for really less than [illegible] its value.

Of the $40,000,000 to be paid by the United States, 40 per cent [illegible] the French courts have already decreed to the New Panama Canal Company; they get $16,000,000, which is a profit [illegible] on the $12,000,000 they paid for their stock in that [illegible]

[illegible] this, the report of the auditors (commissaires) of the New Panama Canal Company, made on the 30th of December, [illegible] that they still have in their treasury the sum of [illegible] remaining unexpended of the $12,000,000 capital stock [illegible] paid into the treasury, and worked seven years with [illegible]

[illegible] this, they have had the net earnings of the railroad, which has not been less than 10 per cent per annum, on a capitalization of $15,000,000, which for the ten years the new company has had control of the railroad must amount to $1,500,000 in addition to betterments. In all, their net profits will be at least 50 [illegible] on their original investment. In Poor's Manual for 1900, [illegible] 1896, it is stated that the net earnings of the Panama [illegible] were more than 35 per cent in 1899, and were even greater for the three preceding years.

Now we are confronted with the question, What has been the real policy of the New Panama Canal Company as to realizing [illegible] on their investment of $12,000,000 in the property of [illegible]

[illegible] demonstrated that it has not been to complete the canal. Their failure to put up the money to complete the canal, or to [illegible] to do it, proves this fact conclusively. They [illegible] expected with $12,000,000 to complete the canal, two-fifths [illegible] which had already cost $[illegible]

[illegible] the canal concession and property at a profit to the [illegible] in the New Panama Canal Company was left to chance [illegible] speculative margin on which it was their purpose to pay [illegible]

They had already secured themselves fully in the agreement with the court against any possible loss, and were fully equipped as a free lance to move against the United States as the only possible purchaser of their holdings.

It required a New York lawyer to work this purchase, and they found an experienced renovator of crippled corporations in Cromwell.

The liquidator of the old company had obtained from Colombia extensions of the canal concessions until October, 1904, and had paid for them out of the assets of the old company.

The first overture of the Panama Canal Company to the United States for a deal in the disposal of canal rights at Panama was made by M. Bonnardel, president of the board of directors of the New Panama Canal Company, dated November 18, 1898. I will insert this letter to President McKinley, with others I have referred to, in an appendix to my remarks. (See Appendix.)

The next approach, ten days later, was by "William Nelson Cromwell, American counsel for the New Panama Canal Company."

This letter, dated November 28, 1898, I will read, as it is the first appearance of Mr. Cromwell on the stage, which, [illegible] act, he prepared to cover with the blood of civil war in Colombia.

Mr. Cromwell to Mr. Hay.

NEW YORK, November [illegible], 1898.

DEAR SIR: Referring to the [illegible] day last and to your [illegible] director-general of the New Panama Canal Company and [illegible] tion with the [illegible] New Panama Canal Company [illegible] leave here for the [illegible] translate the [illegible] which you mentioned, from the house of [illegible] foreign.

I have the honor, etc., WM. NELSON CROMWELL,
Counsel for New Panama Canal Company.

His next appearance was on December 5, 1898, in a letter to Mr. Hay, in which he lifts the curtain and reveals the cause of the war which was then imminent in Colombia:

Mr. Cromwell to Mr. Hay.

NEW YORK, December [illegible], 1898.

MY DEAR SIR: I beg leave to confirm the telegram which I sent you at 10:45 this morning, as follows:

"I just met Director-General Hutin, who had preceded me to New York, that the insurgents which had [illegible] in the Panama [illegible] Congress [illegible] to be [illegible] hour, and would [illegible] that the [illegible]

I have, etc., your obedient servant,
WM. NELSON CROMWELL,
Counsel for New Panama Canal Company.

It will be noticed that the letter of Bonnardel to the President is official and has been appended to it, "consulted by the secretary of the company, Ed. Lampre," the same witness whose testimony I read a few days ago.

Lampre testified before the Committee on Interoceanic Canals in March, 1899, that this plan of operations was discussed and adopted by the board of directors of the New Panama Canal Company before Bonnardel, Hutin, and Cromwell began operations under it. M. Lampre testified as follows (p. 49 of hearings):

THE CHAIRMAN. Was the letter of Bonnardel [illegible] and authority [illegible] the board of directors [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. Yes, in accordance with the resolution of the board.

When the fact is considered that the action of the board of directors was taken at the very time that Marciano was forcing the decree of Sanctionamiento upon Colombia, at the cost of civil war, [illegible] an extension of the Wyse concession until 1904, which the [illegible] had procured, a sensible weight of [illegible] facts upon [illegible] that [illegible] and Cromwell, whose letter to Mr. Hay proves that he was watching every movement at Bogota with the eager attention of a lawyer who had set on foot the scheme to corrupt Sanclemente. The outbreak alarmed him only because he was afraid of its effect on President McKinley, and he at once began to hedge against it by false explanations.

Everything being thus prepared, the campaign in the United States was opened, the first point of attack being the Hepburn bill.

The fight was expected to be a long one and more time was needed for prevent Colombia from even forcing the forfeiture of the Wyse concession, thereby destroying all claim of the New Panama Canal Company to control that concession and to sell the property of the old canal company.

The situation was desperate and required desperate action. The last extension of the Wyse concession would expire on the 21st of October, 1902. Within that period of time the Isthmian canal question, the Monroe doctrine, the question of the construction of the canal by the United States, or the passing of the extension of the Wyse concession was a matter of necessity.

The government of Colombia had no further extension of time to be granted to the French company. They knew of the conspiracy inaugurated by the canal company to transfer their concession or the property to the United States in some form that would invade or violate the express prohibitions of the Wyse concession.

They knew that a plan had been put into practice that was given words fairly decipherable in a letter of Cromwell to the President of Panama, dated March 13, 1899, which I will insert in the appendix to my remarks. (See page 1 of appendix x 3.) I respectfully invite their careful consideration.

In the dates of these letters civil war was general and fierce in all the departments of Colombia, caused by the demands of the New Panama Canal Company.

The conspiracy of these men in the development of the flattering prospects of the company as these bold and seductive letters to the President and Mr. Hay show, were known at that period of time that the Government of Colombia is being pressed to take the course of which it has repeatedly protested in the interests that are controlling Colombia.

Conservative statesmen of Europe and Cromwell were not successfully hidden from the Colombian statesmen, and they were resented, especially by the Liberal party, which before was divided.

Sanclemente was then elected President and Marroquin Vice-President of Colombia by the Church party and were inaugurated in July, 1898.

The Congress of Colombia was then in session and continued until December 5 or 6, when they adjourned sine die and never met again.

The cause of that act of dissolution is given in the letter of Cromwell to Mr. Hay, dated New York, December 5, 1898—that I have just read to the Senate.

It is very remarkable that no official account of this important event has been sent to Congress despite that which is in Cromwell's letter which was sent to the Senate in a message of the President of February 20, 1902, in response to a resolution of the body of January 23, 1902.

Earlier in the day of December 5, 1898, Cromwell had sent to Mr. Hay the following telegram:

New York, December 5, 1898.

Are arranging for independencing the [illegible] Congress. Best prospects so far. [illegible] Congress [illegible] Government executives to boost here [illegible] from Bogota [illegible] satisfactorily.

WM. NELSON CROMWELL.
Counsel, New Panama Canal Company.

The proposition of the New Panama Canal Company through Mr. Hay for a prolongation of the concession was first put in printed in the appendix to my remarks. It is dated November 1, 1899.

In connection with it the canal company offered to pay the Colombian Government $10,000 French gold for six years' extension of time. Some had to pass.

It was while that proposition was pending in the Colombian Congress that Hernandez, Hurtado, and Cromwell were earnestly at work to decrease of the public interests, and concessions that the canal company held in Colombia to the United States.

It is not worth while to pause for expressing any denunciations of this double dealing of the Panama Canal Company with Colombia. The bare statement of the facts condemns the men, in every honest bosom, as being perfidious. The motive was too overpowering to be resisted by them. It was to unload their canal property given them by the old company, upon the United States.

Mr. Hart had informed our Government that the Congress of Colombia, after rejecting the proposed extension of the Wyse concession and declaring the office of President vacant, had adjourned sine die.

To meet this and to falsify the facts, Cromwell, in a letter to Mr. Hay, dated December 21, 1898, says:

Messrs. Sullivan & Cromwell to Mr. Hay.

NEW YORK, December 21, 1898.

MY DEAR SIR: Further to my letter of December 5, one paragraph of which was [illegible] at Bogota [illegible] I now have to say that we have [illegible] Government executives and of ourselves that power to grant such concession is vested in the Government by the terms of the Hurtado-Hernandez contract [illegible] Government executives and of ourselves that power to grant such concession is vested in the Government by the terms of the Hurtado-Hernandez contract [illegible] Government executives and of ourselves that power to grant such concession is vested in the Government by the terms of the Hurtado-Hernandez contract [illegible]

Faithfully, yours,

WM. NELSON CROMWELL.

He says that the official minutes of the House of Representatives disclose that the bill concerning the extension of the concession of the New Panama Canal Company was not acted on for the lack of time. If any such minutes are on the records of that House of Representatives that statement is false as to the course of the defeat of the French offer of six years. It was reported by Congress and when Sanclemente gave it out that he would accept the money and make a decree granting the prolongation of the concession, the Congress stigmatized it as a high misdemeanor, deposed the President, and dissolved the Congress.

This was Cromwell's [illegible] and he knew it. He could not expect the United States to intervene and take over a concession that had only five years to run, for it would be impossible to comply into that period in that length of time. If the time could be extended the future was lost. Therefore, Cromwell, in his letter to Mr. Hay on the 5th of December, says:

Our company has not the least assurance nor expectation regarding any prorogation of its concessions it may consider necessary in the future.

And in his letter of the 21st of December he says:

It is the opinion of the Government executives and of ourselves that the power to grant such concession is vested in the Government by the terms of the Hurtado-Hernandez contract [illegible] Government executives and of ourselves that the power to grant such concession is vested in the Government by the terms of the Hurtado-Hernandez contract [illegible] apprehension.

All this was urged to secure our Government to the threatened unlawful purchase of the concession of the canal company that was completed on the 28th of April, 1900, by the decree of Sanclemente, in despite of its rejection by the Congress of Colombia and the great convulsion that followed.

Soon after the Congress dissolved, after having expelled Sanclemente from office as President, civil war began in several of the Departments, and he seized the reins of Government as dictator and declared the entire Republic in a state of siege.

On the 23d day of April, 1900, the Liberal party issued its manifesto declaring the causes of war, and especially mentioned this deal with the New Panama Canal Company as a violation of the constitution and laws of Colombia, declaring the prolongation of the Wyse concession as a felony and warning the nations against acting upon it.

Sanclemente, on the 28th day of April, 1900, made a decree accepting the $10,000 had offered for the extension from 1904 to 1910 and granting the extension. No act of arbitrary power was ever more audacious or corrupt.

It was the insistence of the Liberals that this prolongation was void that caused the people of Colombia to resent the fact that Marroquin, without the consent of Congress, had negotiated the Hay-Herran treaty to dispose of the territory of Panama. M. Lucien Varilla admits the fact.

The dispatches of Mr. Beaupre show that the people were violently opposed to the Hay-Herran treaty before the Congress met in June, 1903, and before they had accurate knowledge of its provisions.

They knew the despotic conduct of Sanclemente in prolonging the concession, and they resented it.

The civil war thus precipitated upon Colombia was a fearful ordeal of slaughter and destruction.

Marroquin succeeded Sanclemente in the Presidency soon after he had decreed the prolongation of the concessions, and prosecuted the civil war with terrible losses, but with relentless vigor.

Active hostilities reached Panama in the winter of 1901–2 and raged heavily until November, 1902. Herrera, the really victorious leader of the Liberals, had Panama and Colon in easy reach of subjection, and was prevented by the active interference of the United States. The message of the President to the Senate on the 19th of March, 1902, leaves no doubt on that point.

"The stars in their courses," on our flag, "fought" for Marroquin, saved him his office, and made possible the ratification of the Hay Herran treaty, that had been negotiated while the civil war was fagrant and while he was dictator of Colombia.

The capitulation of the victorious Herrera, signed on the 21st of November, 1902, stipulated for the election of a Congress for the consideration of the negotiations relating to the Panama Canal. Thus Cromwell, who was a participant if not overseeing, in conducting these negotiations, had the Panama Canal Company placed in the front of the procession of events, having a trail of blood and desolation in his wake.

Nothing could be more clearly established by a comparison of known facts than the fact that the civil war in Colombia was precipitated by the demand of the New Panama Canal Company for a prolongation of the Wyse concession from 1903 to 1904, coupled with the $10,000,000 paid to Sanclemente, and the rejection of that demand by the Congress of Colombia.

Failure of the New Panama Canal Company had the power to prevent that war by complying to the laws and constitution of Colombia and to the vote of the Congress on the proposition of their offer. They preferred civil disorder and the destruction of blood and the desolation of Colombia rather than that the Panama Canal Company should comply with its written obligation to complete the Panama Canal by the 30th of October, 1904, or else forfeit its charter under the terms of their agreement, which was enacted into a statute of that Republic.

If there had been any honest purpose to complete the canal according to contract, Colombia, having already extended the time for twelve years, would have granted any reasonable time for completion.

The French engineers have been engaged for twenty-four years. It is work, and only claim now that two-fifths of it is actually finished. No possible complaint can be made that Colombia has been insincere in extending the Wyse concession.

There was no honest purpose to complete the canal, and no effort by the New Panama Canal Company was made to obtain or secure the extension for that purpose, and at the very time Mr. Hart, the minister of the canal company at Bogota, was trying to get the extension from 1904 to 1910 Cromwell was in Washington trying to induce the United States to take it over.

The Hay-Varilla treaty requires the United States to purchase the New Panama canal company. The [illegible] pledged itself to France that it should be confirmed and protected.

Thus Cromwell again heads the procession of events, and our banners in that august movement have "submission to fraud" for their motto, and flaunt our insult to the Liberals, living and dead, who fought this outrage for more than three years with heroic sufferings in Colombia.

In the present situation, as in that of 1898, the Panama Canal Company, whose whole history is frescoed with fraud and is a mere series of broken contracts that it never meant to keep, again threats itself into our treaty relations and is compelling the Senate to enact a supreme law of the United States that a "contemplated purchase" of its alleged property and claims shall be made by the United States and shall be "consummated" before we can get from Panama all that lawfully appertains to the canal zone, for which we are to pay [illegible].

The present intrusion of the Panama Canal Company into our affairs, in the location and construction of a canal, is offensive and indefensible in the highest sense and even in the lowest sense.

In the highest sense it comes with the pledged support of Panama, given directly to France, that she has the treaty right, derived from Panama, to interfere with the terms and conditions on which the United States shall construct a canal at Panama. In the lowest sense it can be truly said that no nation was ever compelled by its own rulers to stoop so low.

There can be no possible mistake on this point or as to the facts. For they are official and of record.

Even those who shut their eyes to prevent seeing these facts are still compelled to feel them. They feel that there is in this treaty an atmosphere of national degradation at which the self-respect of the people revolts.

When they come to understand that it is a movement prompted by mercenary motive, that Panama never would have revolted against Colombia except to profit by the trade and increased price of property owned and controlled by a few wealthy men through the construction of a canal, and that the President would not have encouraged and assisted them except for the "contemplated" glory of being the founder of a canal and his view of the necessity of that location for it, the people will feel, and will not be slow to say, that this treaty is dishonoring to the country.

The New Panama Canal Company has never done an honest day's work toward the completion of the canal. As it has dug and removed earth from the Culebra Cut it has suffered the 20 miles dug by the old company between Bohio and Colon and the 7 miles between Miraflores and the Bay of Panama to silt up until an Indian canoe can not cross it at many places.

What work has been done was to keep alive the concessions in the hope of disposing of the property to the United States that was given to them by the old company and to escape forfeiture at the hands of Colombia.

It is a disgrace to our country that time will not efface and no financial success will ever excuse that we permitted the government to be controlled by such men and for such purposes into the ratification of article 22 of the Hay-Varilla treaty.

This is the highest sense in which the transaction will be considered by those who will read the history and [illegible] may find excuse for us in the magnitude of the subject we are dealing with.

When they come to examine our work, in the lower sense of a voluntary and preferential advantage and profit extended by the United States to corporations who have produced their own receipt of the property they sell to us and will under a vast profit from the transaction we have placed the stain and disgrace on our records that establish their guilt—the people will not and should not be merciful in their censures.

What we should do in this matter is to strike out article 22 from the treaty and repurchase the [illegible] and pay for it the price established in the treaty. The property will come to us free and clear with every just and legal claim [illegible] in law or equity when Panama [illegible] and enforce the [illegible] the New Panama Canal Company [illegible] Panama Railroad Company is, under the laws of one of the States of the Union.

At the same time we will require that company to honestly keep and perform its [illegible]. If any man can object to this as being [illegible] on the grounds of such correction.

In [illegible] our Government [illegible] from these transactions of the most extraordinary and hideous character of conspiracy imposed on us by Panama—our creature and ward [illegible] the arms of its nurse—we will in some measure escape the [illegible] of sustaining a conspiracy against Colombia, in which the agents at Panama of the New Panama Canal Company were the local leaders, and Bunau-Varilla was the chief conspirator. I am too anxious that the Senate should [illegible] ating attitude to further [illegible] we would be driven.

It is better not to have described such a condition of [illegible] we shall have the good fortune to escape it. If the President will give the Senate the information we ask [illegible] making the contemplated purchase of the [illegible] mentioned in article 22 of the Hay-Varilla treaty, it may be that it will result in the elimination of the New Panama Canal Company from that treaty and the relief of our people from forced contact with the worst productions of the worst of scandals, that will cause all France to shudder at the name of Panama, and the world to look with astonishment at our unworthy associates in this business.

I will not speak now of the second war with Colombia that the New Panama Canal Company has provoked, under the guidance of the New York lawyer, as the surest way to realize its profits on the investment of $10,000,000 in its capital stock.

Most likely we will have leisure to record of his leadership in the diplomacy that has brought about those conditions, and he will have leisure for the enjoyment of his fee that grows with the increase of our national distress and the destroying annihilation of Colombia; but I protest in the name of civilization that the Senate should not voluntarily and [illegible] Cromwell in his prosecution of a second war in Colombia to induce him to increase his bill of costs for such indignities.

I will not now discuss other parts of the Hay-Varilla treaty that are not within the purview of the resolution before the Senate. I will, however, as in duty bound, refer to the resentment spirit of the people with whom we are dealing in this matter.

There are not, all told, as many as 5 per cent of the inhabitants of Panama—and that is the outside limit of the people in that country—who can be rated as being qualified for self-government or the actual duties of citizenship in a free and independent republic.

Amendments have been recommended to be made to this treaty by the Committee on Foreign Relations [illegible] have been so recommended but for the fact that they are indispensable to the future safety of our rights and the performance of our duties in Panama.

I have been notified that a motion to withdraw those amendments will be made, not because they are objectionable to Panama, but because the treaty if it is sent to the constitutional convention now sitting at Panama for the acceptance of any amendments to it will cause the possible rejection of some of its features or will create dissension in that body.

Such apprehensions, so readily yielded to, admonish us that the people we are dealing with must be approached with open avowals of our intentions and purposes in everything that relates to the government of a canal zone and the people living in its immediate neighborhood. And we must go there prepared to enforce our rights.

If the warmed viper, just but half from the egg, stung its benefactor to warn us of its power to sting, we may well consider what will occur when swarms of them will be gathered in Panama from the lowest degree of all the peoples of the earth.

I have mentioned, through the kind indulgence of the Senate on this and other occasions, to state my views on most of the various questions that have arisen during nearly two years this great project has been before Congress and the people for discussion.

I do not recall any fact I have stated, except upon the highest authority, or any measure I have advocated that did not seem to be necessary for the advancement of the great result the people are so anxious to reach. The growth and expansion of our views in the atmosphere of constant discussion as to the best measures of our duty and of the great policy to be accomplished has, in my judgment, repaid all the delay and all the labor expended in our preliminary work. We do not seem yet to grasp the full scope of the great undertaking that is before us, or to be ready to lay hold of the possibilities of the future with the first hand of earth.

In such a work there can be no room for mistakes to any people, or for the humiliation of any person or company, or for the least real ground of discontent, or for more political or legislative hesitation.

I have gone farther than any of my colleagues in the Senate in the discussion of amendments to the Hay-Pauncefote treaty that are necessary and appropriate for the actual work of constructing and operating an isthmian canal, yet I reach out for nothing that is not lawful.

Any unnecessary appeal to anybody, for political or other reasons, that relies upon the time-honored maxim that the end justifies the means has no weight with any just man, nor will it make any impression on the people who have so long honored me with their confidence.

The South still holds its heroic attitude as a proud people, unbent by disasters and unawed by unnecessary humiliation. It still wears its laurels of honor undefiled over its bosom, guarded with the love and fear of God.

The people of the old South, who stand for its past glory and will forever stand as the model of its future character, are true to their history to-day, as they are true to the blood in their veins.

That tide of life still flows as a benediction to the world, and will always flow uncorrupted through all the hearts that have claimed or will ever rightfully claim a share in the honorable heritage. It was bestowed on us by other hearts that are now still and pulseless. Yet their living examples, like the light that is shut out by night, but comes again to-morrow—still live and rules their day in supreme power.

The people of the South will pray and forgive, but will not forget, such as can find excuse in their fears for a moment disposed for the acceptance of gifts that are stained with fraud and are gathered from the wreck of the Constitution, the statutes enacted by Congress, and the laws of nations.

Whatever we have done in the most perilous actions of our people has been done in the effort to preserve rights that were guaranteed to us in the Constitution and by the laws of the land, and no true Southern heart repents or will ever repent the cost.

We can not, if we would, now convince those who live or those who will live that it is honorable or just or reputable to assist any man who may be President in the violation of the Constitution or the laws of the land.

We can not mark down the people of the South to the figure, in commercial politics, that accepts a favor of any party or any man as the price of its support of men who disregard laws and trample the rights of the weak under foot, or of measures that are wrong and dishonorable. We have never been robbers or faith breakers, and we will not lend our assistance to those who are.

There is nothing in this entire transaction that is complained of by the President, or that could be rationally complained of, besides the loss of an apparently good bargain. Take from the situation as it is described by the President in his annual message to Congress the supposed advantage of the bargain we were trying to make with Colombia and failed to complete, and there is nothing to justify his movement against Colombia, as it is stated in that message, or in any utterance from the Department of State. It is simply because we were ignorant of the advantages we failed to obtain in the Hay-Herran treaty.

Our children and our children's children will scorn the thought that any sentiment but that of constitutional duty could be created in our behalf by such unworthy considerations.

PANAMA CANAL.

Message from the President of the United States, transmitting a convention between the United States and the Republic of Panama for the construction of a ship canal to connect the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, signed on November 18, 1903; ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

To the Senate:

[illegible] of the Senate [illegible] of America and the Minister of Panama [illegible] the waters of the Atlantic [illegible] I [illegible] from the Secretary of State submitting the convention for my consideration.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, December 7, 1903.

The PRESIDENT:

The undersigned, Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President, for the consideration which he may bestow upon it, a convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama, signed at this capital on November 18, 1903.

JOHN HAY.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 19, 1903.

CONVENTION.

The United States [illegible] the Republic of Panama being desirous [illegible] to insure the construction of a ship canal to connect the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, the President of the United States has [illegible] Minister Plenipotentiary of the Republic of Panama, duly authorized to conclude a convention for the purpose, and the said parties have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

The United States guarantees and will maintain the independence of the Republic of Panama.

ARTICLE II.

The Republic of Panama grants to the United States in perpetuity the use, occupation, and control of a zone of land and land under water for the construction, maintenance, operation, sanitation, and protection of said canal of the width of ten miles extending to the distance of five miles on each side of the canal to be constructed by the said Government of the United States, the said zone beginning in the Caribbean Sea three marine miles from mean low water mark and extending across the Isthmus of Panama into the Pacific ocean to the distance of three marine miles from mean low water mark, with the exceptions below stated, and with the powers and authorities hereinafter granted, and for the purpose of opening, maintaining, and protecting the said canal, and for the purpose of providing lands for the use of the employees and their families, and for the purpose of providing a place for the seat of government of the Republic of Panama, the Republic of Panama grants to the United States in perpetuity the use, occupation, and control of the islands in the Pacific ocean, named Perico, Naos, Culebra, and Flamenco, and of the islands in the Bay of Panama, named Perico, Naos, Culebra, and Flamenco.

ARTICLE III.

The Republic of Panama grants to the United States all the rights, power, and authority within the zone mentioned and described in Article II of this convention and within the islands mentioned and described in Article II of this convention which the United States would possess and exercise if it were the sovereign of the territory within which said islands are located to the exclusion of the exercise by the Republic of Panama of any such sovereign rights, power, or authority.

ARTICLE IV.

As rights subsidiary to the grant of territory made to the Republic of Panama herein in perpetuity for the purpose of the canal, the Republic of Panama grants to the United States in perpetuity the right to use all the waters necessary for the operation of the canal, and for other works pertaining to the canal, which may be found in the territory adjacent to the line of the canal, and for the purpose of the construction, maintenance, operation, sanitation, and protection of the said canal.

ARTICLE V.

The Republic of Panama grants to the United States in perpetuity a monopoly for the construction, maintenance, and operation of any system of communication by means of canal or railroad across its territory between the Caribbean Sea and the Pacific ocean.

ARTICLE VI.

The grants herein contained shall in no manner invalidate the titles or rights of private land holders or owners of private property in the said zone or islands at the time of the signature of this treaty, nor shall they impair the rights in any way possessed by the inhabitants of the said zone or islands, except as may be necessary for the control, operation, sanitation, and protection of the said canal, and the works, ports, and buildings connected therewith, and such as may be necessary for the use of the said canal and its auxiliaries, and such as may be granted to the United States in the exercise of the rights herein granted or conferred, which shall be exercised with the least possible inconvenience to the inhabitants of the said zone or islands, and which shall not include the right to levy taxes or other similar impositions within the said zone or islands, and which shall not include the right to place customs houses or other establishments for the collection of customs duties on the navigable waters within the said zone or islands, which said waters shall be free to the vessels of the Republic of Panama engaged in the business of navigation between the interior parts of the Republic of Panama when such vessels are not engaged in the business of navigation between ports of the United States and ports in the interior of the Republic of Panama, and which said waters shall be free to the vessels of the United States in which case the rights of the United States shall be superior.

All damages caused to the owners of private lands or private property of any kind by the operations of the United States in the exercise of the rights granted by this convention, or by the construction, maintenance, operation, sanitation, and protection of said canal, or of the works, ports, and buildings connected therewith, and such as may be necessary for the use of said canal and its auxiliaries, and such as may be granted to the United States in the exercise of the rights herein granted or conferred, shall be paid for by the United States, which shall be the only party to pay for the same, and to the end that the compensation to be paid may be adjusted and ascertained, the amount of damages caused by the operations of the United States in the territory of the Republic of Panama, which are to be paid for by the United States, shall be ascertained and established by a commission composed of two persons, one of whom shall be appointed by the President of the Republic of Panama and the other by the President of the United States, and in case they shall not agree they shall jointly select a third, and the decision of any two of the commissioners shall be final and conclusive; and it is hereby agreed that no claim for compensation for such damages shall be allowed or paid for damages caused by the exercise of any of the rights granted to the United States in accordance with the provisions of this convention, or by the construction, maintenance, operation, sanitation, and protection of said canal, or of the works, ports, and buildings connected therewith, and such as may be necessary for the use of said canal and its auxiliaries, and such as may be granted to the United States in the exercise of the rights herein granted or conferred, except such as may be based upon the ownership of private property in land or water within the territory adjacent to the line of said canal, or upon injuries to such property by the actual diversion of the waters of said canal from their ordinary channels, or by the actual overflow of such property by the waters of said canal, or by the actual taking of such property by the United States for the purposes of said canal, and such as may be based upon the ownership of such property in land or water, and such as may be based upon injuries to such property by such actual diversion, overflow, or taking, and such as may be based upon injuries to such property by the construction, maintenance, operation, sanitation, and protection of said canal, and such as may be based upon injuries to such property by the exercise of any of the rights granted to the United States in accordance with the provisions of this convention, or [illegible] Canal Company, the Panama Railroad Company, and the New Panama Canal Company.

[illegible] rights and property shall be [illegible]

ARTICLE XXIV.

If it should become necessary at any time for the Government of France to [illegible] or to suspend forth[illegible]

ARTICLE XXV.

No change either in the [illegible] of the Republic of Panama [illegible] into any other [illegible] for the transitor of the property and for the [illegible] which the company may think fit under the authority of this stockholders' [illegible]

ARTICLE XXVI.

This convention when signed by [illegible] of the contracting parties [illegible] of November, in the year of our Lord, 1903.

M. LAMPRE. [illegible] the right to do it (that is what we [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. I do not see that. They can, indeed.

The CHAIRMAN. [illegible] their right upon the action of your stockholders [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. [illegible] with the liquidator for the benefit of the [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

M. LAMPRE. [illegible] Now, the action of the stockholders of the new company [illegible] any from that [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. [illegible] question itself, but you see I stated in the [illegible] are guided solely and only by our charter, and [illegible] make a transfer or [illegible] you to say that your charter did can[illegible]

[illegible] you were to construct this canal and [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. The liquidator has authority to relieve us from that contract, [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. That is the business of the court to decide, and the court has [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. I think you had better make that clear, because I do not [illegible] your company in [illegible] as I can.

Senator HANNA. At the meeting did the old stockholders take any part in [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. [illegible] What [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. [illegible] a New York company? [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. [illegible] Now you propose to transfer all of your [illegible] Government?

M. LAMPRE. [illegible] The general principle of law, as I under[illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; but [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. The French court.

Senator TURNER. What is the rank of the court? Is it a court of last resort or [illegible] decisions [illegible] review by other courts?

M. LAMPRE. It is the highest court.

Senator TURNER. A court of first instance?

M. LAMPRE. Exactly.

Senator TURNER. Then its judgment is subject to review if any stockholder [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. It might be; but I do not expect any trouble from that source.

Senator TURNER. Now, let me ask you this question: When you took this charter [illegible] from the liquidator, was it a contract to complete the canal [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. Yes; that was the contract.

Senator TURNER. And to turn over to the old stockholders 60 per cent of the [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. It was [illegible]

Senator TURNER. That was your contract?

M. LAMPRE. It was [illegible]

Senator TURNER. If the bondholders [illegible] 500,000,000 francs [illegible] would be [illegible] to turn over to the old stockholders [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. [illegible] the stockholders as I said—

Senator TURNER. [illegible] would be [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. That [illegible] of the stockholders.

Senator TURNER. Would they have a standing in some court to come in [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. Well, you know any claim may always be set forth, but I am convinced—

Senator TURNER. Is it not quite likely that they would urge a claim of that kind?

M. LAMPRE. It might happen, but I am convinced there would be no difficulty about it [illegible]

Senator TURNER. What right [illegible] court have to issue and enforce [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. [illegible] law [illegible] that when [illegible] interest [illegible] stockholders to the bondholders, have no right to get anything unless the bondholders are completely disinterested.

The CHAIRMAN. [illegible] and having failed the liquidator [illegible] Now what right [illegible] will cut these stockholders off [illegible] a decree?

M. LAMPRE. [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. Has the law given that right absolutely?

M. LAMPRE. Yes.

Senator TURNER. Without any compensation or consideration to them [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. Quite so.

The CHAIRMAN. Colombia, I learn from these papers, holds stock in the [illegible] company?

M. LAMPRE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The old company and the new?

M. LAMPRE. Not the old company, but new company; and that is 50,000 shares [illegible] making the entire stock of the new company [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. It holds that in its own right as a government?

M. LAMPRE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. How has French court power of [illegible] speak of, going to [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. The court [illegible] obtain [illegible] receive [illegible] Government has agreed as a high act of the [illegible] we [illegible] to do with the United States Government [illegible] The [illegible] passed upon by the representative of the Colombian Government [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. I gather your idea correctly, the Colombian Government [illegible] is a stockholder in the Panama Canal Company, has given [illegible] sovereign powers and has no other powers than those of any other stockholder?

M. LAMPRE. Its powers as a stockholder and the power derived from the [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. And she is subject to the courts of France to be disposed of as her interests in the stock as if she were a [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. [illegible] We [illegible] the courts of [illegible] and [illegible] to the stockholders' meeting. [illegible] representative [illegible] voting power to the company [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. Now, you state that as being the action of the Colombian Government?

M. LAMPRE. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Has that ever been communicated to the French Government?

M. LAMPRE. The French Government has nothing to do with it, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a matter of opinion which I will determine for myself. Has it ever been communicated to the Government of the United States?

M. LAMPRE. I do not know about that. No; I think not.

The CHAIRMAN. No; whether [illegible] as a sovereign or as a stockholder in this [illegible] Government [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. No; in my opinion [illegible] the Colombian Government [illegible] to the rights [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. What is this arbitration that you propose to have? What is it [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. The division of the amount we may get—only that.

The CHAIRMAN. What [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. Did you say that the court had passed on it?

M. LAMPRE. Yes; [illegible] special [illegible] authority to resort to an arbitration court upon the division of the property.

The CHAIRMAN. Has there been a judicial proceeding in that court?

M. LAMPRE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. When was that?

M. LAMPRE. August [illegible] ago. A month or two ago.

The CHAIRMAN. What [illegible] or $40,000,000?

M. LAMPRE. No; [illegible] It was found [illegible] templated [illegible] The United States. The other [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. The liquidator might arbitrate under the laws of France as [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. As to the [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. Let me get an [illegible] please. The liquidator might [illegible] the laws of France as to [illegible] any trade or transaction with the United States out of the [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. That is the [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. [illegible] the general order of the court?

M. LAMPRE. If [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. Your proposition to sell for $40,000,000 has not, I understand, been made [illegible] of the court?

M. LAMPRE. No; it has been [illegible] on by the stockholders' meeting and [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. So the transaction, as you [illegible] I understand it [illegible] amount [illegible] to be received from the United States on a sale of the property [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. Exactly so.

The CHAIRMAN. And that was done when?

M. LAMPRE. The decree of the court [illegible] and [illegible] August 2, [illegible] the [illegible] Canal Commission.

The CHAIRMAN. Why were [illegible] to that last agreement?

M. LAMPRE. [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. What [illegible] the liquidator?

M. LAMPRE. [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. [illegible] was a party of that agreement?

M. LAMPRE. I believe [illegible] happen [illegible] his country [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. Now, if I understand [illegible] liquidator [illegible] the purpose of [illegible] received [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. Now, I [illegible] the agreement [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. Has this last agreement been assented to by any tribunal?

M. LAMPRE. [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. Has this particular act been assented to [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. It has been assented to. Before it was made it was as[illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. It could not have been assented to before it was made.

M. LAMPRE. Yes, [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. [illegible] there was no occasion for that, as the liquidator has [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. [illegible] I understood you to say that the court had authorized [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. [illegible] is your interpretation of it, but—

M. LAMPRE. It is a fact. I beg your pardon; it is quite a fact.

The CHAIRMAN. The authorization is based upon an entirely different set of [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. The court has given authority to the liquidator to enter into [illegible] the liquidator has entered into the agreement.

The CHAIRMAN. [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. To present to an arbitration court as to the division of the amount [illegible] be [illegible] the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. And [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. [illegible] Legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The object of the [illegible] company, [illegible] according to all of its professions here, was to build and complete that canal?

M. LAMPRE. It was.

The CHAIRMAN. And that the present object?

M. LAMPRE. It is [illegible] at the present time, the object is the [illegible] transfer to the United States. That is what we are [illegible] at the present time; but the [illegible] the company stands.

The CHAIRMAN. You [illegible] Now, [illegible] when [illegible] in the form the new company [illegible] of the old company really [illegible] the property by which [illegible] to sell it to somebody else?

M. LAMPRE. No, sir; the honest, clear, straightforward, and clean purpose was to [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. The agreement, then, between the liquidator and the new company, [illegible] of the court transferring the property to them, was for that purpose, was it not?

M. LAMPRE. Yes, for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. Was there any purpose at that time, either expressed or implied or understood, that the new company was formed for the purpose of getting load of that property to sell it to somebody else?

court. It would [illegible] that [illegible] to the justice, the fair [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. Of course the court thought it fair when it gave the authority [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. Were [illegible] at the time the court authorized [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. No, sir; because the liquidator is the representative [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. Then the liquidator had notice of the application for [illegible] that authority. He was the man who [illegible] of liquidator of the old company, [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. [illegible] are that the names of the arbitrators have been selected. I should like to know how many there [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. There are four of them, who are to appoint a fifth as president. The names are the highest legal authorities in the court. One of [illegible] nt between the liquidator [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. Oh, not a majority. [illegible] There would be under your law a review of the decision [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. [illegible] the examination, if the other members [illegible] Mr. Chairman, there is one question on this [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. [illegible] Louisiana. But in order to have binding force it must [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. [illegible] accepted?

M. LAMPRE. [illegible] He has it now. It has been [illegible] titled under [illegible]

Senator TURNER. How much money has the new company put into this [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. At the present time?

The CHAIRMAN. [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. I [illegible] to examine M. Lampre on that point. Do you [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. How much money has the company actually [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. [illegible] I do not know what the percentage will be.

The CHAIRMAN. [illegible] a matter for the arbitrators?

M. LAMPRE. [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. The Government of Colombia, as you stated, was one of [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. [illegible] meeting, appeared every time.

M. LAMPRE. [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. Does that representative enter into the stockholders' [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. Yes, to [illegible] present.

The CHAIRMAN. [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. [illegible] appointed by the Colombian Government to [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. [illegible] at every [illegible] meeting the Colombian [illegible] to [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. [illegible] Colombian Government is not a stockholder [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. You say the Colombian Government is [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. [illegible] that you [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Has that agent a voice in the [illegible]

M. LAMPRE. No.

M LAMPRE. I guess we have. It is printed in the report of the Commission.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all the [illegible] authority that you have [illegible]

M LAMPRE. At the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. That is as deep into the subject as Colombia has ever [illegible]

M LAMPRE. [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. [illegible]

M LAMPRE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You are aware of the contents of that last proposition, [illegible] by M [illegible]

M LAMPRE. I [illegible] if you please, or to [illegible]

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 540) providing for an additional officer in the district of Chicago, in the collection district of Indiana and Illinois; and

A bill (S. 2795) to amend an act entitled "An act for the regulation of the practice of dentistry in the District of Columbia, and for the protection of the people from empiricism in relation thereto," approved [illegible]

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 10418) to ratify and [illegible] an agreement with the Sioux tribe of Indians, on the Rosebud Reservation, in South Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect; and

A bill (H. R. 10954) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

RELATIONS WITH COLOMBIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being the resolution submitted by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution No. 82, by Mr. BACON, favoring the negotiation by the President of a treaty with Colombia for the adjustment of all differences between the United States and that country growing out of the recent revolution in Panama.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, I had intended earlier in the day to address the Senate upon the Panama question, but the hour is so far advanced that I shall defer my remarks until tomorrow or some other more convenient occasion.

Mr. CULLOM. Does the Senator desire to retain the floor for that purpose?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I do not particularly desire to do so. I have no doubt I can arrange to get the floor in the morning. If there is any question about that, however, I will take it now.

Mr. CULLOM. I was going to suggest that there are several Senators who desire to speak to-morrow, and I should have been glad if the Senator could have gone on this evening.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Then I will raise the floor now, and submit what I desire to say to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] is the unfinished business and would not come up until 2 o'clock, but by request it can be taken up immediately after the routine morning business.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Then I will say that to-morrow, after the routine morning business, I shall take the floor.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER DAM AT SAUK RAPIDS, MINN.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2935) authorizing the building of a dam across the Mississippi River at or near the village of Sauk Rapids, Benton County, Minn.

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 2, in section 1, line 16, after the words "That the," to insert "dam shall be so constructed that the" in line 18, after the word "navigation," to insert "and provided further, That suitable fishways to be approved by the United States Fish Commission, shall be constructed and maintained at said dam by the Sauk Rapids Water Power Company, its successors or assigns," so as to make the section read:

That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Sauk Rapids Water Power Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Minnesota, its successors and assigns, to build a dam across the Mississippi River at or near the village of Sauk Rapids, Benton County, Minnesota, which dam is to be constructed in such place and manner and conforming in such manner as may be approved by the Secretary of War, and the consent of Congress is also hereby granted to the said Sauk Rapids Water Power Company, its successors and assigns, to use and occupy such lands of the United States as may be necessary for the construction, maintenance, and operation of said dam and its appurtenant works, which shall be considered a post route and a lawful highway under the jurisdiction of the United States: Provided, That such lands shall be used and occupied only for such purposes as shall be approved by the Secretary of War, and upon such other conditions as he may prescribe: Provided, That the right of way herein granted shall not be exercised until the plans and specifications of said dam and its appurtenant works shall have been approved by the Secretary of War, and upon such other conditions as he may prescribe: Provided, That the right of way herein granted shall not be exercised until the Sauk Rapids Water Power Company, its successors or assigns, shall have paid to the owners of the lands and property taken and damaged by the construction of said dam such sum as may be determined

On motion of Mr. BURKE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE OF CONNELL V. HOWELL.

Mr. McLAIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to present the report of the minority of the Committee on Elections No. 3 in the case of William Connell, v. George Howell, from the Tenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, and ask that the same be printed.

The SPEAKER. It will be referred to the House Calendar.

AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE COMMISSION.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the minority of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries may file the views of the minority on the bill H. R. 7056, to create a commission to consider and report legislation for the development of the American merchant marine, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the minority of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries may present its views on the bill H. R. 7056. Is there no objection?

There was no objection.

TO REGULATE PRACTICE OF DENTISTRY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 2795) to amend an act for the regulation of the practice of dentistry in the District of Columbia, and for the protection of the people from empiricism in relation thereto, and ask unanimous consent that a similar House bill (H. R. 8627) lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

[illegible]

The bill was considered and read a third time.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask if it is now in order to offer an amendment to this bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the bill is not amendable at this time.

Mr. GRIGGS. Then I ask unanimous consent to offer the amendment which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. RODEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK], if the bill applies to anything except the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GRIGGS] for the presentation of an amendment?

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield for the reading of the proposed amendment, not for its being offered, until I know what it is. I want to say that all of the dentists in the District have come together and agreed on this proposition, so that there is no opposition to it whatever.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the amendment may be read for the information of the House.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding at the conclusion of the bill the following:

"And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall apply to students who are regularly matriculated in dental colleges in the District of Columbia, who at the time of such matriculation are pursuing a four-years' course of study, the same to be issued to such students upon graduation and without examination as to qualifications, upon the payment of the certificate fee."

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I object to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. RODEY. Mr. Speaker, before that question is taken I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be read again for information. I am informed that it applies to the Territories as well as to the District of Columbia, and I have not yet heard it read. I see no objection to it so far as the Territory of New Mexico is concerned.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the bill will be again reported.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again reported the bill.

The question being taken, the bill was passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Senate bill with provisions duplicating those of this bill will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

BONDS ON CONTRACTS.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask for consideration of the bill (H. R. 7869) in relation to bonds on contracts with the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

[illegible]

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I will state just what this bill proposes. Under the present law in the District of Columbia a contractor is required to put up a bond for the full amount of his contract, and in cases of street improvements the bond runs for five years. The contractor gets the proceeds from the bond and pays for this five-year bond, and then at the expiration of the bond for the work. The Commissioners recommend that the bond in such cases may be reduced to 25 per cent of the gross amount of the contract, which will amply secure the District and save a good deal of money. That is all that the measure does.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

JURISDICTION OF RESERVATION NO. 32.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8688) to transfer jurisdiction of reservation No. 32 in the city of Washington, D. C.

The bill was read, as follows:

[illegible]

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, this bill refers to the little flat-iron piece or block of ground immediately in front of the site for the new home economical building on Pennsylvania avenue. The bill gives the Commissioners, instead of the War Department, control of that block—transfers the jurisdiction to the Commissioners of the District.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

REMOVAL OF SNOW AND ICE FROM SIDEWALKS.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8692) to provide for the removal of snow and ice from the sidewalks of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

[illegible]

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, [illegible] to cause such snow to be removed from the paved sidewalk in front of such premises, and to cause the same to be removed therefrom, [illegible] of improved streets and places of intersection of streets with improved sidewalks, [illegible] such paved sidewalks or crosswalks [illegible] of intersection of streets with improved sidewalks to be sprinkled with sand, gravel, or other such material.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the owner or owners of every vacant or unimproved lot in the District of Columbia fronting or abutting upon a paved walk, within the first four hours of daylight after the ceasing of any fall of snow, as set forth in section 1 hereof, to cause such snow to be removed from the paved sidewalk in front of such lot, or lots in the same manner and to the same extent, and subject to the same penalty as provided in said section, and in the event any snow that may have fallen shall, before its removal, become so compacted by freezing or otherwise that it can not be removed without great difficulty, or if at any time we shall have formed on any such sidewalk by the freezing of rain, hail, melted snow, or in any other manner, it shall be the duty of such owner or owners, within the first four hours of daylight thereafter, to sprinkle or cause such frozen snow or ice, to the extent aforesaid, to be sprinkled with sand or sawdust or other such substance, and for failure so to do such owner or owners shall be subject to the same penalty provided in sec. 1 of this act.

SEC. 4. That in the event of the failure of any such owner or owners of any vacant or unimproved lot to cause the snow or ice to be removed or to cause the same to be properly sprinkled as herein provided, it shall be the duty of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, as soon as practicable after the hours prescribed for the removal or sprinkling thereof, to cause the same to be removed or sprinkled, as the case may be, and the cost of such work, when performed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, shall be a lien against the property so improved or upon which such snow or ice shall have fallen, and shall be collected by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, as taxes are collected in said District, and when so collected the same shall be paid into the treasury of the District of Columbia to the credit of the appropriation for the expenses of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year in which the work is performed, and the amount so paid shall be credited to the owner or owners of such lot, and the same shall be charged against the property so improved or upon which such snow or ice shall have fallen, and such property shall be subject to the same penalty for the collection of such charge as for the collection of other taxes in said District; and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the enforcement of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 5. That all prosecutions under this act shall be in the police court of the District of Columbia, in the name of said District, and by its attorney [illegible]

SEC. 6. That [illegible] in the District of Columbia," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The amendments reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia were read, as follows:

[illegible] in the words "not more than" and insert [illegible]

[illegible] "strike out the words 'not exceeding' and insert in lieu thereof the word "of," and insert after the word "dollars" in said line, the [illegible]

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask a vote on these amendments of the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BABCOCK. I offer the amendments which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

[illegible] "ground" strike out the word "in," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "within the fire limits of;" [illegible] the word "in," and insert [illegible] "within the fire limits."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3479. An act making provision for conveying in fee certain public grounds in the city of St. Augustine, Fla., for school purposes; and

S. R. 84. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point Alfonso Zelaya, of Nicaragua.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 98. Joint resolution to provide for the removal of snow and ice from the streets, cross walks, and gutters of the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to Senate concurrent resolution No. 20.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

House concurrent resolution No. 38.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the thanks of Congress be given to the people of Washington for the use of the Memorial Continental Hall, the necessary and expense.

Resolved, That the statue be accepted, to remain in the National Statuary Hall, in the Capitol of the nation, and that a copy of these resolutions, signed by the presiding officers of the House of Representatives and Senate, be forwarded to his excellency the governor of the State of Wisconsin.

INSANE PERSONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8692) to authorize the apprehension and detention of insane persons in the District of Columbia and providing for their temporary commitment in the Government Hospital for the Insane, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

[illegible]

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, [illegible] to be paid into the treasury of the District of Columbia to the credit of the appropriation for the expenses of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year in which the work is performed, and the amount so paid shall be credited to the owner or owners of such lot, and the same shall be charged against the property so improved or upon which such snow or ice shall have fallen, and such property shall be subject to the same penalty for the collection of such charge as for the collection of other taxes in said District; and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the enforcement of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. That all prosecutions under this act shall be in the police court of the District of Columbia, in the name of said District, and by its attorney [illegible]

SEC. 4. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may authorize the temporary commitment and care of the insane mentioned herein pursuant to [illegible] and shall be apprehended and detained as provided in sections 1 and 2 of this act, for a period of time not exceeding twenty days in any other hospital in said District which in the opinion of the board of health of said District is properly constructed and equipped for the reception and care of such persons and the officers in charge of which, for the time being, are willing to receive such persons pending the temporary commitment or the formal commitment of such persons as provided by law, [illegible] the insane of the mind, or insane and dangerous, or any insane person or persons found insane and unprotected under sections 1 and 2 of this act may be detained in any private station or house of detention in said District pending the completion of arrangements for such temporary detention in the Government Hospital for the Insane or any other hospital or asylum, and such persons may be committed to the Government Hospital for the Insane or any other hospital or asylum in the manner provided by law in case of or shall be placed in the hospital for the insane in the Government Hospital for the Insane in accordance with the provisions of this act, in which the alleged insane person is to be confined, or who is professionally or officially connected therewith.

SEC. 6. That any person who makes an affidavit as required by section [illegible] shall be liable to an action for damages for [illegible] such detention or restraint of any other person in the District of Columbia without probable cause for believing such person to be insane, or of unsound mind, or any person who knowingly makes any false affidavit as to the sanity or insanity of any other person shall pay [illegible] to be fined not more than [illegible] or imprisoned not more than [illegible] years, or both.

SEC. 7. That [illegible] with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby repealed.

The amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia was read, as follows:

On page 5, line 18, insert, after the word "residents," the following: "or in case of arrest, as provided in section 1."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Speaker, before the question is put, I should like to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK]. Is there any provision in this bill for submitting to a jury the question of sanity in these cases?

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH], the chairman of the judicial branch of our committee, that he may answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. PEARRE. I should like to know whether there is in this bill any provision for submitting the question of sanity in these cases to a jury for its determination.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. No, sir.

Mr. PEARRE. Does not the gentleman think that, following the practice of almost all the States, it would be wise to provide that, at least in the last resort, there should be a reference of the matter to the judgment of a jury?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. This is only a temporary matter.

Mr. PEARRE. Temporary? Does not the bill provide that upon the simple affidavit of two physicians a man may be confined in an insane asylum—for how long? Is there any limitation as to the time?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Not exceeding thirty days.

Mr. PEARRE. Then what is to be done with him?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Then he has a trial in the ordinary way.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will say to the gentleman that the object of this bill is particularly to provide for incipient insane persons, and that class of insane people who are found on the streets.

Mr. PEARRE. What is to be done with them eventually, under this bill?

Mr. BABCOCK. I understand that the usual course of law is proceeded with. Ordinarily it will not require thirty days, but if they had a press of business and a great number of cases it might be that long before a case could be reached. In the end they are brought before the court in the usual way for examination. There is nothing in this bill that interferes at all with an examination by a court or a jury or anything of that kind. It provides for the temporary work of the officers, and the gentleman understands that there is now no provision in the District of Columbia which covers that at all.

Mr. PEARRE. There ought to be.

Mr. BABCOCK. There is no provision for temporarily detaining even a violently insane person.

Mr. PEARRE. Under the gentleman's assurance that this provides for only a temporary detention, and does not contemplate a permanent detention of anyone—

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, no.

Mr. PEARRE. Under his assurance that it does not contemplate the permanent detention of the party charged with insanity, without examination by a jury, I will, of course, withdraw any objection. But it would be a very dangerous principle to permit a man alleged to be insane to be apprehended and permanently detained upon a mere affidavit.

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, certainly.

Mr. PEARRE. Or upon the ex parte statement of a physician.

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, certainly; the gentleman is entirely right.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, there is one provision in this bill that struck me as conferring quite extraordinary powers upon policemen. It is contained in the first section. As I understood it from the reading, it provides that a policeman may arrest and take into custody without warrant any person who is insane or of unsound mind, without regard to the question whether he is dangerous or violently insane. Does it not so provide?

Mr. BABCOCK. Under the police powers of the District a policeman has the right to arrest a drunken man without a warrant if the man is disorderly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. BABCOCK. If it is patent and clear that a man is insane, he may be dangerously insane, and the lives of other people may be endangered, and it becomes the duty of a policeman to take him in charge.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is true; but the criticism I make of your bill is that it does not limit the subjects of arrest to violent or dangerously insane persons. A man may be a harmless lunatic. He may be of unsound mind according to the standard fixed by the courts, but may be perfectly harmless; and yet a policeman is given the power to take him into custody and to set in motion proceedings to take from him his liberty. I think——

Mr. BABCOCK. I call the gentleman's attention to this:

Provided he is incapable of taking care of himself.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Where is that provision?

Mr. BABCOCK. In line 3 of page 2, section 1.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I did not hear the provision as it was being read on account of the confusion, but what I heard impressed me that it was an exceedingly dangerous and a most extraordinary power to confer upon a policeman, to arrest a harmless insane person without warrant or authority of law.

Mr. BABCOCK. Another thing I wants to call the gentleman's attention to is that the policeman making the arrest must immediately and forthwith report to the chief of police.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. But suppose the man be a resident of the city, a harmless lunatic, and we know almost every city has them. It is not the policy of the law and perhaps for public purpose is accomplished by setting in motion machinery to detain such persons. Confinement is not necessary for the public safety, where a lunatic is harmless.

Mr. COWHERD. May I call the gentleman's attention to the limitation of that section?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I wish you would. I may have obtained a wrong impression from the reading.

Mr. COWHERD. This affidavit must also provide that—

If [illegible] or be or to be [illegible] the commission of public peace imperiled and the commission of crime rendered [illegible].

Mr. CRUMPACKER. How soon after the arrest is that affidavit required?

Mr. COWHERD. That must be made immediately, and there must be [illegible] of the physicians.

Mr. PEARRE. I call the gentleman's attention, also, to the fact that the relatives of the alleged lunatic must be immediately notified.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. These safeguards may be sufficient: I do not know. I am willing to submit that question to the judgment of the committee.

Mr. COWHERD. There must be a certificate of two physicians, and there must be the affidavits of two responsible residents of the District of Columbia.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. My first impression was that it conferred upon policemen, without warrant of law, the authority to take up anybody the policeman might deem to be of unsound mind, without regard to the question of danger or violence; but if in the judgment of the committee the personal rights of the alleged lunatic are sufficiently safeguarded, I have no objection to it.

Mr. BABCOCK. I want to say, further to the gentleman from Indiana that this bill has been as carefully provided with safeguards as the Committee on the Judiciary, the medical societies, the superintendents of the different asylums, and the committee could possibly provide.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, this bill provides for the custody of the insane. Does it undertake to provide for guardianship?

Mr. BABCOCK. Oh, no.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Or control of the property?

Mr. BABCOCK. The very object of the bill is to provide for the indigent insane. That is the prime object of the bill. For instance, a man has gone crazy round here without friends or without relatives.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. To provide for their restraint and treatment?

Mr. BABCOCK. It provides for examination.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. BABCOCK. Within thirty days.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The purpose is to protect the public against the violently insane.

Mr. BABCOCK. That is it exactly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And does not undertake to take further action as to the property.

Mr. BABCOCK. Not at all.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And it is merely temporary?

Mr. MERRELL. I would like to say to the gentleman that at the present time to effect the arrest of an insane person it has to be accomplished on the charge of some crime, as that he has committed a theft, or something of that description. As the law is at present, the policeman's instrument is incapable of arresting a person whether he is evidently insane or not.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Is there no authority now for the police to arrest a dangerously insane person?

Mr. BABCOCK. I suppose on a charge of being disorderly.

Mr. MERRELL. Except on a charge of being disorderly or some other infraction of police regulations.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MUTUAL INVESTMENT FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2781).

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2781) to incorporate the Mutual Investment Fire Insurance Company of the District of Columbia.

[illegible]

SEC. 3. That the capital stock of said company shall consist of the premium [illegible] shall be con-

[illegible] and "person" as used in this charter shall [illegible]

[illegible] be a board of [illegible] premium notes.

SEC. 10. That every person who shall become a member of said company by [illegible] company; and no policy shall bind the company [illegible]

[illegible] That nothing in this charter shall be construed to exempt [illegible]

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

[illegible] strike out the words "capital stock" and insert in lieu thereof [illegible]

[illegible] Mr. [illegible] to the gentleman from [illegible] the report on the bill.

[illegible] there is also a limitation in this bill that they shall not [illegible] money in any way, any kind of business, that they may see fit to do.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Will I look, Mr. Chairman, that is a matter for the consideration of the bill. Let me say, in reply to the gentleman from Iowa, that this bill as it is is a copy of the [illegible] passed in the Massachusetts Legislature. [illegible] the right under the general laws [illegible] and [illegible] presented this bill, which is a copy, or substantially a copy, of the charter that was granted to the Provident Company in 1876. In the meantime, for the past six months, their business has been suspended.

Now, with reference to the clause which has been referred to by the gentleman from Iowa, I will say that my understanding of that provision is this: They have moneys in the treasury, and in order that they may improve that money or invest it, they are limited to any improvement or investment of that money outside of any investment in real estate.

Now, I do not assume that there is any likelihood that they will build a railroad, nor is there any likelihood that they will go into any such venture, for the very reason that they company can never have property over $[illegible]. As I said, [illegible] the other two acts passed by Congress and [illegible] by the Commissioners, so I assume that the charters and amendments of the associations or incorporations have already been approved by the Committees of the Houses.

Mr. SULZER. If the gentleman will give way for a moment, as I understand this act relates only to the Institutions

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. To fire insurance on the mutual plan.

Mr. SULZER. And it does not relate to life insurance?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. No, it does not relate to life insurance.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the proviso in line 23, page 7:

"Provided, that any called meeting of the members of the trustees, or any of them, may be held upon the vote of a majority of the members present and voting."

Not a quorum, but of those who happen to be present. Is that as the gentleman wants it?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Well, the fair presumption is that every member has been notified to be present and that three-fourths of those present and voting is satisfactory. You understand that the people are not interested in this charter beyond the framing of a proper law for the government of a perfectly [illegible] association and this is a mutual association at the present time with a trifle over 300 members. I see no reason to believe that provided that if three-fourths of the members present and voting at a regular meeting choose to remove a trustee and the members of the association are satisfied with that form of the bill—I see no objection why there should not have that proviso.

Mr. HEPBURN. This may be a special meeting.

Mr. SULZER. I desire to ask in that connection what constitutes a quorum?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. I am not sure what the provision is in reference to a quorum of the trustees.

Mr. SULZER. Why should not this provision read three-fourths of a quorum?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. I assume that the by-laws they adopt will determine what a quorum shall be. I should assume they will fix it at a majority of the members of the association. That is left entirely to the by-laws to be adopted hereafter by the [illegible].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

EXTENDING DUTIES OF HARBOR MASTER.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 8686.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8686) to amend section 89 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 89 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia is hereby amended by striking the [illegible] in any other portion of the navigable waters in the District of Columbia, shall be a misdemeanor, and shall be punished upon conviction thereof by a fine not exceeding $[illegible] for each offense, or by imprisonment not exceeding [illegible] months, or both, in the discretion of the court: Provided, that the harbor master shall have the authority so as to minimize the injury to property owners and the public, in the exercise of said section requiring [illegible] in any other portion of the navigable waters in the District of Columbia, shall be a misdemeanor, and shall be punished upon conviction thereof by a fine not exceeding $[illegible] for each offense, or by imprisonment not exceeding [illegible] months, or both, in the discretion of the court: Provided, that the harbor master shall have the authority so as to minimize the injury to property owners and the public, in the exercise of said section requiring [illegible].

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I would say that this bill simply extends the duties of the harbor master. Under the provisions of the present law if a boat or scow sinks at the dock the owners must raise and clear the river within five days. This extends the law to Georgetown and to the Eastern Branch.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 7924 may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

NAMING STREETS, ETC., OUTSIDE THE CITY OF WASHINGTON.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7924) to name streets, avenues, alleys, highways, and reservations, and to provide for the numbering of buildings outside of the city of Washington, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7924) to name streets, avenues, alleys, highways, and reservations, and to provide for the numbering of buildings in the District of Columbia outside of the city of Washington, and for other purposes.

[illegible]

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bill of the following title:

On January 30, 1904:

H. R. 6804. An act providing for the appointment of a customs appraiser at Pittsburg, Pa.

VINCENZO GERARDI.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union may be discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4344) for the relief of Vincenzo Gerardi, of Washington, D. C., and that the same may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4344) for the relief of Vincenzo Gerardi, of Washington, D. C.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union may be discharged from the consideration of this bill and that the same be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the Congress of the United States, by act of June 6, 1900, granted to Vincenzo Gerardi, of Washington, D. C., the privilege of purchasing a certain tract of land in the District of Columbia, which said act provided that said Vincenzo Gerardi should pay for said land at the rate of $[illegible] per square foot, and that said Vincenzo Gerardi did pay the said sum of $[illegible] for said land, and did take possession thereof and did make valuable improvements thereon; and

Whereas said Vincenzo Gerardi, after the passage of said act, and before the same was carried into effect, was naturalized as a citizen of the United States; and

Whereas the Comptroller of the Treasury has decided that said Vincenzo Gerardi, by reason of his naturalization, was not entitled to purchase said land, and has refused to issue a patent to said Vincenzo Gerardi for said land; and

Whereas said Vincenzo Gerardi has been deprived of said land and the money paid therefor by reason of a mistake of law son why the District of Columbia should not be governed by the [illegible] Territories?

Mr. BARCOCK. No, sir.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and [illegible] read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment striking [illegible]

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed.

[illegible]

Mr. PARCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and No. [illegible] be discharged from the consideration of S. [illegible] and that the same be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The bill of the bill was read, as follows:

[illegible]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the consideration of this bill and that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Is it proper for the House to do this in the House as in the Committee of the Whole, so it may be [illegible]

The SPEAKER. It will be subject to amendment, of course.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PARCOCK] will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

[illegible] That there is and is hereby created in and for the District of Columbia a board of health [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] building is rented [illegible] hereby authorized to appoint a guardian or guardians for that [illegible] from various departments and offices of the gov[illegible] of the board for the [illegible] the inspector of buildings, [illegible] without the consent of said board [illegible] part of a building no person shall occupy so [illegible] of any building or part of a building the [illegible] quest to the date of service of the order on any owner of the house and [illegible] service on any part owner, after thirty days from the date on which said [illegible] order or copies of such order of condemnation was so affixed.

The amendments reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia were read, as follows:

Mr. [illegible] [Mr. [illegible]], who made this report. I suggest, however, that in the [illegible] we adopt the committee amendments and then take [illegible]

Mr. MORRELL. I move the adoption of the amendments as [illegible]

Mr. PERKINS. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL] [illegible] the bill which, with great respect to the committee [illegible]

Mr. MORRELL. I am [illegible] to yield, but I suggest that [illegible]

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the question will be taken on the [illegible] amendments.

The question being taken, the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I wish to move an amendment.

Mr. MORRELL. I [illegible]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I wish to suggest that the words "or unsafe" be inserted [illegible] the word "sanitary" where it occurs, and also that the words "or safe" be inserted after the word "sanitary" wherever it occurs.

Mr. MORRELL. I am perfectly willing to accept that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be reported.

[illegible] shall be received [illegible]

The Clerk read the amendment as stated by Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRELL. I now yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS] for his question.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I never looked at this bill until the last few minutes, and I am [illegible] but I wish to suggest to the members of the committee and to the House that the section of the bill does not present a new proposition and one of very considerable importance.

It is [illegible] to compel property owners, as a case in point, [illegible] by the owners of the buildings or by the proper [illegible] when such buildings become unsafe. In this bill it seems to me, is entirely in the interest of the owners of property that may have become worthless, because by the [illegible] section it is provided [illegible] that where a [illegible] owner of a building that has become unsafe or insanitary, in the ordinary progress of affairs in any city, so far as I know, [illegible] be compelled by the authorities to pull down that building [illegible] the direction of the municipality, [illegible] that this must be paid by the [illegible] building, which I submit can have no value, is to be paid by the other [illegible]

It is provided in section 14 that there shall be a commission of [illegible] and the rules of evidence by which the same is to be governed is fixed by the [illegible] bill. I take it, sir, that the [illegible] of this commission [illegible] that a building is unsafe and not [illegible] of any value? Is it right that a man who owns a building [illegible] which he could sell to the city, should be allowed to have the public pay him for a value which [illegible] Yet the bill provides in section 14 that he shall be paid the value of the materials in the building.

[illegible] that where the building is in a state of de[illegible] he shall be paid the value of the building as it stands, deducting the expense necessary to put it in good repair.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what is the result of this legislation? What will be the practical result of section 14? Every man in the city of Washington who has property that has become insane and unfit for use, instead of pulling it down at his own cost, as is done in every other city in the land, will have his building declared insanitary, unfit for human habitation, which it is and then a commission must be appointed, who are bound by the provisions of this bill to impose upon all the owners of real estate in Washington and the [illegible] of the property, the [illegible] of that property, of which the market value was not one cent.

I do not quite understand this bill, and coming from this committee [illegible] I know [illegible] and I know [illegible] the value of property in cities.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from New York if he has read the first paragraph of the bill, which provides the method of assessing damages in a case where a building is condemned or is found not reasonably capable of being made fit for human habitation.

Mr. PERKINS. I have read it, and [illegible]

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. What [illegible] is the provision for the assessment of damages in the case of a building that is being used for illegal purposes, according to the first paragraph [illegible]

Mr. PERKINS. I [illegible] the gentleman from Massachusetts in this way: Here is a building that is being used for illegal purposes, [illegible] is unsafe or insanitary to the health of the inmates. Who should the owner of a building who is engaged in [illegible] have any compensation or be allowed [illegible] to sell his building to the public and get for it all it is worth [illegible] he has paid? Practically, Mr. Speaker, this bill might be entitled "A bill to allow the owners of such dangerous insanitary buildings in the city of Washington to sell them to the public." That is what it comes to.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman answers my question, [illegible] by asking another.

Mr. PERKINS. Proceed.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. I should like to ask the gentleman whether he understands that a city or a State, exercising the rights of sovereignty, has the right to take the property of the individual, unless the building or the property which he owns and is maintaining amounts to a public nuisance?

Mr. PERKINS. I understand that under the exercise of the police power, where a building can properly be condemned by the officers—I not only understand, but the gentleman knows as well as I do—that buildings that are insanitary, that breed disease in any great city can, if necessary, be destroyed under the exercise of the power of a board of health. The gentleman does not question that?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. By the exercise of the powers of the board of health.

Mr. PERKINS. In the exercise of the powers of a board of health, as part of the police power.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. That is, the city exercising the power, through the board of health, may require either a change in the condition of the building——

Mr. PERKINS. Yes.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Or failing to make a change in the condition of the building, may remove it.

Mr. PERKINS. Exactly, just as they can if a building is dangerous from the standpoint of possible fire, as is done every day.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Now, does the gentleman understand that one of the purposes of this bill is to bring about the situation of what are known as the alleys in the city of Washington?

Mr. PERKINS. I object to nothing in this bill except the provision in reference to compensation of owners of buildings that are legally condemned as being insanitary and unfit for use. Otherwise I sympathize with the bill. It is a good bill, but I believe that people who have no right to compensation under the law are given compensation by this bill. That is what I object to.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman mean to say that they are not entitled to compensation for the real estate that is condemned?

Mr. PERKINS. You do not condemn the fee of the land. You tear down the insanitary buildings. The fee remains in the owner, as it was before. He is keeping upon a building that is practically a nuisance, because it is insanitary and unsafe. It is torn down, and then you turn around and pay him the value of the building materials, and rental, less the overcrowding.

If you would leave the question of damages to be disposed of by the law and strike out the fourteenth section, I certainly should have no objection to the bill, but I can tell the gentleman what will happen if this bill becomes a law. If I had a building in Washington that was insanitary, if I wanted to get rid of it, as a man often does, for there is not a person familiar with affairs who does not know that there are many owners of real estate whose buildings are worthless, I would have it condemned under this bill.

A man has got a building that is of no value, and he pulls it down that he may put up a better building. Then in the city of Washington, by this law, he can have his property condemned, and instead of losing the value of the building the taxpayers in Washington will be obliged to pay at least the value of the building material, which is about all the value of any building; and I do not see why that provision should be made.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. I want to call the gentleman's attention to Paragraph A, on page 11, with reference to the cost of the building. Under the first provision—

> That the rental of the building was obtained by reason of the same being unsafe, or upon account of defects in the premises due to the health of the inmates, or upon account of the same being in a state of defective sanitation, or is not in a condition which requires it to be torn down, but the building is built or not remodeled in conformity with the laws and regulations of the District of Columbia, and if the committee shall find that such compensation should be awarded, then that the compensation, etc.

Now the method by which the damages are to be assessed is as follows:

> Shall in the first place, so far as it is based upon rental, be on the rental of the building as it would have been if not overcrowded, or upon such rental as would be obtained for the premises if not so overcrowded, or in the case of persons whose the building was used for the purpose of business, then in such case shall be assessed such overcrowding as a consequence of injuriousness to the health of the occupants.

Now that provides that the party whose property is taken shall receive such a price as he would have been entitled to receive if the building had been legally occupied and not overcrowded. In other words, if it had been in a sanitary condition. Now, the same is true with reference to section 8. Then there was another provision here by which the party can not recover except the building be in such condition that it can be properly and legally used.

Now, I will ask the gentleman if that is not his construction of the language. In other words, is not there a provision to pay nobody for the property, except where it is legally and properly used?

Mr. PERKINS. I will answer the gentleman by saying that I think that the provision is all wrong. Let me state to the gentleman and the committee what it seems to me is a fair rule to be adopted. What is the condition? A man owns a building in the city of Washington; he illegally overcrowds it; he wants to get rid of it and get a new building. You tell him that he must cease his illegal overcrowding. That is all right. He refuses to do so. Then you destroy it.

Mr. MORRELL. Not necessarily, simply because he has overcrowded it.

Mr. PERKINS. You may destroy it.

Mr. MORRELL. There is nothing in the bill that forces a man to destroy the building simply because it is overcrowded.

Mr. PERKINS. Well, it provides that you may destroy it.

Mr. MORRELL. You are mistaken.

Mr. PERKINS. Then he is not entitled to any damages. If you do not do anything, he gets no damages.

Mr. MORRELL. Unless the commission takes forcible possession and destroys the building the owner gets no damage.

Mr. PERKINS. If you do not take forcible possession, then it is not a practical question. But the man is tired of his building. What happens? If he takes down his building and repairs it and makes it a wholesome building, that he gets nothing. He obeys the law; he makes the building sanitary; he stops overcrowding. He gets no pay. That is what he should do. But you offer a reward to him not to make it a good building. Here is a worthless building, and he will not stop overcrowding it, neither will he make it sanitary. He knows that if he does not do that the authorities will destroy that building and give him the money to start a new building. Under the provisions of your law he gets more for an utterly worthless building than anybody under God's heaven would give him except the authorities of Washington under this bill. Now, it may be that that is wise, but we would not have such a bill in Rochester.

Mr. MORRELL. I would like to say to the gentleman that if he disputes the law he is subject and amenable to the law and to the penalties provided in the bill of probably $100 per day. He can not keep a man entirely disputing the law.

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, no; but under this bill you yourselves go on and destroy the building.

Mr. MORRELL. Not necessarily.

Mr. PERKINS. But you have the power. That is the idea. Unless you do it, why, the bill does not amount to anything. If you pass a bill saying you authority to destroy a man's worthless building and do not destroy it, why, then the bill will be useless.

If you destroy an insanitary building, then you have got to pay him the value of it. Why? Why should a man be paid the full value and cost of the building material, say, ten years before perhaps, of a building that is rotten and falling to the ground? Why should he? I do not see the wisdom of it. It seems to me the committee has erred badly in framing this rule of damages. It is not the legal rule, it is not a practical rule, and it does not seem to me, Mr. Speaker, the right rule, with all due respect to the committee.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the gentleman's attention to one fact, that the provisions of this bill in this particular have been very carefully drawn and are almost the exact copy of the law in New York, a law which has stood the test of the common pleas courts of New York, and has been carried up from those courts to the court of appeals and stood the test there, and has been brought also, I believe, to the United States Supreme Court and stood the test there.

Mr. PERKINS. Your law is constitutional. The gentleman does not understand the objection. I think this law is a proper exercise of the police power. The law is constitutional. A similar law in the State of New York is constitutional. The trouble with your law is not the general provision, but the exercise of the police power, but paying a man for damages when he is not entitled to them.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, the provisions of the bill simply provide that damages shall be paid when lawful possession is taken by the commissioners of a building which in the judgment of the commission can not be put in a sanitary condition.

Mr. PERKINS. But why should he be paid for the building can not be put in a sanitary condition?

Mr. MORRELL. This bill provides the owner shall simply be paid for the material.

Mr. PERKINS. That is all a building costs, the material.

Mr. MORRELL. Oh, no; it may be at its cost, but not its present value. The building has a rental value.

Mr. PERKINS. Which does not have to be paid. You don't pay for rental value and the value of the materials too. You take an insanitary building, and if a man would not like to sell such property for the value of the material he must be a good deal of a fool.

Mr. MORRELL. But the gentleman may not be aware that there are hundreds, perhaps thousands of buildings today in Washington which, if this commission is created, would at once be declared insanitary—buildings which are to-day bringing in rentals.

Mr. PERKINS. What a godsend it will be to owners of unsanitary buildings. They will all sell them.

Mr. MORRELL. That may and may not be the case.

Mr. PERKINS. It will be the case.

Mr. MORRELL. Not at all.

Mr. PERKINS. You take a building which is unsafe and in danger of falling; there is not a man in this House living in a city who does not know buildings are constantly destroyed by the fire marshal who declares them to be unsafe and liable to fall. He gives notice to the owner to make it safe. If he does not make it safe within a certain time the city has the power to tear it down, but never is compensation made. The owner has the right to protect himself by making his building safe, and if he will not do that the building goes down, and the public does not have to buy it.

Mr. MORRELL. I think I might be safe in saying, Mr. Speaker, that there are a number of buildings which will come under the operation of this law the owners of which probably get for one year's rental as much as they would get for the materials which constitute the buildings if this law were put into effect and if these buildings were torn down.

Mr. PERKINS. Does the gentleman think, does the gentleman say here to the House of Representatives, that a man who owns an unsafe, unwholesome building, dangerous to the people of a city, dangerous to the community, has the right to keep that building there because he gets good rent and can complain because it is taken away from him? Is that the contention of the gentlemen?

Mr. MORRELL. The gentleman does not say so or think so, but I would like to say to the gentleman that that is exactly the evil which this bill is trying to get at. We desire to give this commission the power to go to work and take these buildings; if the owner refuses to tear them down, this commission shall have the power provided under this bill to tear down these buildings.

Mr. PERKINS. I will give you one prophecy: The owner of any one of these buildings, if he has proper counsel, will always refuse. You can bet your life on that.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Do I understand the value of the materials is to be what they were when they were new, or the old materials?

Mr. MORRELL. No; just the value of the old materials as they then exist. I will now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. POWERS].

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I want to say one word, because I think my friend from New York misconceives the provisions of this bill. If a person residing in Washington is so occupying or using his building as to amount to a nuisance, that nuisance may be abated by the board of health. If the building is an insanitary building it may or may not amount to a nuisance. In other words, a building may be in such a condition, either by overcrowding or some other conditions which are not healthful, so as to constitute a nuisance, or it may not constitute a nuisance.

Now the object of this bill is to permit the District of Columbia to condemn buildings, paying for the same according to the provisions of the bill. What are the provisions of this bill? The bill provides for the payment of damages. We pay for this property not what it is worth at its rental, if it was used for unlawful purpose, or when it is in an insanitary condition. It is a question for the jury to say what the property is worth if it be legally used, or used in such a manner as not to constitute an insanitary condition.

It is said that this bill affords an opportunity for owners to sell their buildings to the District of Columbia. Not at all. The District of Columbia is not bound to take the buildings unless it desires them. If the owners of buildings so conduct them and use them as to amount to a nuisance, or render them unsafe to public health, the board of health may condemn them. This legislation goes further, and provides that when a building is used illegally—for instance, for gambling—and when it is in an insanitary condition—if it is not in a sanitary condition, that we may proceed and condemn the property.

I do not understand that my friend from New York objects to the general purpose of the bill. The purpose of the bill is to reach buildings which the board of health can not reach and condemn and remove. It seems to me, under the circumstances, the amount of damages the owners are to receive is the amount which they are fairly entitled to under all the circumstances. I do not understand there is any provision in the bill which gives the owner of a building more than what the property is worth if legally and properly used. I assume that after the property has been condemned it is simply the value of the property for material. If the property can not be used in a sanitary condition, then it is of no value except as to the material. If it can be used for remodeling, we are bound to take into consideration what is the value of the property for alteration or remodeling.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. What would be the difference in measure of value in a proceeding of this sort and in one of ordinary condemnation, taking property for public use?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. There is not any difference.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Is it the purpose of this bill to give the owner of an insanitary or unsafe building the same compensation that the Government would pay if it wanted the property for public use?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. No; I should say that the rule is not the same as it would be where we condemn property without the restrictions contained in the bill. If we should condemn property that was insanitary, the rule would be the value of the property so condemned for any purpose for which it could be legally used. The bill provides that if it is insanitary the owner shall not receive the rent he receives when it was in the insanitary condition, but he shall be entitled to receive the value of the property—what it might be worth if put in proper condition and used in such condition. So it differs from the ordinary case of condemnation of individual property for public use. In other words, there are certain limitations contained in the bill.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Its being in an insanitary and an unsafe condition goes against the value of the property.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman I would like to say that, in my judgment, the reason why these different provisions are put in the bill in regard to condemnation is this, that in this bill we only proceed for the condemnation of the building. The fee remains in the original owner. We only provide in the bill for taking of the building itself or for the putting in proper repair of the building, or putting it into sanitary condition. We do not contemplate in this bill the taking by the Government of the fee of the ground upon which the building stands.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House to one or two matters in this bill which I think will throw some light on the subject, and that is the penalty clause. I do not believe if this bill should become a law that in one case out of a hundred the District would remove a building. Section 13 says:

> That any person violating or aiding or abetting in violating any of the provisions of these rules shall upon conviction thereof in the police court of the District of Columbia, upon information filed on the instance of said District, be punished by a fine of not more than $100 or by imprisonment for not more than ninety days, and each day on which such violation and neglect or failing which such unlawful negligence continues shall constitute a separate and distinct offense.

Now, the prime object of the bill is, in the first place, to abate this unsanitary condition, and if the owners do not do it they are liable to a fine of not more than $100. Now, I want to say that the buildings attempted to be reached here are old shanties, of no value at all except for illegal and unsanitary purposes, for which they are being used now.

The bill provides further that in case the parties have refused to remove the buildings the District may do so. And what is the case then? That they shall have only such measure of damages as could be assessed if the property were used for sanitary and proper purposes. Now, if this property were used for that purpose it practically would be worth nothing. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, before that question is taken, I offer an amendment, simply to test this. I move to strike out in section 14, beginning at line 6 on page 11, the remainder of that section.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 11, section 14, after line 5, strike out the remaining portion of the section.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, that amendment, if it prevails, will practically destroy the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, that amendment leaves in force every provision of the bill, it leaves in force the power to destroy insanitary buildings. The entire police authority provided by this bill is left untouched, and if any owner of this property has any right to compensation, my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. POWERS] knows perfectly well that we could not take that right away if we tried. He knows perfectly well that if we destroy any property and the owner has a legal right to compensation, he will get his compensation, and no law passed by this Congress will prevent it.

What it does strike out is simply the measure of damages prescribed by this bill, which results in the owners of worthless property being put in a position where they can turn it over to the public and be paid by the public. I say to strike that out, and if they have any legal rights they will get them. This bill can be enforced just as well without this provision as with it, and I think the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. POWERS] knows that.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, if that is struck out, then it compels the District, if it wishes to condemn these buildings, to take the real estate.

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, no.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Does not the gentleman from New York understand that that is the very thing we do not want to do—that we want to take the buildings and not the real estate?

Mr. PERKINS. My friend surely does not mean that at all, as good a lawyer as he is. He knows that where the public enters real estate and pulls down the buildings it does not buy the land. If the act of the public is illegal, then the corporation is liable for the value of the property destroyed.

When, for instance, the public officers, as it constantly does, to destroy a building on the claim of the fire marshal that it is unsafe, and it is pulled down, and the owner claims the building was safe and complied with the regulations, he sues the corporation. Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. POWERS] does not claim for one moment that he sues for the value of the land. He sues for trespass, for illegally destroying his building, and if he recovers he gets the value of his building. If the proper officer thinks that the action of his officer in having the building pulled down was in conformity with law, then the owner gets nothing, and that will be the case here. Surely my friend knows that.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I am a little astonished at the argument of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS] when he says that the owners of property have their remedy for damages to the property taken and at the same time proposes an amendment to strike out the provision which protects the District and protects the public and prescribes the rules and regulations under which such proceedings shall be taken, and further says that the estimate of damages shall be conclusive upon the parties and upon the sanitary and proper condition of the property.

In other words, in the case of those little shanties which are renting for from 25 to 50 per cent of their value every year, are overcrowded, where a great many people are living in one little room, and they are in an insanitary and immoral condition, with no proper sewer connections, this bill provides a remedy, and says that no damages shall be considered. I suppose they are on the theory of the Dominican bonds in a certain contract. Now, to strike that out will be striking a blow at the fundamental at the very safeguards of the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. I think the gentleman is entirely wrong, if I may be permitted to say so.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

THE SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

THE SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

CRUELTY TO CERTAIN ANIMALS.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask the present consideration of the bill (H. R. [illegible]) to prevent cruelty to certain animals in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to dock the tail of any horse or horses [illegible] in the District of Columbia, or to permit or cause the same to be done, or to import into the District of Columbia any such docked horse or horses which shall have been docked in any other place or country within ninety days next before the passage of this act, or to have or keep any such docked horse or horses in said District.

SEC. 2. That within ninety days after the passage of this act every owner of any such docked horse or horses in the District of Columbia shall register the name of such horse or horses by filing in the office of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia certificates which shall set forth the name of the owner, together with his or her residence [illegible] of such docked horse or horses, which certificates shall be kept in a book or books to be kept for that purpose by said officer, [illegible] for the registering of such docked horses [illegible] that the owner or owners knowing, having in possession or keeping of any such docked horse or horses shall report to the passage of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $[illegible] nor more than $[illegible] for each offense, or by both such fine and imprisonment. For the purpose of this act the word "person" shall mean and include any corporation, company, society, association, or partnership.

SEC. 3. That any person or persons who violate the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not less than $[illegible] nor more than $[illegible] for each offense, or by both such fine and imprisonment. For the purpose of this act the word "person" whenever used shall mean and include all persons, whether owners or not, who have in their possession or control any such docked horse or horses within the District of Columbia.

SEC. 4. That all fines and penalties imposed and collected for violations of this act shall be paid into the treasury of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 5. That all laws or parts of laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read the third time.

Mr. DALZELL rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. DALZELL. Is the District Committee serious in reporting this bill?

Mr. BABCOCK. The committee has reported it, and I think it is a serious matter.

Mr. DALZELL. Does the gentleman believe that we can by law prevent a man from bringing his own property into the District of Columbia——

Mr. BABCOCK. I will refer the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. POWERS], who is, I believe, prepared to cite some legal authorities.

Mr. DALZELL. If I understand the bill—perhaps I misunderstand it—then under this proposition if I happen to have a horse with a docked tail and bring it into the District of Columbia and keep it here a certain length of time I become guilty of a misdemeanor and liable to fine and imprisonment.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. That is a proposition of the bill. The cause is exactly the same as if my friend from Pennsylvania had shot a bird in Pennsylvania in an open season and brought it here during a closed season. If he did so, he would find himself liable to a penalty.

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, I do not see any analogy.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. [illegible] with the Washington Humane Society, [illegible] of the provision to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania has called attention, the same [illegible] that has been enacted by some of the States of the Union.

Now, the provision which provides a penalty in case a docked horse is brought into this District [illegible] is a provision absolutely necessary for the proper enforcement of the bill. [illegible] there is no question that Congress under its police power has the right to pass a measure of this kind. Nearly all the States in the Union have passed laws of this character.

I understand that certain States bordering on the District of Columbia have not enacted any penalty for keeping the tails of horses. If the gentleman which has been referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania were enacted from this bill, the gentleman would be not an outlaw, but the gentleman might take a docked horse back to his District of Columbia. The provision to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania has called attention is to enable the authorities to enforce the law.

There are plenty of precedents for provisions of this kind. You will find the precedents everywhere in our game laws.

Take such a case as I referred to a moment ago where it would not be a misdemeanor to kill certain game in Virginia, yet if the game after being killed should be brought into the District of Columbia at certain seasons of the year the person having possession of the game would be liable to a penalty. The claim is made that those powers are necessary in order to enforce the penalties in the law. The enactment of this bill without such a provision would be of no avail.

Mr. PERKINS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. Would you not the gentleman report a bill making it a misdemeanor to clip the ears of a bull terrier? Bull terriers are just as numerous as horses.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Well, I am not sure but that if the gentleman would offer such a provision as an amendment to the bill I would support it.

Mr. PERKINS. Let me ask the gentleman another question. Would it be a misdemeanor to have a horse docked any more than to have your own hair cut?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. This is a question that has been discussed for the last fifty years——

Mr. PERKINS. Does the gentleman think that it hurts the horse at all?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. This question, I say, has been discussed for the last fifty years in this country, and there is not a humane society or society for [illegible] I know not a person in this country who does not believe that the docking of a horse is an act of cruelty to the animal.

Mr. PERKINS. Did the gentleman ever see a horse's tail docked? Does he know what the operation is?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Why, I will say to the gentleman that I never could afford to own a horse, and I do not expect to be able to own one while I am a Member of Congress.

Mr. PERKINS. But you may have seen other people's horses.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. I have seen other people's horses.

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman knows perfectly well, and everybody knows, that this talk about its hurting a horse is just rot and nothing else. I think it a little tiresome for us to spend our time passing silly legislation of this sort simply because it is asked for by a lot of foolish women who do not know a horse from a cow.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman from New York permit me to say a word right there?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I have heard a veterinarian of standing say that it did hurt a horse, and that he thought the whole process was an outrage.

Mr. PERKINS. Then that veterinarian of standing must have been a very ignorant veterinarian, because I have seen many a veterinarian perform this operation. I have seen a horse standing eating his oats and never stop eating them while the operation went on. I have seen that time and time again.

Mr. GROSS. Well, that was a hungry horse. [Laughter.]

Mr. PERKINS. This talk about the docking of horses being cruel comes from people who do not know anything about it, and it begins to get tired. That is all I can say about it.

Mr. HITT. The horse would stop eating his oats if it were hot weather and he had been docked and was tormented by flies until he was nearly crazy, as anybody can see who will visit the pastures and public liveries, where horses which have their tails left at the natural state can go out and pasture while the docked horses are tormented or kept already shut up to be protected from the torment of flies. [Applause.]

Mr. PERKINS. If my friend wants to know what to do in order to stop fine trotting horses, let him pass a law to compel them to be docked, as every man does who has a decent horse. It is one of the fads in the world [illegible] that all docked horses [illegible] of a horse's tail amount to good qualities. But those persons who do not think of that. They say, "We will pass a bill in the Congress of the United States providing that it is cruelty to dock a horse's tail."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. PERKINS. I will if I know how.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Why does anybody dock a horse's tail?

Mr. PERKINS. First, because it looks a great deal better. Why do you cut your hair, instead of having it down over your shoulders? [Laughter.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is the cruelest question I have been asked in a great many years. [Laughter.] As a gentleman in my city used to say, "That is very unwrong." [Laughter.] But I never could see why on earth anybody wanted to dock a horse's tail. There is no more sense in it than there is in the practice of the Chinese, who bind the feet of their female children. Both practices are cruel, and, in my judgment, one is just about as wrong as the other.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The Chinese for generations have followed that practice simply because some people in remote times followed it. Now, the docking of the tail of a horse and the making it curl up into a short stub because Lord Flubdub, somewhere over in England, a few generations ago did it——

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Or Earl Snob.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes: that does not prevent it from being cruel. It does not make the horse look better. There is no earthly reason for it that I can see.

Mr. PERKINS. Will you answer a question?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. PERKINS. A man has a right to dress himself or to dress his horse as he pleases. I do not suppose Congress is going to pass a law saying we shall wear red trousers or blue trousers or that our harness shall be black or yellow. This law can only stand upon one proposition, and that is that docking is cruelty to animals.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does not the gentleman know that there are nerves that run down to the end of the horse's tail, and does not the cutting of a nerve involve pain?

Mr. PERKINS. Time after time I have seen horses that went right straight along eating their oats. When a little cocaine is used [illegible] the difference. Now, let me say that if the House of Representatives is going to pass a law to prevent cruelty to horses, let it pass a law that is good for something. These people who come here and cry against docking horses, saying it is cruel, nine-tenths of them keep their horses in noisome stables every moment by the use of an overhead check, which holds the head back. Let the Committee on the District of Columbia report a bill forbidding the use of overhead checks. They will save the horses ten thousand times as much torment as they will by such a bill as this. Let us be sensible and pass a bill that is worth something instead of such a bill as this, simply because it emanated from some female society.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I would like to ask the committee why it can not leave out these words, "or to import or to bring into the District any docked horse or horses." I have no objection to the authorities of the District of Columbia saying that we shall have no more horses docked here, but my taste runs to docked horses, and all the horses I own are docked. If you will simply pass a law that all horses docked shall be registered I have no objection to that. And I have no objection to your saying that horses shall not be docked in the District of Columbia; but I do not think you ought to exclude a man who already owns horses from bringing them here if they are docked, when he is a careful man who takes good care of his horses. If you strike out these words, you will do away with much of the trouble.

Mr. BABCOCK. I want to say to the gentleman that any amendment in the line he suggests would destroy the bill. I would suggest to the gentleman that he vote against the bill and kill it if he does not like it, because that amendment is unnecessary and it would do no good.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I do not see that that applies at all and the bill can be properly amended. I shall vote against it.

Mr. BABCOCK. I now yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MINOR. I want to ask the gentleman from New York a question.

Mr. PERKINS. All right.

Mr. MINOR. Are you really serious when you say to this House that the cutting off of a horse's tail is not painful—that it is painless?

Mr. PERKINS. If it is properly done, it is painless.

Mr. MINOR. With bone, with muscle, with nerves, and with veins close through it?

Mr. PERKINS. Properly done, with the use of cocaine, it is painless.

Mr. MINOR. Now, that is a strange statement to make, having personal knowledge.

Mr. PERKINS. I have seen it done many times.

Mr. MINOR. I do not propose to argue with a fine gentleman, because he may be better informed than I am on the subject and have personal knowledge.

Mr. PERKINS. I have seen lots of horses operated on.

Mr. BABCOCK. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I was raised with very high respects upon the perfection and complete perfection of the works of the Almighty on an early occasion which he placed out, among other things, the donkey as one of its world. I am now driven to believe, if I am to take the opinion of the gentleman from New York, that if God Almighty had only had some wise advice before he would have made a horse with a tail sticking right up. [Laughter.]

Mr. PERKINS. No, I do not say that; but I stated it was not cruelty to animals. Now, some may like to dock his horse, but you like it with a long tail.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am in favor of an acknowledgment of the universal and supreme wisdom of the Almighty.

Mr. PERKINS. Well, you do not follow it in many respects.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I come as near to it as you do.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks for a vote.

Mr. MORRELL. I would like to ask the gentleman who reported this bill whether or not he does not think that the second section well might be amended, so that a man may not be prohibited from bringing horses in after the expiration of ninety days; and also if he does not think it would open the door to fraud in the sale of certificates of registration, and he rather hard upon those who may be obliged, from their being elected to an official life, or being sent here, or obliged to come here, that they shall, if they have at home a docked horse, be obliged to leave it there and walk when they come to Washington? Or if they have a horse at home and they are fond of him, if he is docked, they can not bring that horse here, and they will have to sell that horse, and when they come here if they want to have one, be compelled to buy a horse with a long tail, whatever he may look like?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. The bill provides for the registering of docked horses which are now here. It simply requires that the Commissioners should do this. A man can not come to the District if he owns a docked horse and bring it. He must, if he needs a horse here, bring one with a long tail. I do not think there is any difficulty about the question. My friend from Ohio takes the position that God's plan is the best, and I shall be glad if the House will agree with the views of the gentleman from Ohio. I do not see why there should be any further trouble about the enforcement of this law than there is about the enforcement of any penal statute.

Mr. MORRELL. I would like to suggest to the gentleman that it is unjust and illegal to make a provision that a man who is obliged to come here after the expiration of these ninety days who wants to bring his horses shall not be able to bring them unless they have long tails.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. PERKINS. Division. Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 85, noes 8.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

REGULATION OF ISSUE OF LICENSES FOR TURKISH, RUSSIAN, AND MEDICATED BATHS IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the Members of the House that we have only one more bill, but it is a very important measure, and particularly the Members of the House are interested in it. I call up the bill H. R. 1999.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1999) to regulate the issue of licenses for Turkish, Russian, or medicated baths in the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted, etc. That paragraph [illegible] of section [illegible] of "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes," approved June 1, 1898, is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"PAR. [illegible] That owners or managers of massage establishments, Turkish, Russian, or medicated baths shall pay a license tax of [illegible] per annum: Provided, That no license shall be issued under this paragraph without the approval of the major and superintendent of police: Provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any female to give or administer massage treatment to any bath to any person of the masculine, or for any person of the male sex to give or administer massage treatment or any bath to any person of the female sex, in any establishment licensed under this paragraph. Any person violating the provisions of this paragraph shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $[illegible] for each offense, or by imprisonment for not less than thirty nor more than one hundred and eighty days, or by both such fine and imprisonment, and, in addition to such penalty, if what is conducted in the manner to revoke the license of the owner or manager of the establishment wherein the provisions of this paragraph shall have been violated."

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Page 2, line 7, strike out the word "five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "[illegible]."

Page 2, line 9, strike out the words "one hundred and eight" and insert in lieu thereof the words "[illegible]."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to move to reconsider the vote by which the bill passed, and I move to lay that motion on the table, and to have that apply to the several bills which have been called up by the District Committee today.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL NAVAL OFFICER IN DISTRICT OF CHICAGO.

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 540, which is the same as the bill H. R. 1878, which has been unanimously reported by the Ways and Means Committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to consider the following bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 540) providing for an additional officer in the District of Chicago, in the collection district of Illinois and Indiana.

Be it enacted, etc. That there shall be in the district of Chicago, in the collection district of Illinois and Indiana, in addition to the officers now authorized by law, a naval officer for the district, who shall possess the qualifications required for taking to that office, and shall receive a salary of $[illegible] per year.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if any committee has considered the bill.

Mr. BOUTELL. The bill is unanimously reported by the Ways and Means Committee, and is also recommended by the Treasury Department, and the bill under consideration is the bill which has already passed the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. The similar bill, being H. R. 4878, will lie on the table.

On motion of Mr. BOUTELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TO AMEND ACT IN RELATION TO FIFTH JUDICIAL CIRCUIT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 9648.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9648) to amend the first section of an act providing that the circuit court of appeals for the fifth judicial circuit of the United States shall hold at least one term of said court annually in the city of Montgomery, in the State of Alabama, approved January 8, 1891.

Be it enacted, etc. That the first section of the act providing that the circuit court of appeals for the fifth judicial circuit of the United States shall hold at least one term of said court annually in the city of Montgomery, in the State of Alabama, approved January 8, 1891, be and the same is hereby amended by striking out the concluding words of said section, to wit, "on the first Monday in October in each year," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "on the third Monday in October in each year."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to consider this bill at this time. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURTS OF UNITED STATES AT ALBANY, GA.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill H. R. 5498.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5498) to provide for circuit and district courts of the United States at Albany, Ga.

Be it enacted, etc. That the south-western division of the northern judicial district of Georgia is hereby created, and shall be composed of the counties of Baker, Dougherty, Lee, Mitchell, Terrell, Randolph, Early, and Worcester, of the northern district of Georgia, and of Berrien, Colquitt, Calhoun, Decatur, Dougherty, Lee, Mitchell, and Worth, of the southern district of Georgia.

SEC. 2. That a term of the circuit court and of the district court for the northern district of Georgia shall be held at Albany on such days as the circuit court of Appeals in Judicial Districts in each year, and it shall be the duty of the clerk, marshal, and other officers of the northern judicial district to attend said terms of said court, and perform the duties appertaining to said offices and to the administration of said court within said district; and no process, pleadings, or other papers shall be returnable to any other place than Albany, Ga., in said district. The circuit court of appeals for the fifth circuit may be adjourned, if deemed advisable, from time to time, by the clerk thereof, and the expenses incurred for the holding of such courts from expense to the government of the United States.

SEC. 3. That all writs and process of a local nature in the circuit and district courts against a single defendant or inhabitant of said state, must be brought in the district of the division where he resides. Land controversies in said district shall be tried at the term of the court held in the division where the land is situated.

SEC. 4. That proceedings for criminal offenses shall be prosecuted in any of the counties of the southern division of said district in which such offense was committed, and all prosecutions for crimes or offenses committed on the waters of said district, shall be prosecuted in the county of said district next adjoining the same, and all prosecutions for offenses committed within the limits of any fort or other military reservation, shall be prosecuted in the county of said district next adjoining said reservation, or as near thereto as may be, which shall have been established.

SEC. 5. That all civil suits and proceedings now pending in the circuit and district courts of said district, or in any court to which the jurisdiction of said courts may be transferred, or which may be brought in the said southern division of said district, and which would be properly cognizable in said courts if the same had been instituted after the passage of this act, may be prosecuted to judgment in the said southern division of said district, and the same shall be transferred by agreement of all parties by order of the court, to said southern division of said district, and there prosecuted to judgment in the same manner and with the same effect as if they had been instituted therein; and all pleadings, and all processes issued and returnable before the said courts, shall be returnable to the said southern division of said district, and have the same effect as if they had been issued or taken in reference thereto.

SEC. 6. That jurisdiction of persons of color from the counties of the State of Georgia in the same place provided in section 2 of this act, shall be in the southern division of said district, and the same process, pleadings, and other papers shall be returnable to the said southern division of said district, and the same shall be prosecuted to judgment in the same manner and with the same effect as if they had been instituted therein; and all pleadings, and all processes issued and returnable before the said courts, shall be returnable to the said southern division of said district, and have the same effect as if they had been issued or taken in reference thereto.

SEC. 7. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with this act, so far as the same shall be deemed to refer to the said southern division of said district, be and the same are hereby repealed.

SEC. 8. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after the 1st day of January, A. D. 1900.

SEC. 9. That the counties of Berrien, Colquitt, Calhoun, Decatur, Dougherty, Lee, Mitchell, Worth, Randolph, Early, and Worcester, be and the same are hereby, transferred from [illegible].

SEC. 10. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

On page 1, line 5, strike out the word "Baker," and in the same line, after the word "Dougherty," insert the word "Mitchell."

On page 1, line 7, same page, strike out the word "Berrien" and insert in place thereof the word "Baker."

On page 1, line 7, same page, strike out the words "Decatur" and "Colquitt."

On page 1, line 8, same page, strike out the word "Lee" and insert in place thereof the word "Berrien."

In line 7 of the same page strike out the word "Decatur."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GRIGGS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SESSIONS OF CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURTS IN WISCONSIN.

Mr. MINOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8835) to amend an act entitled "An act to determine the sessions of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the eastern district of Wisconsin," approved March 31, 1892, chapter 28.

Be it enacted, etc. That that act, entitled "An act providing the terms and places of holding the courts of the United States in the eastern district of Wisconsin," approved March 31, 1892, be amended so as to read as follows:

"That the regular terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the eastern district of Wisconsin shall be held at the times and places following, to wit: At Milwaukee on the first Mondays of January and October, and at Oshkosh on the second Tuesday in June of each year, and at Green Bay the first Tuesday in April of each year."

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MINOR, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

APPEALS FROM CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURTS, BEAUMONT, TEX.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10145) to provide for appeals, writs of error, and other appellate proceedings from the circuit and district courts of Beaumont, in the eastern district of Texas.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That all appeals, writs of error and other appellate proceedings which may hereafter be taken or prosecuted from the courts of the [illegible] of the United States from the city of Beaumont, Jefferson County, Tex., in the eastern district of Texas, to the court of appeals of the fifth circuit shall be heard and disposed of by said court of appeals at the [illegible] held in the city of New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent the court from granting supersedeas or writs of error whenever the said court shall sit on cases of injunction, and in all other cases which under the statutes and the rules or in the judgment of the court are entitled to be brought to a speedy hearing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HENRY of Texas, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PORTO RICAN TEACHERS.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of joint resolution No. 79, for the transportation of Porto Rican teachers to the United States and return.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby authorized and directed, to cause to be transported, by the government of the United States, of such teachers of Porto Rico as the Commissioner of Education of the United States and the secretary thereof may select, to the United States, to remain in the United States for a period not to exceed one year, and to return to Porto Rico at the end of said period, and to provide the transportation of the said teachers and their baggage, and the subsistence of the said teachers while in the United States, and their transportation from the United States to Porto Rico, by the transportation facilities of the United States, and to provide for the care and subsistence of said teachers while in the United States, by contract or otherwise, as may be deemed advisable by the Secretary of War: Provided, That the expenses incurred by the provisions of this act shall not exceed $[illegible] in all: Provided further, That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, allow the wives and families of said teachers to accompany them, in the same manner and under the same conditions as provided in this act, and may allow attendants, or of any such of them, in course, within the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I object.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will not the gentleman from Mississippi withdraw or reserve his objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I will reserve it if the gentleman wants to talk.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will not the gentleman from Mississippi state the ground of his objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman from Wisconsin can have time to talk if he chooses.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do not want to take the time of the House if the gentleman is to object.

The SPEAKER. This is proceeding by unanimous consent.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the disposition of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, the bill H. R. 11128, to modify and amend an agreement with the Devils Lake Indians in North Dakota be made the special order, and that it continue the special order, not to interfere with revenue or appropriation bills or bills on the Private Calendar or with any business that is privileged under the rules, and that the bill be considered in the House.

Mr. PAYNE. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if this bill is similar to the one passed this morning?

Mr. MARSHALL. Very similar, except it provides for opening of a smaller reservation.

Mr. PAYNE. And there are similar guards in the bill?

Mr. MARSHALL. Yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman state about how many acres are involved?

Mr. MARSHALL. One hundred and four thousand acres.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask if this makes any charge on the public Treasury different because of the fact that the proceeds of sale of public land now goes to the fund for reclaiming arid land? By reason of that irrigation act is not this now a direct charge on the Treasury?

Mr. MARSHALL. There is a charge on the Treasury precisely similar to the one in the Rosebud bill, which has been passed, and that is to pay for sections 16 and 36, which are ceded to the State of North Dakota for school purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The provision in the gentleman's bill making appropriations out of the Treasury for sections 16 and 36, taken from the Indians and turned over to the settlers at so much an acre, is that the Treasury of the United States is asked to give a certain sum similar to the one in the bill passed Saturday.

Mr. MARSHALL. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not recognize the changed conditions now with reference to the Treasury of the United States and a charge on the general fund from what it was before we passed the irrigation bill in that. That before we passed the irrigation bill the proceeds from the sale of public lands went into the general Treasury, and now he is asking the Treasury to appropriate money, although that Treasury does not receive the proceeds of the sales of public lands? Am I not correct in that changed condition now?

Mr. MARSHALL. I will yield to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, the question of disposing of the public lands in the interest of irrigation is not connected with the disposal of any of the Indian reservations.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. No; but this is what I mean: Prior to the irrigation act the proceeds of the sale of public lands went into the Treasury of the United States, and now it goes into a reclamation fund. Before that we had a fund out of which we could pay for sections 16 and 36, and in cases similar to the one now presented. But now that fund is diverted or placed in the irrigation fund, and so this means a direct appropriation without any reimbursement to the National Treasury, if I am correct in my assumption.

Mr. MARTIN. In the previous legislation the appropriation made out of the Treasury was a direct appropriation. Before the irrigation act was passed the fund did not pass from the sale of public lands to the payment for school lands. That was not the case. The appropriation was always a direct appropriation where, under the enabling act, the Government was obligated to make good to the State sections 16 and 36. In the enabling act under which North Dakota and South Dakota were admitted into the Union there was a clause in it different from that under which any other State was admitted into the Union prior to that time upon the subject of school lands, and it is expressly anticipated in that enabling act, no doubt, to the fact that the conditions of those particular States were peculiar in that large areas of the State when admission took place were Indian lands—that as Indian reservations should be removed the Government would make good to the States sections 16 and 36.

This bill to which the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. MARSHALL] has now reference does not provide for the payment to the State of any appropriation out of the General Government, but it does provide for the completion and fulfillment of the contract of the Government in that enabling act to purchase from the Indians these particular sections 16 and 36, and to place them at the disposal of the State for general public school purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Let me ask the gentleman why it is that in fixing the price of the land as the bill now before the House fixes it he does not fix the price sufficiently high so that resort will not be needed to the general fund in the Treasury?

Mr. MARTIN. That would be a very unjust provision, I think, where in an enabling act like the one in question the Government has bound itself along a general line of policy which has been pursued ever since the ordinance of 1787, namely, to set aside sections 16 and 36 in new States as they should be admitted for the benefit of school funds. I think to do differently would be a very improper hardship upon the settlers, who must have the other sections, and that the expense of these particular sections should not be loaded off onto the settlers instead of the obligation being fulfilled by the Government.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The gentleman's position might be well taken, except there is a change in the conditions, and that I present to him for explanation.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN] will permit me, I would state to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] that the irrigation act does not provide that any lands in Indian Territory shall belong to the States. It still belongs to the National Government, and upon the construction of any reservoir or any irrigation or drainage the people who settle on the lands under that reservoir pay back to the Government every dollar of cost. It does not cost the Government a cent.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The gentleman recognizes, however, that that is a departure from the real question here. Where does the National Government pay the money of which to pay the obligation provided for in this act? It is clearly evident that it does not get it now from the public lands.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Government gets it from the fund put aside for such purposes.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair will remind the House that this is a request for special order of business in another house [illegible] A [illegible] of the bill would occupy the remainder of [illegible] to making the special order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, with that view in mind, I desire to ask the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. MARSHALL] a question. The 10% fund that will go to North Dakota in the other States, does it not? In the long run the lands and all the States certain lands were bought from the Indians and then given by the Federal Government to the States for educational purposes.

Mr. MARSHALL. It goes even further than that. Under the conditions in which North and South Dakota were admitted, provision was made that as fast as those properties were sold [illegible] to those States.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But independently of that, although we had no purpose that I of course knew of, when the Louisiana Purchase was made the Indians were [illegible] the Indians and paid for it by the Federal Government and [illegible] over to the States for educational purposes.

Mr. LAMB. It is two sections now instead of one.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes; two sections now instead of one, but a great many has a section two.

THE SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HITT rose.

THE SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman to wait a moment.

the treaty was not satisfactory, so she saw fit to reject the treaty, and her Congress adjourned October 31.

Ten days after the Congress of the United States was to convene in extraordinary session to pass upon the ratification of another treaty with Colombia. It was to be specially considered in the treaty business. We had been waiting from early spring to see if Colombia would accept the treaty. Has any longer wait would not have seemed an unwarranted delay to any but an impatient and overzealous person?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TRAVER. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I gather from the gentleman's remarks that he passed the rejection of the treaty by Colombia at some time in October?

Mr. TRAVER. The gentleman ought not to gather that from anything I have said. I have not said anything of that kind. I said that the Colombian Congress adjourned October 31 without acting upon it. Away back in the Administration of President Roosevelt, I have been informed, and I do not know that it is true, but I have been informed that at one time or at two different times during that Administration, which was October 31, they could have received their rejection of the treaty and acted upon it if they had so desired.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Was not a resolution introduced into the Colombian Congress looking to a renewal of the treaty or the signing of a new treaty?

Mr. TRAVER. There was. The matter was under discussion and was expressed that there was [illegible] with some modifications [illegible] the treaty with some modifications [illegible] to be done to wait when there can be no doubt about it. If the matter of having a vessel at Panama was not agreed before Congress adjourned, it was then left the Colombian representative in Panama to find out if other terms might be found and Hanna testified that he left the Panama region.

Personally the President was in favor of building the canal at Panama, and he was not in favor of using the Panama Canal company. He received assurances from the American people that they had a President who was the man who did not carry at trifles, one who would ride any kind of a broncho where others, more timorous, dare not tread. It was this imperious and irresponsible personality that he wished to impress upon the people. They wished to realize that their Chief Executive was not only a man of world fell of action. It was his purpose to [illegible] the world [illegible] and [illegible] would make order. The present occupant of the White House was not to be trifled with, low or no low.

He tells us in his message of January 4 that prior to October 21 negotiations between Colombia and the citizens of Panama if Colombia did not accept the treaty [illegible] be necessary for early.

[illegible] Panama [illegible] and the order of [illegible] Panama [illegible] and form an independent government in Panama [illegible] Panama.

Bearing in mind that the Colombian Congress adjourned on October 31 without passing the treaty, and [illegible] far as we can [illegible] between Mr. Beaupre, Minister of the Republic of Panama, or any other of our representatives there and a responsible member of the Government from the time of the adjournment of the Colombian Congress [illegible] was had between October 31 and the following November 3 [illegible] result in the revolt of Panama, or [illegible] the United States [illegible] Panama [illegible] November 3?

Prompt landing of armed forces of the United States at the Panama [illegible] and [illegible] Panama [illegible] a proclamation [illegible] Panama.

And on the same day, November 3, the Navy Department gave the following order to the commander of the Nashville at Colon:

Maintain free and uninterrupted transit of persons and property across the Isthmus by any means at your disposal. Do not permit either Government or insurgent, either at Colon, Porto Bello, or other points.

And the same orders were sent the Boston and the Dixie.

These orders, we should remember, were issued in a [illegible] which had been patrolled without fire and [illegible] the Isthmus, and before any information or report of [illegible] had reached Washington. It was in the Monday following the Saturday when the Colombian Congress adjourned.

Note also the language:

Government forces reported approaching the Isthmus in vessels.

Who reported this?

When, where, and to whom?

The correspondence furnished the Senate under a resolution asking for all the correspondence fails to show any such report from anyone, and there has not been till this blessed hour any official report or rather given to the American people stating the sources from which this report came.

Is it true that thus early the three traitors to the Colombian Republic—namely, Jose Agustin Arango, Federico Boyd, and Tomas Arias—had begun communicating with our Government here in Washington? These were the same three, with about twenty other in central men in Panama, who formed the junta in Panama to revolt and urged immediate recognition and assistance. These were the men who had been to New York consulting with the counsel and directors of the French canal company. These were the parties who were deeply interested that the canal should be built on Panama at once, at any cost, and at any hazard.

I do not charge that they made the report, for I do not know, and no one else can ever know from the correspondence submitted to the Senate relative to the [illegible] affair.

But we do know that the President gave the order referred to on November 3, twenty-four hours before there was any revolt [illegible] Panama, [illegible] and probably the leaders of the secession movement knew of the order as soon as our representative there did.

It must have given great strength and comfort to the few plotting the revolt. One can easily see the effect which would be produced upon that ignorant and irresponsible people when their [illegible] conspirators could go among the people and truthfully [illegible] the United States had [illegible] with them and by force, if necessary, would prevent a [illegible] from coming into Panama or anywhere within 50 miles of the city to secure order, quell disturbance, and force the little band of insurgents to lay down their arms, if they had any, and submit to the law of the land in short, break up and put an end to the insurrectionary movement, and restore order.

Could Colombia have put down the rebellion and restored order if we had permitted her to?

Colombia had a population of 5,000,000 people. Panama about 350,000. If we had "stood hands off," as we were in duty bound to do under the provisions of the treaty we had with Colombia, it is my opinion [illegible] Colombia would have put down the insurrection [illegible] and re stablished free transit across the Isthmus in a very [illegible] time.

If the [illegible] herself unable to do this, it was our duty, if we were [illegible] thing, to assist her to maintain her sovereignty, and it was not our duty to prevent her doing this by interference of our armed forces.

Now, what is a matter of fact, happened after the Administration had sent orders to our troops not to permit the Colombian troops to enter upon the Isthmus? Just what we expected and expect would happen. There was a revolt the next day, November 4, by a [illegible] the people of Panama.

Colombian generals in command, with four or five hundred troops, went to Panama on November 2. Captain Hubbard, of the Nashville, allowed these troops to come, as he says, he did not feel justified in preventing them, as the insurrection had not taken place.

On the next day, November 3, the Colombian generals wanted these troops [illegible] to Panama. This Captain Hubbard would not allow, and on the next day, November 4, ordered a [illegible] the railroad station, so the Colombian troops could not move. In a day or two more they were forced to leave the Isthmus. They stood not upon the order of their going, but went at once.

On November 3, two days after the first revolt occurred in Panama, the United States [illegible] a "junta," that "the Republic of Panama was established."

And on the very next day, November 6, four days before the Assembly in Congress was to convene, the Administration [illegible] the new Republic by the following dispatch to our minister at Panama:

The people of Panama have, by an apparently unanimous movement, declared their independence of Colombia and have established a government of their own, which has been recognized by the United States as the de facto government of the Isthmus. You will communicate the fact to the Panama Government and [illegible] Panama [illegible] Colombian [illegible] Panama [illegible] Colombian [illegible] Panama [illegible] Colombian [illegible] the last three months. I have no disposition to refer [illegible] to any branch of the Government, but if there [illegible] was a [illegible] were not [illegible] to the [illegible] and [illegible] of a [illegible] Republic. So I shall [illegible] anything new about it.

I have [illegible] said I have a lawyer's training and a lawyer's instincts, about the [illegible] of a [illegible] and I can not [illegible] by [illegible] and [illegible] law, it was [illegible] Panama. And [illegible] the Congress [illegible] Congress [illegible] Mr. [illegible] Mr. [illegible] Mr.

through with my very able remarks when the gentleman injected himself in here to show that the Ostend manifesto —

Mr. THAYER. But the gentleman referred to it himself. I did not.

Mr. GROSVENOR. To show that the Ostend manifesto was condemned by the Republican party. I thought he had done it. He has [illegible] I thought I had done it. I thought he got that platform to read to us to show that the Republicans in 1856 condemned the Ostend manifesto.

Mr. THAYER. I held it now in my hand, but you will not give me the time to read it. You prefer, as in many other things, to continue in your ignorance of it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then I am right. I say that the gentleman came in here to show me that we had condemned that platform.

Mr. THAYER. And now the gentleman is contending that it is [illegible] a position right the contrary to that [illegible]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not at all. I have shown the gentleman as I thought, to my entire very [illegible] that we had [illegible] between a [illegible] and the war of our Revolution or the war of 1812.

Mr. THAYER. I will say that the gentleman has entirely failed to [illegible]

Mr. GROSVENOR. [illegible] plete a [illegible] not want to have it all [illegible] taking the gentleman up. [illegible]

Mr. THAYER. [illegible]

Mr. GROSVENOR. [illegible] speak with [illegible] ought to take pity on me and give me a chance. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, a [illegible] more. There are issues enough, my Democratic brethren, upon which you can go to the [illegible] campaign. I do not know what they all are, but I know there are several of them. You have enough of them, in my judgment, of sufficient strength to make a very respectable fight. The last two campaigns you have waged were not propitious in power. The issues that you sustained were so great, so overwhelming, so [illegible] and so unexpected by you, that the glory of two great campaigns was stripped away.

You are in a position now, if you will call off a few more leaders and get rid of them, to give us a whole lot of trouble in the coming summer and fall. We are glad of that. We do not want to kick and beat the air and pose. Look on an enemy. You have been an enemy worthy of the steel of any political party on earth—grand in your principles, glorious in your devotion to party duty, and powerful when you come under a banner that you are not ashamed of. You have issues enough.

The tradition of your party is substantially the tradition of a free-trade party, and you can look a way back of [illegible] years of our career to the [illegible] of those eight years. There is plenty of food to feed the flame of partisan enthusiasm and interest, but do not go into this battle tied hand and foot to a proposition so distasteful to the American people as to strip you of fighting power.

Do not come to us with an indorsement of any man's speech whether a Representative or a Senator, that undertakes to condemn the United States in its action in the matter of the Panama Canal. If you do there will not be enough left of you in November to make a respectable funeral procession. [Laughter on the Republican side.] I know that some gentlemen who are a little but inclined to be prate-to-nots, a little bit inclined to be good-standard men, are quite willing to get up some cry of imperialism or something about Panama and get a banner under which they can fight without being driven to support the attitude you are going to take upon the great political questions of the day; but do not follow those men. If you do, you will go to ruin again just as you have done heretofore. [Laughter.]

I say that the brightest star in the galaxy that to-day shines upon the pathway of the candidate of the Republican party is his course in the Panama Canal question. [Applause on the Republican side.] It was not unduly precipitate. It was intelligent, wise, and characteristic of the Administration, developed in some part advised and recommended by the distinguished Secretary of State, than whom we have had no better, more clear-headed Secretary of State within the memory of living man. [Applause on the Republican side.]

And the people of the United States are in favor of the men who did it. If you want to be wise, you must not drive the rank and file of the American people to vote for Roosevelt because of his action on the Panama Canal, and that is what you are likely to do. He will be nominated by acclamation, and among the strong arguments that we shall make in his favor will be two things: First, when you say he is overstrenuous, overactive, overimpetuous, we will ask you, "What has he done?" Name the thing now. Where was he overimpetuous? What public act of Roosevelt would you criticise to-day on the stump of the United States? What act has he done that the Republican party can not indorse in its convention and the people of the country can not indorse at the polls? [Applause on the Republican side.] What is it? There is not any such act.

He promised at Buffalo to execute the policy and principles adhered to by William McKinley. I challenge any man—not to get up and interrupt me now—but I challenge him to take time and come here and tell me and tell the American people what principle, what act, what policy of McKinley, Roosevelt has not executed. And when we go to the American people and say to them, "You [illegible] you [illegible] McKinley," [illegible] "You must condemn the policy of the Administration in the Panama question, you [illegible] world because of the Panama question, you [illegible] yourselves in a dilemma that I hope you will never get into." [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I observe that the official correspondence [illegible] knowledge of the revolution was possessed here before it was [illegible]

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not care——

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. What I want to ask the gentleman is [illegible] he might be able to throw some light on [illegible] its knowledge of the revolution from Panama first—I mean, whether there was any official correspondence sent to the State Department from Panama before this message was sent from the State Department to the Panama advising that a revolution had occurred or was about to occur?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I did not get my information in that way. I got my information in July. I read it again in the London Times of the early days of September, that there was in motion an element in Colombia sure to result in revolution in Panama if that treaty was defeated, and I believed it, and I believe the gentleman now believes it; and whether the President of the United States heard of it first or not, I do not know. Where he got his information I do not know. But I will tell the gentleman from Kentucky one thing. Roosevelt may be impetuous and he may be strenuous, but he is honest, he is truthful, and he would not lie, even under the pressure of the Senate of the United States. [Applause.] Whatever he says about the matter I implicitly believe, and so do 10,000,000 voters of the American people, as they will show the gentleman in good time.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I wish to say that I have the utmost confidence in the President's integrity and I have asked these questions simply to get information, if it were possible to elicit it from the gentleman.

Mr. GROSVENOR. So much talk has been made about it—so much has been said about it that it is becoming tiresome. Every gentleman who can get an audience anywhere commences to read a great lot of telegrams and official papers. I have no doubt that the President, keenly alive to his duty, on the alert with an ability of alertness second to no man on earth, heard the reverberation of the forthcoming revolution at Panama long before it took shape in the formation of the provisional government.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I simply wanted to know what brought the business that first message, sent, I believe, by Assistant Secretary Loomis.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The long experience we had of the treachery of those South American fellows down there was a warning to the President to be on the alert and attend to business; and my friend from Kentucky would stand here to-day to condemn him if he had waited twenty-four hours and injury had come to our cause down there, because it is our cause as well as the cause of civilized nations.

Mr. SIMS. May I interrupt the gentleman with a question? I never did it before in my life.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I shall be delighted to hear the gentleman's question.

Mr. SIMS. I am afraid you might think I did not pay proper attention if I did not ask you a question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman need not give himself any concern on that.

Mr. SIMS. Now, seriously, I can understand how every Republican and every Democrat who believes the Administration has done nothing wrong should advocate the ratification of the treaty. I think that is consistent, and think they ought to; but I want to know how the man, Republican or Democrat, can reconcile his position when he gets up here and tells us that the course of the Administration was equivalent to a crime, but that he wants to ratify the treaty and thereby get the benefit of the fruits of the crime.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, that is the old cry. The gentleman has had a great deal of experience in the courts of the country, and if he has had an unfortunate tramp accused to him by the [illegible] of the court to defend for the presence on his person of a stolen watch or something of that kind, the gentleman knows how he [illegible] gave it to him and puts the [illegible] himself. I think that every American who votes to build the Panama Canal to appropriate the money and who stands by the Government in the action of the Government, [illegible] the Government for [illegible] the world [illegible] law of the world. That is what I [illegible]

Mr. SIMS. I want to ask this further question, as the gentleman [illegible] If the gentleman from Ohio himself believes that the conduct of the Administration was a crime, he knows I will vote against ratifying the treaty, if he had an opportunity.

Mr. GROSVENOR. [illegible] of a [illegible] now constituted [illegible] believe it.

Mr. SIMS. I do not mean that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, the Republican party will [illegible] in the long run, sooner or later, the merchant marine and the navies of the United States will go triumphantly through the Panama Canal, and all the people of the country will say, "Hallelujah!" and Roosevelt's name will stand high up on the scroll of fame for his part in this magnificent international act. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD a very carefully written and wholly [illegible] regard to our foreign and interstate commerce. I ask to extend my remarks for that purpose. It was furnished by Hon. O. P. Austin, of the Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Commerce.

Mr. THAYER. Not objecting at all, I wish to ask. Has it anything to do with this question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, yes; it shows the value of the canal.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the line indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Address delivered before the Rochester (N. Y.) Chamber of Commerce, by [illegible] statistics of the Department of Commerce.]

[illegible] you, and I can assure you that this fact was to him a [illegible]

[illegible] country. But the exacting duties [illegible]

When we consider that our country has now an area equal to that of all [illegible]

[illegible] who organizes and directs the work of a new Department of Commerce and Labor.

[illegible] said he to me on leaving, "that I very [illegible] duties here that leave me to ask them to excuse me on this occasion."

And while you are thus, by force of circumstances, deprived of his presence and of what he might say if here, I want to quote to you just a few words from his first annual report, which will indicate the broad view which he takes of the prospective work of the Department of Commerce and Labor and of the subjects with which it must deal—the commerce and industries of the nations of the world. In that report he said:

The Department was not established to control the energies of the people. By furnishing them with needed information, it can help intelligence and self-reliance to put forth efforts in trade with the best results. This will be [illegible] as they are found and will be shown in a [illegible]

[illegible] to give an early showing from its conscientious and untiring [illegible]

DEVELOPMENT OF OUR COMMERCE.

And now, having said what seems proper on such an occasion regarding [illegible] past and some suggestions of what this accomplishment means for the future might not be inappropriate.

A MOVING PANORAMA OF THE WORLD'S COMMERCE.

THE GREATNESS OF GREAT FIGURES.

[illegible] hour after hour, day after day, as fast as he can count them, and yet during that at the end of thirty-one working days he has only counted 1,000,000. But that is only one beginning of the measurement of great figures; for if this man were to go on counting silver dollars at the same rate of speed for ten years he would find that he had only counted [illegible] of them, and that to count a million dollars would require twenty years [illegible] steadily work at the rate of eight hours per day during every working day of every year of the ten hundred and twenty years.

So when I begin to talk to you of billions of dollars in the measurement of our commerce or that of the world, please remember that a million is a thousand thousands and a billion is a million millions, and that even the [illegible] our commerce or goods are not money [illegible] are approaching.

Our best—indeed, our only—method of foretelling the future is by a study of the past. If we want to know what kind of a [illegible] are to be our competitors in the world's [illegible]

Before he [illegible] the question with reference to the markets of the world, I want to call your attention to the fact that the home market is the most important one we have. [illegible] which we have [illegible] a population now increasing at the rate of nearly [illegible]

[illegible] I want to call your attention to the fact that the home market is the most important one we have. [illegible] about [illegible] the home market. [illegible]

WHITE HOUSE, February 1, 1904.

BURNETTA B. LEHMANN.

By unanimous consent, on motion of Mr. RIXEY, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Burnetta B. Lehmann, Fifty-seventh Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BOWERSOCK, indefinitely, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT.

And then, on motion of Mr. HITT (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. BROWN of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10869) to appropriate a portion of the proceeds of the sales of public lands to the endowment of schools or departments of mines and mining in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts," and for other purposes, being a further supplement to said act, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 646); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10741) for the relief of Mrs. Mary Tate, of De Soto County, Miss., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 647); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CALDERHEAD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10682) granting an increase of pension to Marion Arnold, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 648); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PRAYERS.

The Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD EVERETT HALE, said:

The heavens are thine, O God, and thine also is the earth; the Lord thy God, which [illegible] heaven and earth, the sea, and all that therein is, and preserveth them all, and the host of heaven worshipeth thee.

Lord, let this be true.

Rabbi JULIUS PHILIPSON, of Cincinnati, Ohio, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Father of us all, in the presence of the manifestations of Thy wonderful greatness we humbly bow the head and prostrate ourselves. Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of Hosts; full is the whole earth of Thy glory.

We thank Thee for every noble thought that has been thought, for every unselfish deed that has been performed, for every inspiring word that has been heard among men. We thank Thee above all for the clear appearance of some, the promised land of these latter days, the new Canaan, where modern prophets have prophesied that the last struggle of man should be fought by Thy chosen instruments on earth, where some have seen that point to the great universal brotherhood and peace, the hope of all the great souls of the race. To these ideals may we all remain true. May those who grasp the helm of our ship of state be constantly mindful of the high mission of this American people among the nations of the earth to stand as the exemplar of justice, the protector of the weak, the foe of all unrighteousness, the scorner of all wrongdoing, the lover of peace. So imbue all with these ideals that our dear land may stand to the very end as the refuge of all those oppressed elsewhere, the sanctuary of liberty, the haven of peace.

May Thy blessing rest upon this place, this holy place of the liberties of our people. May Thy blessings rest upon the President, his counselors and advisers; upon all those intrusted with the guardianship of our rights and liberties. May peace and good will [illegible] among all the inhabitants of our land. May religion spread blessings among us and every good purpose in [illegible] that from one end of this great land to the other [illegible] the glorious refrain, Praised be the Lord God from everlasting to everlasting. Amen.

The Chaplain recited the Lord's Prayer, as follows:

Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth, as it is done in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil, for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I ask that Senate resolutions be laid before the Senate, in order that I may submit a few remarks.

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope that the Senator will not interrupt the regular order, which is the bringing over from a previous day of the unfinished business.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I have no disposition to interfere with any Senator's convenience, and if it suits the Senator from South Carolina not to yield to me specially at this time, I will make my remarks as soon as I can get a hearing.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator wishes to make a speech, of course I would [illegible] but I think the business before the Senate is an important business, and I think we can dispose of it in a little while. I should like to call it up.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I am informed that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] gave notice that he would speak this morning. I was not aware of that. I will adapt my convenience to that of other Senators. I only want to be heard when no one else desires to take the floor.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I will not consume much of the time of the Senate in what I have to say, and if it is entirely agreeable to the Senator I will proceed in accordance with my notice of last night.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. If not, I will yield to him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will allow the morning business to be completed. It is not yet completed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. DRYDEN submitted an amendment providing for a secretary to the legation at Copenhagen, Denmark, at $1,000 per annum, intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McCOMAS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,396.28 to pay the Chesapeake Bank, of Baltimore, Md., the amount found to be due said bank by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue under the act of Congress approved February 28, 1901, for internal revenue taxes illegally collected; intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SCOTT submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salary of the consul at Ciudad Porfirio Diaz, Mexico, from $1,000 to $1,500 per annum, intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $4,558.45 to pay Julius A. Kaiser the amount disallowed by the accounting officers as a difference between active duty pay of a commissioned assistant engineer and retired pay of a first assistant engineer from October 21, 1895, to July 8, 1898, while on the active list of officers of the Navy; intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CULBERSON. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me, to the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, and ask that it may be read and lie on the table.

There being no objection, the amendment was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. CULBERSON to H. R. 9561 making urgent deficiency appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for prior years, and for other purposes, viz:

At the end of the bill insert the following:

"SEC. [illegible] That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to make such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture for the inspection of meat and meat products for exportation to foreign countries, and for the issuance of certificates of such inspection, and for the collection of such fees as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture for such inspection, and such fees when collected shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States."

RECESS APPOINTMENTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired, and the Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Message from the President, by Mr. TILLMAN, in answering the resolution of the Secretary of the Treasury to send to the Senate the nomination and to the appointment of William D. Crum as collector of the port of Charleston, S. C.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I will be very glad indeed to have the message laid by the Senate on the table, but I have in view of the fact that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] have expressed a desire to be heard not anticipated by any disposition on their part to interrupt the business. I shall try to call up the resolution and have some action on it. If it be out of order then, but it can be done by unanimous consent, I shall request unanimous consent now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table for the present, then, without prejudice.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 2871) to incorporate the Mutual Investment Fire Insurance Company of the District of Columbia; ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 98) to provide for the removal of snow and ice from the streets across walks and gutters of the District of Columbia; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

RELATIONS WITH COLOMBIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate, at the request of the Senator from Indiana, the unfinished business.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 82, by Mr. BACON, favoring the recognition by the President of a treaty with the Republic of Colombia to secure to all nations an open and neutral route across the Isthmus between the United States and Colombia, following upon the recent revolution in Panama, etc.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, yesterday I listened to the speech of the honorable and distinguished senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], with much pleasure. There are some questions in it to which I would like to direct attention, but I think, under the rule of the Senate, treaties should be considered in executive session.

Mr. CULLOM. Especially as this is the rule.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. That is, as I understand it, the well-established rule. Therefore, what I may have to say in response to the remarks of the Senator from Alabama will be said when the Senate shall be sitting in executive session.

I believe in the wisdom of the rule which requires the consideration of treaties with our neighbors in executive session, and so far as I am concerned I will not intentionally violate that wise rule of the Senate while I am in the Senate. I am sure

Mr. President, it is not my purpose to consider particularly at the present time the resolution before the Senate, but rather to discuss the larger questions arising out of recent events in Colombia. I may say, however, that I cannot agree that the adoption of the resolution is premature, and differences which can not be adjusted through the usual diplomatic channels. Political questions are not such as are continuous prior to the determination of arbitral proceedings. The Secretary of State notified the special envoy from the Colombian Government that the good offices of the Government of the United States would be used with Panama, if desired, to secure an adjustment of claims of a national order which might now be put forward against the other, but he positively refused to submit to arbitration the alleged questions between the United States and Colombia. His refusal was distinctly put upon the ground that such questions are essentially political, and therefore not within that class of questions which are respecting government's own property subject to arbitration.

Mr. President, the questions growing out of affairs in Panama are important and deserve earnest consideration. The opposition sharply challenges the wisdom of the recognition by the Administration in dealing with the Republic of Colombia and the new Republic of Panama. Many phases of the Isthmian Canal question have been touched upon in the course of the debate; a debate which has been characterized by much earnestness and some manifestation of feeling.

We do not object because those who may disagree with us upon public measures or policies should criticise, for criticism plays a very important and beneficent purpose in public affairs. Measures and policies which can not successfully withstand opposition and criticism should not long receive our serious attention. There must be the utmost latitude of disagreement in republican government, for, out of the conflict of opinion, out of the collision of views, the most wholesome results will come.

We do not object because the popular government objection and criticism are sometimes inspired by the thought of mere partisan advantage. We do not object to even this manner of opposition. It has been practiced in from the foundation of the Government, and will continue throughout the future. It seems to me in the proposed debate that some of the criticism has been inspired by the exigencies of the political situation. I do not mean to suggest by this that some of the questions have not been raised in the utmost good faith, with the view of promoting in the best manner possible the construction of an Isthmian canal under conditions in entire harmony with the good name and best interests of the United States.

The larger question, which is before us is of unusual moment; it is of far-reaching consequence; it means much, not only for the future of the United States but for the entire civilized world. It should be considered upon the high level of national duty and national honor. It should be considered deliberately and in good temper, to the end that only that which is best may ultimately be done.

We are dealing with a situation, the essential facts of which are generally known. For months attention has been focused to [illegible] a widening [illegible] between the Isthmus of Panama. The [illegible] and [illegible] to be [illegible] to [illegible]. Although the situation gave far more [illegible] the [illegible] was made to obtain.

It was [illegible] that some decisive step was [illegible] Congress [illegible] by [illegible] Mr. [illegible] was to be m[illegible]

A [illegible] President to secure the [illegible] of the New Panama Canal Company [illegible] the President should proceed with the canal upon the Nicaragua route.

The [illegible] Hay-Bunau-Varilla treaty was laid before the Senate for its ratification. It [illegible] and [illegible] It was sharply opposed by those who favored the Nicaragua route. It was [illegible] to have been the creation of the Administration, with respect to the independence of the Republic of Panama. In due time the treaty was ratified and transmitted to the Colombian Government for its approval. The action of that Government was awaited with interest. The world looked on with great [illegible] as Colombia had but to give her approval of the proposed [illegible] transmitted by her minister at Washington and [illegible] the canal and the great work would proceed. Her disapproval would put the enterprise in peril or delay it indefinitely. But the concern of the United States and other countries was but slight when compared with the anxiety of Panama. The treaty which was approved by the Senate of the United States March 17, 1903, was laid before the Colombian Congress which assembled June 20 following.

Opposition to its ratification manifested itself early. Political parties undertook to make capital out of it. Our minister at Bogota informed the State Department before the close of the month in which we ratified it that there was strong opposition to the treaty. The party in power was [illegible] and [illegible] by a portion of the [illegible] press and by prominent [illegible] Marroquin administration.

As early as May 1, 1903, our minister informed the Secretary of State that—> [illegible] which perhaps very [illegible] [illegible] the effect that [illegible] the Government had a [illegible] [illegible] against the treaty on foreign markets. The [illegible] [illegible] that the price can be greatly augmented.

Three days later he wrote:

> All of the members of the Government are opposed to the [illegible] [illegible] * * * [illegible] [illegible] for our [illegible] [illegible] as the best means of preventing the success of these conspirators and to attempt to organize at once a strong [illegible].

This dispatch clearly shows that early in the consideration of the proposed convention the spirit of revolution was in the air.

The varying fortunes of the treaty are disclosed by the dispatches of our minister, a few of which I have selected from the many he sent.

On August 5, 1903, he advised the State Department that—

> It now appears that the treaty will not be ratified without amendment.

On August 7 he reported:

> The situation is tense just now and intense feeling is being manifested in the debates in the Senate. Apparently there is little prospect that the treaty will be ratified without modifications, but I must still hope that a better sentiment will be brought about before the end.

On August 12, 1903, he said:

> The treaty was [illegible] by the Senate to-day in its entirety. Confidential, [illegible] this is clear. There is still some hope. Wait for further advices.

On August 15 he became somewhat optimistic when he reported:

> [illegible] seems to have passed.

But on October 31 following he was obliged to report:

> [illegible] Evidence from the earliest consideration of the [illegible] would be made, not only to place [illegible] but the [illegible] made upon them. On September 5, Mr. [illegible] was informed that—
> [illegible] the treaty; fixing regulations governing purchase of pri[illegible]

The [illegible] at Panama [illegible] on. [illegible] property of the company [illegible] United States, to the great injury [illegible] Panama. Our minister advised the [illegible] Department on November 3 as follows:

> [illegible] member—

[illegible]

This is important [illegible] showing the total lack of appreciation at Bogota of the [illegible] of Panama. It all tended to inflame the minds of the people of that department and stir within them the spirit of revolution and [illegible].

Panama saw in the [illegible] at Bogota the possible loss of her long-desired [illegible]. The [illegible] the United States under the alternative provision of the Spooner law to adopt the Nicaragua route and leave the Panama enterprise to die. The wrongs and injuries which Panama had suffered and endured [illegible] the people. The general feeling of our [illegible] was [illegible]. Her history during most of the time since 1821 [illegible] one part of the Republic of Colombia is but a [illegible] of acts of oppression and [illegible] committed [illegible] authority. While existing as a department of a [illegible] Panama has been [illegible] a province, a [illegible] and [illegible] the Government at Bogota.

Millions of dollars have been wrung from her people first and last, and they have received no adequate return therefor. Monopolies in the necessities of life have been granted, and the revenue derived therefrom has gone to Bogota. Scores of [illegible] have been [illegible] and railroads [illegible] Panama have gone into the federal treasury, and [illegible] most [illegible] portion of it has ever been used for the benefit of that department.

For the [illegible] contributed to the Bogota treasury, according to a report of a new-paper correspondent received a writing from the Isthmus, there is not to-day in the whole State of Panama to-day a single bridge, street, plaza, public building, or other structure of public utility or comfort, the expense of which was borne by the Colombian Government."

From information I have derived personally from citizens of Panama, it is perfectly apparent that the conditions upon the Isthmus have long been intolerable, and revolution has seemed to be the only means of escape.

I have an extract from El Relator, published at Bogota shortly after the revolution, that constitutes an indictment against the Republic of Colombia without scarcely a parallel in the history of governments. It is impossible for the imagination to conceive a more despotic course pursued toward a province than the Bogota Government pursued toward the Department of Panama. The extract alluded to is as follows:

> We have [illegible] the high and [illegible] of that territory. Panama [illegible] free people—that of electing their magistrates, their legislators, [illegible] for the [illegible] of suffrage; we have [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] military province, and when this na[illegible] [illegible] people and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] now! The last [illegible]

What more natural than that the people of the Isthmus, in view of their past history, and the recent action at Bogota, should [illegible] to the parent government? What else was there left for them to do? Every sentiment of self-interest commanded them to take the step when they saw that the treaty was doomed to defeat. They took counsel of their own future welfare; they laid carefully their plans; there was no division of sentiment among them, and on the 3d of November, 1903, they moved as by a common impulse. They took possession of their own country, and set up their own independence. They were guilty of no barbarities; they avoided bloodshed, and treated their [illegible] with rare forbearance and kindly consideration.

Did the Administration inspire the revolution that it might [illegible] of her property upon the Isthmus? Such has been the virtual charge made. It has been made both by direct statement and innuendo. It is a grave and serious charge, and it is worth our while to pause and observe whether or not it is well founded in fact. From what we have observed of the history of Panama prior to the revolution the only wonder is that separation was so long postponed. No people ever had better warrant for renouncing allegiance to their government than had the people of the Department of Panama on the 3d of last November.

Notwithstanding the wrongs which they were obliged to endure, they would undoubtedly have continued to submit to the rule of Colombia if they had entertained hopes of a canal had been gratified.

Our Government was fully informed of the state of public feeling in Colombia, and it also knew the intense desire of the people of Panama for the prompt ratification of the treaty.

It was obvious from the beginning of the consideration of the treaty that a crisis was near at hand. On May 7, 1903, our minister said:

> [illegible] les are that when the measure (treaty) is presented to Con[illegible] [illegible] and the attempt to [illegible]

The treaty was rejected by the Senate on August 12, and three days later our minister reported:

> Since the rejection of the treaty on the 12th instant there has been an al[illegible] alarm and uncertainty in Bogota as to the future [illegible] of the United States.

On September 11 he further advised the State Department as follows:

> I have the honor to report that events of interest have taken place in [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] canal treaty not pass the Department of Panama would secure [illegible] and would be right in doing so.

On October 31 he said:

> The people here are in great anxiety over conflicting reports of secession movements in the Cauca and Panama.

As was foreshadowed at Bogota, as soon as Congress adjourned without ratifying the treaty, the Department of Panama revolted and set up her independence.

It becomes important in view of what has been said in opposition, to ascertain what our rights were, and what was done by the Government at the time of and subsequent to the revolution. The record is before us, accessible to everyone. The facts are spread before the world, and we may judge whether or not and was done, our officials acted in contravention of our [illegible] laws.

For nearly sixty years the United States has had very important rights across the Isthmus which were [illegible] 1846. By article 35 of the convention New Granada [illegible] stipulated—

> [illegible]

It further provided that—

> [illegible]

These treaty [illegible] United States a very substantial right and privilege, and that was the right and [illegible] and free transit across the Isthmus. The [illegible] the property and lives of the people of the United States [illegible] the Isthmus, which was [illegible] by many people who had not [illegible] from a state of savagery. [illegible] important. The United States has [illegible] to protect her own interests at all times and under all [illegible] when she entered into the enjoyment of the privilege granted by the treaty. Secretary Hay says:

> [illegible] United States * * * assumed and discharged, as I primarily [illegible]

The United States by the article above mentioned guaranteed the sovereignty of New Granada over the Isthmus. The generally accepted interpretation of the meaning and effect of this guaranty is that the United States did not undertake to maintain such sovereignty except against foreign powers; that she did not engage to protect her against overthrow by domestic convulsion.

Referring to this provision of the treaty, Secretary Seward said, in 1865:

> [illegible]

The effort to connect this Government with the revolution has been [illegible] tireless. The [illegible] has been applied in every direction in the quest of information which would support the charge of complicity of the Administration in the movement.

We must consider this subject not upon idle rumor or unfounded assertion, but from the record, which the Government has made. That record is written; there it stands irrevocable. By it, and by it alone, the Administration must be judged. As for myself, I shall accept the record as it has been made by the executive department and submitted to the Congress unless it is impeached by something more conclusive than vague suspicion, unsupported assertion, and wild conjecture.

In the ordinary administration of the affairs of the Government it is necessary that each of the three departments should repose trust and confidence in the acts of the others performed within

The Republic of Panama has succeeded New Granada. Colombia, upon the latterness and it follows that her sovereignty is effectually guaranteed by the United States against alien invasion.

It has been urged repeatedly that there has been and is no response in Panama with [illegible] to enter into a valid convention with the United States. [illegible] a written constitution [illegible] of the Republic of Panama [illegible] days of the revolution [illegible] exercising a government [illegible] cannot be a people can [illegible] Any form of government which for the time being expresses the purpose of the people of Panama [illegible] into a treaty compact with [illegible] representative of the people in the [illegible] may be a republic in fact or in name. It may be a [illegible] or a kingdom, or it may be of any form of government which the people can choose. Many [illegible] constitutions in use at this moment [illegible] the people of Panama [illegible] years of their [illegible] existence. There is, so far as we are advised, no constitution.

Under these circumstances [illegible] we are [illegible] with a responsible power and which [illegible] the United States. It may [illegible] sessions for an interoceanic canal [illegible]

There [illegible] Nicaragua and Panama [illegible] the Administration [illegible] is not [illegible] because [illegible] of the law, the President was [illegible] to [illegible]

It is unnecessary to recite [illegible] to permit the Government to [illegible] of the Congress was [illegible] of the former. It is obvious however that if Congress had [illegible] that the Panama Government [illegible] would have [illegible] disadvantage in negotiating terms with the Colombian Government.

It was very [illegible] that in the event suitable terms could not be obtained [illegible] Nicaragua route would be adopted. It was suggested at the time by some members as a [illegible] that [illegible] a difference of little difference which was [illegible] It was but [illegible] time the Spooner law was enacted that the Panama Canal was the preferable [illegible] to any other, and that the utmost [illegible] made effort should be made to secure its construction.

In what has President has done in endeavoring to secure the Panama route he has acted within the letter and spirit of the Spooner Act. What is a "[illegible]" [illegible] by the act? In the case of the law it [illegible] Congress [illegible] in the [illegible] case. What would be a "[illegible]" [illegible] Within the [illegible] Congress [illegible] been [illegible] of the Spooner act [illegible] the Congress [illegible] to be authoritatively considering the practical [illegible] of the act.

[illegible] were [illegible] in the Walker [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] Congress [illegible] and [illegible] purpose of the [illegible] states. Where the report was [illegible] Congress [illegible] that [illegible] [illegible] law, under which the President was [illegible] [illegible] the duty of negotiating a treaty with Colombia. The [illegible] were [illegible] the proposal and [illegible] to a conference with the Panamanian delegates. The Senate ratified the treaty. It was submitted to the Colombian Congress for its approval [illegible] was rejected. Almost [illegible] within less than a year after the passage of the Spooner bill.

When the Colombian Congress rejected the treaty that did not [illegible] the door to further effort to carry out the [illegible] of Congress in the construction of the Panama Canal. It delayed but did not necessarily defeat the accomplishment of the Congressional desire. It did not relieve the President from persisting in any reasonable effort still to secure it. The subject is a large one and must be dealt with in a large way. [illegible] treaties between governments upon important subjects is at best a tedious process. No body in the world is more [illegible] with this fact than the Senate of the United States. In many instances [illegible] the constitution and [illegible] Congress with [illegible] of our laws [illegible] dealing with the [illegible] we are familiar. The advantages [illegible] Nicaragua route [illegible] much superior that we could [illegible] the expenditure of much more time [illegible] Panama and going to Nicaragua when the Congress of Colombia rejected the treaty. He has been on the [illegible] clearly within the intendment of the act.

There are several conclusions which the record seems to establish. They may be summarized thus:

The revolution by the people of Panama was due to a long series of wrongs inflicted upon them by the Government at Bogota and more particularly to the rejection of the Hay-Herran treaty.

The revolution was [illegible] by the people of Panama and was [illegible] by them.

[illegible] of the [illegible] not such measures as he [illegible] the protection of the property of Americans [illegible] of transit across the Isthmus.

[illegible] so observed that the United States has done very [illegible] on the [illegible] of Panama. In [illegible] governments succeeding in Panama would enjoy [illegible] away and be gone forever, but the canal—the rich fruit of four centuries of [illegible] human effort, the colossal tribute of our people to the commerce of the world—will stand. Yes, we can well believe that it will survive the pyramids.

Mr. CLARKE. Mr. President, I do not intend to address the Senate in support of the general proposition that an isthmian canal [illegible] by the United States Government. This [illegible] out of the domain of discussion. It is no longer [illegible] the policies of the country as a matter of [illegible] quickly recognized this as the proper attitude of the Government from the section from which I come. This condition of opinion is [illegible] small degree to a knowledge of the fact that our people [illegible] are discussed at such great length and in such com- [illegible] that it will serve no useful purpose to restate them now. For the present, further progress toward the actual construction of the canal must be postponed. The United States [illegible] the line of [illegible]

[illegible] in considering what course it is proper to pursue, it [illegible] necessary to consider (1) the competency of the [illegible] into the contract, and (2) the terms and provisions [illegible] submitted for approval by the Senate.

[illegible] the present treaty do not [illegible] to the United States [illegible] way of mere donation, it does [illegible] in the liberality of [illegible] any that we have heretofore been able to secure for [illegible] the Hay-Herran treaty providing for the [illegible] canal upon the [illegible] terms [illegible] able to the United States, not the [illegible] the Senate and the country. On the [illegible] seems to be no dissatis- [illegible] and were returned to the ship after accomplishing [illegible]

[illegible] the Republic of Panama to [illegible] more dispute, and this presents, directly and indirectly, the chief cause of division and consequent opposition.

That actual recognition has been extended to the Republic of [illegible] by the President of a minister from this Government to Panama is not and will not be denied. That it has taken place in accordance with the forms of law prescribed in such cases is also a [illegible] (Cf. [illegible] v. [illegible]) [illegible] ly and independently in those departments of Government which are said to be political; that is to say, the legislative and executive branches. I think it may be safely asserted that the [illegible] Court of the United States is that it will [illegible] as far as it is called upon to deal with [illegible] by the President or [illegible] of the opinions of that court [illegible] are to be found [illegible] If any question [illegible] the legislative [illegible] departments of the Government to convey the [illegible] that it was to be exercised by these acting in [illegible] limitations upon the power of [illegible] in which [illegible] the legislative branch of the Government [illegible] any part in making the recognition which was deemed sufficient to give to the new government the status of a [illegible] in that court or the existence of which was made an element in the rights of any litigant who resorted to that tribunal for their [illegible] This statement of the doctrine of the Supreme Court is not different from that in which Andrew Jackson and [illegible] acted upon as being a proper method in which the right of recognition is to be exercised.

On June 18, 1838, referring to the matter of the independence of Texas, Mr. Clay, in a report from the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations (S. Doc. No. 406, 24th Cong., 1st sess.), said:

> [illegible] an independent power may be made to the United States in two ways. First, by treaty, [illegible] the purpose of a [illegible] commercial intercourse between the [illegible] Secondly, by [illegible] agent [illegible] with the power [illegible] and ascertaining a diplomatic representative from [illegible] which would be a recognition as far as the Executive [illegible] competent to make it. In the first and third modes the concurrence of [illegible] Senate in the exercise of its capacity would be necessary, and in the second in its negative character.

The Senate alone, without the concurrence of some other branch of the Government is not competent to recognize the independence of any power.

The President of the United States, [illegible] charge of their foreign relations, [illegible] to other governments [illegible] and [illegible] of the United States [illegible] for business which [illegible] government. If [illegible] the President should [illegible] in the [illegible] of Spanish America.

Together with this report a resolution was submitted to the Senate from the Committee on Foreign Relations that was as follows:

> Resolved, That the independence of Texas should be recognized by the United States whenever [illegible] shall [illegible] performing the duties [illegible] independence.

President Jackson, in approving this resolution, expressed his satisfaction with the course taken, and said that it was entirely proper for the legislative branch to [illegible] which in its judgment it felt it to be expedient for the Executive to consider in connection with the discharge of public duties.

On July 1, 1836, this resolution being in debate in the Senate, Mr. Webster said he was willing to go so far as to vote funds to enable the President to send out a proper minister, but against a direct recognition by the act [illegible] because it was the proper function of the President to take the lead in this matter.

In a debate in the House in the following year John Quincy Adams said (February 27, 1837) he objected to the proposition before the House on the ground that the act of recognition of a foreign power had heretofore always been a function of this Government. It was the business and duty of the President of the United States, and Mr. Adams was not willing to set the example of giving that recognition on the part of the legislative body without the concurrence of the Executive.

It will thus be seen that Presidents Jackson and Mr. Clay agreed that while the power of recognition by the President was implied in the power to receive foreign ministers, and that if he should exercise the power without invoking the aid and support of the legislative branch, his action in that respect would be beyond question, yet it was conceded that where the [illegible] legislative branch to assume responsibility for the recognition of a new government, in advance of the President being satisfied that it was prudent and proper to do so, a suggestion from the Congress that if the President should through the regularly constituted channels, extend recognition, he would be supported by the legislative branch in any consequences that might ensue, was not only not an offensive suggestion, but one within the competence of Congress to make. This I take it, Congress could do in connection with any duty which the President is called upon to discharge where the public peace and welfare might be involved in his action.

In the present case the Republic of Panama has received the recognition of this Government through the act of the President in receiving her minister and in negotiating a treaty with her. This action on the part of the President, in my opinion, is not subject to review in any proceeding, directly or collaterally, connected with the ratification of the pending treaty. The recognition, no matter whether by the action of the Congress or the President alone, is the act of the Government of the United States and is to be respected and supported as such. The recognition is final, and the existence of the state is a fact to be accepted and this, to borrow a phrase from Bismarck, removes every direction and obscures every exception. Acceptance of our course in recognition by others of an [illegible] country does not [illegible] to [illegible] of justice, is shown in the action taken by other governments, as follows:

List of governments which have recognized the independence of Panama, with

United States	Nov. 6, 1903	Nicaragua	Dec. 18, 1903
France	Nov. 6, 1903	France	Dec. 2, 1903
Cuba	Nov. 6, 1903	Cuba	Dec. 2, 1903
Austro-Hungary	Nov. 6, 1903	Great Britain	Dec. 2, 1903
Germany	Nov. 20, 1903	Italy	Dec. 2, 1903
Denmark	Dec. 3, 1903	Japan	Dec. 2, 1903
Russia	Dec. 3, 1903	Costa Rica	Dec. 2, 1903
Sweden and Norway	Dec. 7, 1903	Guatemala	Dec. 2, 1903
Belgium	Dec. 9, 1903	The Netherlands	Dec. 2, 1903

The terms of the treaty being satisfactory and the technical competency of the parties to the contract being established, my support of this treaty would follow naturally and without further question. But it is suggested that while the recognition of the Republic of Panama may conform to the more formal of the law governing such matters, the facts which preceded it show such an utter disregard by the President and those acting under his orders of the cardinal principles of right and justice as to make it the imperative duty of every right thinking man to condemn his actions and to refuse to take any steps that can directly or indirectly be construed into a condonation of his course; that, while it is admitted that there is no issue pending in the Senate, and that none can be framed for consideration here by which this body can directly review that action, and it seems to have been inappropriately given to resist the status quo existing at the time it was established by the President, it is contended that there is an inherent necessity to be found in the power of the Senate to refuse to sanction treaties.

And it is earnestly asserted that the necessity and justification for this proposition are such as would seem to have prevented the framers of the Constitution from conferring upon the President the power to negotiate treaties, if they had foreseen the necessity for the exercise of the treaty-making power by the Executive and the ratification of such treaties by the Senate, as well as the necessity of a veto power, to which our governors of sovereignty and freedom is granted by the Senate's consideration, as well as by the well-recognized requirements of constitutional history.

This proposition is supported by Senators on this side of the Chamber [illegible] and I do not believe [illegible] of the Executive Power. I [illegible] I am [illegible] I should [illegible] as well as [illegible] I [illegible] by the [illegible] have by [illegible] [illegible] the same happens with the consideration of the matter has forced me to a look. [illegible] as I have been able to [illegible] I should oppose the ratification of the treaty on the grounds which have been stated in opposition to it.

I may [illegible] with some [illegible], but without [illegible] In consideration of [illegible] in opposition to the treaty I have felt [illegible] of giving to the President a [illegible] which have been [illegible] of necessity to the adoption of my course. The latest account for the fact that I [illegible] proper to go over the road so somewhat [illegible] many aspects of the case that have been so satisfactorily dealt with by others [illegible] I have no [illegible] I [illegible] in bringing [illegible] I [illegible] in the arguments [illegible] I [illegible] upon the [illegible] as the [illegible] to the proposition [illegible] to the treaty [illegible] by the President.

I say, without hesitation, that if I had found myself convinced the existence and recognition of Panama to be the result of a conspiracy, excessively or knowingly formed, by the direction or with the connivance of the President, I should vote against the ratification of the treaty regardless of its merits. And at this point I take occasion to say that I do not find it to be necessary to conclude in order to the approval of every act done by the present occupant of the White House since he first began [illegible] to really the Hay-Varilla treaty, nor does it follow that I [illegible] in the [illegible] I may [illegible] of [illegible] approved the Administration. My duty and [illegible] to [illegible] to this one matter and the support [illegible] comes to me for action. I say, as I have said, that I have been [illegible] to bring myself to the [illegible] the consideration of an enterprise in which my State, in common with the entire country, is vitally interested.

When I consider the whole facts of the transaction, its history and [illegible] of those who have been and [illegible] which finally led the President prompt to action [illegible] the great purpose to [illegible] the [illegible] and to greatly [illegible] people by giving [illegible] ests and [illegible] results while [illegible] prior a [illegible] ious and [illegible] of Colombia—I [illegible] these [illegible] temperament [illegible] to harsh [illegible] but I am entirely [illegible] say this in what is actually [illegible] for [illegible] the power and [illegible] in less as to warrant me in repudiating his act by voting to reject the treaty.

To the well informed and conservative observer of passing events, and of the persons [illegible] therewith, the wonder is not that he did so much to give free rein to the inherent spirit of revolution always rampant in Panama, but it rather excites wonder that he did so little in that direction. When the President comes to consider, in quiet retrospect, the events of the past three months, I do not doubt he will feel like [illegible] and Warren Hastings, when [illegible] fronted with a [illegible] of his [illegible] in the Far East, said:

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] of government [illegible] which it is [illegible] nor. As indicating the character of the Colombians [illegible] I read an extract from the inaugural address of President [illegible] on August [illegible] 1903 [illegible] having overthrown and imprisoned President San[illegible]:

[illegible] of [illegible] he [illegible] any other country, viz.: "I [illegible] Colombians [illegible]

In his message to the special session of Congress which convened on [illegible], 1903, to consider the canal treaty, speaking in [illegible] said:

[illegible] less than the [illegible] of Panama [illegible] the welfare.

He [illegible] of a [illegible] 1902, [illegible] of the North [illegible] F. A. Mendez [illegible] stering affairs in [illegible] Republic of Panama [illegible]

[illegible] that seemed to signify his acceptance of the candida[illegible]

[illegible] and [illegible] 1903, [illegible] honorable, and moral [illegible] under the [illegible] that time refused to resign the government into [illegible] ruins, there issues the haggard form of distress in the wretched garb of [illegible] with which we are now afflicted is the consequence of that [illegible]

[illegible] while a vacuum was being formed around the Vice-President [illegible] years.

[illegible] of [illegible] he [illegible] of prominence in affairs until he was [illegible] revolution. Under the heading "A Colombian view of the Panama Canal question," Raul Perez says:

[illegible] Colombia would receive as the only compensation is [illegible] quite.

He was referring to the $10,000,000 proposed to be paid to Colombia under the rejected Hay-Herran treaty, which was then [illegible]

[illegible]

We are not required to form our opinion alone from what these Colombians say of their Government's [illegible] authority, and the motives which inspire its action—but we have the corroborative of one who [illegible] and whose ability to state in clear and forceful terms what he saw can not be excelled. I refer to the Hon. William L. Scruggs, who for some time represented our country as our diplomatic representative at several of the governments in Central and South America. He has recorded his observations in a book, published a few years since in this country. He says that party conflicts, as they are understood in this country, are wholly unknown there; that the division among the people is not along lines which are [illegible] to be better able than another to a [illegible] in the interest of the people; but that strife is the result of a struggle between factions and leaders for the aggrandisement of the personal fortunes of those who affiliate for the time being and at the sacrifice of the public interests, that no thought of the public weal are entered into any of the conflicts, nor is it even pretended that such is the case.

He says that during the thirty years intervening from 1829 to 1861 there were seven successive constitutions, all of which were successively overthrown by revolutionary leaders who, in turn, took [illegible] as a [illegible] for engaging in revolts that [illegible] were so frequent that there were not two years of peace and tranquillity during the entire thirty years; and that during this period the condition of public order was exceptional, and that civil war was the rule; that the constitution of 1876 remained in force for twenty-two years before the book was written, and that during that time there were seven or more eleven revolutions [illegible] a minority of those who [illegible] power [illegible].

[illegible] under circumstances like these, there was no [illegible] for the people to progress in the intellectual and material improvement [illegible] condition to-day is worse [illegible] than that in which [illegible] years ago.

Mr. Scruggs gives an account of how these numerous revolutions were [illegible] and the means by which soldiers were enlisted [illegible] that cause. They usually came about [illegible] with the holding, or the [illegible] of the result, [illegible] although there occurred many times when the [illegible] were [illegible]. In some of these wars the alleged pretext is [illegible] in which [illegible] is held, he says:

[illegible]

Lieutenant-Commander Colver, of the war ship Roosevelt, in a communication to the Secretary of the Navy, dated Colon, December 13, 1902, says, among other things, of these Colombian [illegible]:

The [illegible] Forty per cent of [illegible] and poverty [illegible]

I have presented this recital of conditions in Colombia with no desire to be [illegible] a people who are so [illegible] situated, but for the purpose of showing the kind of people who constitute that Republic, and who create its public opinion, thus affording some idea of the extent to which a moral obligation would be assumed by us upon them in compelling compliance in good faith with any [illegible] assumed on their behalf. We may [illegible] and justly estimate the conduct of those who have dealt with them in a manner somewhat more arbitrary than would be permissible under other and different conditions. The consideration of every particular case is its character as being right or wrong. What would be a proper negotiation, or a proper denial of a negotiation, with one of the greater governments of the earth, where reciprocal good faith is assured in advance, would not be a condition made up by precedent politicians such as are there described by evidence that never has been contracted and never can be.

I am not to be misunderstood by this as saying that we should appropriate to ourselves, or by greater competency assist others to appropriate that which rightfully belongs to another, however wanting in honesty and intelligence that other may be. Our Government owes it to our own people to treat everyone justly and this not because we fear penalties for failing to do so, but because of the comfort that comes from the sense of having done right for its sake alone.

But in the important negotiations which she is required to conduct in carrying out the great purposes for which this Government was instituted among men she has a right to insist that those with whom she deals shall not make a mockery of her efforts by a course of duplicity and tri[illegible]. In her negotiations with Colombia she was not dealing with a commercial adversary who had the right to be independent to the extent of being whimsical.

For a proper understanding of the relations between the United States and Colombia it is necessary to advert to a few well known historical facts. These will indicate that at the time the Hay-Herran treaty was rejected by the Colombian Congress in August, 1903, matters had progressed too far for Colombia to claim an unrestricted discretion in dealing with the matter. By a long course of dealing and acquiescence the [illegible] sovereignty of Colombia had been diminished in the interests of her continued existence. For eighty years we have promulgated the Western Hemisphere from European aggression to what is known as the Monroe doctrine. Under this doctrine we declare and maintain that any attempt on the part of European governments to extend their systems to any part of this hemisphere will be dangerous to our peace and safety.

Colombia, in common with the other Central and South American States, has been protected from the casualties from foreign aggressions which this doctrine afforded them. But for this declared policy the continued revolutions and conflicts in Colombia would long since have passed her into the control of some one of the European governments. So jealous have we been of the Monroe doctrine that we have considered the project to build an isthmian canal by any foreign government to be within its scope. When the old Panama Canal Company became insolvent, and it was evident that the project was too gigantic for any private company to undertake in that remote, sparsely and disturbed section of the world, the French Government, our friend and friend, concluded to assume the project, and some [illegible] in the hope of saving something for the [illegible], who had invested and lost so much of their money. While the matter was under discussion in the French Assembly, the United States Senate, by a vote of 49 to 3, on January 7, 1889, passed the following concurrent resolution:

> That the Government of the United States can not, and does not, view with indifference any attempt by any European power to control the Isthmian canal connecting the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, and that the President of the United States should communicate the substance of this resolution to the governments of all nations with which the United States are accredited.
> That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate the sentiments of the Government of the United States to the governments of the commercial nations.

This resolution went to the House of Representatives and was reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs without amendment. It was accompanied by a report which the Committee on Interoceanic Canals of the Senate in the Fifty-second Congress, designated as a very learned and able report by Mr. McCREARY, of Kentucky, now an honored member of this Senate, on March 2, [illegible] at that session of Congress.

This resolution declared it to be a corollary to the Monroe doctrine that the [illegible] and maintaining a protectorate over any enterprise of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, that [illegible] protectorate, and control of any foreign government, that it was known that such a step or other arrangement necessary to protect it would be [illegible] to the United States and to the peace and safety of this hemisphere.

[illegible] at the Commercial congress in Chicago, which was followed by the [illegible] of the United States of various commercial [illegible] based upon our possession in the Chinese market. The Chinese authorities, while conceding to the [illegible] that [illegible] be permitted to [illegible] the [illegible] in a perfect security and freedom, the [illegible] the guarantee of [illegible]. [illegible] over the [illegible] to [illegible] the United States to [illegible] the [illegible] of the [illegible].

In the discussion of the subject which followed in the Chinese [illegible] it was stated that this country was necessarily interested in the aggression, and [illegible] by Great Britain over the Mediterranean, stating the fact that she had [illegible] over nations [illegible] would [illegible] advantages at the expense of the United States and other commercial nations seeking to carry on commerce to the south of us. This [illegible] was entered into by our Government, and for more than forty years we have extended to Colombia the protection that it contemplated. It is not predicated, by anyone that this treaty requires the United States Government to protect the sovereignty of Colombia as against the insurrections carried on by her own citizens. As a result of all these discussions of purpose on our part, and contracts entered into with Colombia, the latter was given a share of many of the attributes of sovereignty as we understand that term when it is applied to England, France, or other of the great governments of the world. To the extent that Colombia had it we granted it, and it amounted to a definite interest in the Isthmus.

Colombia's attitude thereafter was that of the owner of an article of property that was hers only in the sense that she was entitled to receive its value when disposed of, and that, in selling it, she should not be required to surrender her incidental governmental rights further than was necessary to vest the purchaser with the title and control necessary to make the purchase effective. This left the question as to how Colombia might utilize the Isthmus for canal purposes by constructing the canal herself or by authorizing a private corporation to do so. It goes without saying that Colombia is wholly without the resources to do so on her own account, and experience demonstrates the fact that available private enterprise and capital are wholly inadequate to the accomplishment of the purpose. The undertaking was of such magnitude and the locality in which it was to be carried on presented so many natural and political difficulties that the unlimited credit and authoritative powers of a great government were necessary in its accomplishment and successful operation.

Under conditions evolved by the past fifty years that government is necessarily the United States. Prior to 1902 the discussions in this country assumed that in consequence of the contiguity between Colombia and the French canal company that the Panama route was not to be taken into consideration in any effort that the United States might make to build a canal on her own account, and because of this the discussions related almost entirely to the advantages and disadvantages of the Nicaragua route. In 1898 a very formidable revolution broke out in Colombia, said to have been due largely to the fact that President Sanclemente had made an unauthorized extension of ten years to the Panama Canal Company. This revolution made such progress that in the year 1902 it was plainly evident that the Departments of Panama, Cauca, and Bolivar were quite likely to be able to maintain themselves as an independent republic. This is shown by the following letters from Admiral Casey, who was in charge of our forces sent to the Isthmus to protect the transit granted to our citizens and commerce under the treaty of 1846. I will read from a note written by the Admiral, dated on the 13th of October, 1902.

> [illegible] Department of State and Bureau of [illegible]
> [illegible] to inform the Department that I have [illegible] all an easy victim [illegible]

Again, on the 20th of October he wrote the following in a letter to the Secretary of the Navy:

> [illegible] existing and from information I am able to [illegible] speedy termination of this strife. [illegible]

That was on October 20. They were practically besieged by Herrera and his forces.

> Troops at neither place dare to go beyond their intrenchments.

They had Colombia hemmed in until her troops did not dare go beyond the intrenchments.

> [illegible] but as he came at[illegible] are apparently already [illegible] much.

In fact it became evident that the New Panama Canal Company never could [illegible] it had undertaken, partly because it was impossible to raise the money in the open market for carrying on an enterprise which [illegible] but which was rendered [illegible] of the country in which it was located. Colombia realized [illegible] that her only chance [illegible] save her boundaries from [illegible] that was to interest the United States in the Panama route. For this purpose her minister of war, Mr. Concha, was sent here nominally to take charge of the legation during the temporary absence of the regular minister, but really to cooperate with Cromwell, the attorney of the New Panama Canal Company, in the negotiation of a contract that would put an end to the revolution and at the same time enable the New Panama Canal Company to find a purchaser for its property and franchises and [illegible] the United States [illegible] of the Nicaragua route, which had become [illegible] by the passage of what is known as the "Spooner law" by the House of Representatives, providing for the construction of the canal on this latter route.

As a result of the efforts of Mr. Concha and others, which Mr.

Hay, Secretary of State, says were pressed for more than a year, on the 22d of April, 1902, the form of a treaty was entered into and signed on behalf of the respective Governments, by which the New Panama Canal Company was authorized to sell to the United States its rights and property, and the Government of Colombia agreed to accept from the United States $7,000,000 for the grants and franchises necessary for the construction and operation of the canal. An additional annuity was provided for in the contract signed, but the amount of this was to be determined on the basis of the profit derived from the operation of the canal, to be definitely fixed by arbitration.

In a communication sent by Concha after the protocol had been signed, he perpetrates the following act of characteristic Colombian disingenuousness, which becomes palpable when we recall that the sum of $10,000,000 was demanded a few months later for the very same grants and franchises then being offered for $7,000,000:

> Colombia has no hint of unjust gain through the construction of the canal [illegible] Here public in the matter [illegible] between the two countries that [illegible] a region on her territory and [illegible] property. The [illegible] asked by Colombia [illegible] in that they [illegible] a practical and [illegible] of her integrity.

This Hay-Concha protocol was to become operative as a treaty as soon as our Government should authorize its execution on our part. This was done on June 28, 1902, by the passage of what is known as the "Spooner law," by the provisions of which the President of the United States was authorized to acquire from the Republic of Colombia a strip of land not less than 6 miles in width, over which the canal was to be constructed, provided this territory could be acquired within a reasonable time, and if not, then negotiations were to be entered into with Nicaragua and Costa Rica looking to the construction of the canal on what is known as the "Nicaragua route." The Colombian Government pretended that it was not possible to assemble its Congress for the ratification of the Hay-Concha treaty as long as the revolution was in progress, and because of this the good offices of the United States, [illegible] to suppress the rebellion on a pretext of protecting the Isthmus, were invoked, as will be seen from the following letter received by our State Department:

> BOGOTA, September 11, 1902.
> SECRETARY OF STATE, [illegible]
> [illegible] for foreign affairs discloses me to inform you that his Government [illegible] to inform the Department that I have [illegible] all an easy victim [illegible]
> [illegible] continuance of war will delay [illegible]
> Minister for foreign affairs emphasized this last point as being well to present to your consideration.
> HART.

At that time this Hay-Concha protocol had been signed and was pending.

As a result of the intervention of the United States, on the 21st of November, 1902, the revolution under the leadership of General Herrera, composed just at a time when it was evident that no resistance that Colombia could interpose would prevent its triumph and the establishment of a new republic composed of Panama, Cauca, and Bolivar. The chief cause of the Herrera revolution was the [illegible] in Panama [illegible] by the Colombian Government [illegible] It was evident to the Panamanians that all hope of [illegible] the canal constructed in their territory was about to be [illegible], notwithstanding the superiority of the route, by the United States being [illegible] to adopt the Nicaragua route. In his letter to Admiral Casey, speaking of the proposition, as being considered into a national interest, one of the most vital to the life and prosperity of Panama. The very first stipulation in the treaty or compact entered into between the Colombian Government and Herrera for the termination of the revolution provided that the Congress of Colombia would at once take up and consider and dispose of the mattter of constructing the canal.

The dishonest and perfidious politicians who constituted the Government at Bogota had thus succeeded in putting down the revolution by aid secured on the promise to close the negotiations for the canal on the basis of the Hay-Concha treaty and then [illegible] that the United States had committed itself in a manner to the primary adoption of the Panama route and had, therefore, broken off all pending negotiations with Costa Rica and Nicaragua, repudiated the act of Concha in entering into the treaty and demanded that the terms of a new convention should be agreed upon. Our Government reluctantly acceded to this, and, on the 22d day of January, 1903, what is known as the "Hay-Herran treaty" was signed by the representatives, respectively, of Colombia and the United States.

Under the terms of this treaty the amount to be paid to Colombia was, without explanation, required to be increased from $7,000,000 to $10,000,000, and the annuity fixed at $250,000 a year, with the right of readjustment at every period of one hundred years. Other provisions were incorporated in the treaty, deemed by many to be unfair to the very limit of toleration to the United States Government. But so great was the anxiety on the part of Congress and the people to see actual work begin on the great enterprise that the treaty was ratified by our Government, notwithstanding the palpable imposition practiced by Colombia.

In the regular course the treaty was now transmitted to Bogota for ratification by the Colombian Congress. It is admitted by everyone that the treaty is more than fair to Colombia, both in the amounts that were agreed to be paid and in the concession of territorial rights to the United States. Not only is this the case, but every well informed man knows that the sum of money stipulated to be paid was in excess of the value of the franchise, taking into account the great amount of money necessary to be invested to make the franchise effective and the problematical character of the volume of business necessary to make the project a self-sustaining one, while the rights of compliance received were scarcely in excess of those which the landlord concedes to a tenant on a tract of his land. But, in addition to these material advantages the treaty secured to Colombia, its fair treatment by her was made a matter of duty by the sentimental relation growing out of dealings between the two countries for the past sixty years.

Therefore, in the acts of duplicity and unfairness manifested by Colombia in connection with the consideration and rejection of the treaty could only be taken as an act of cupidity, encouraged by the dishonest spirit which blinded its authors to the extent of their own rights and the natural and imminent character of their dangers. Even before the assembling of the Congress which was to consider the treaty a systematic scheme of blackmail and oppression was developed both as against the interest of the New Canal Company and that of the United States by the politicians of Colombia. As evidencing this fact, and as well showing the attitude of the representatives of Panama in threatening to secede in the event the treaty was not ratified, I make the following somewhat extended quotation from the official correspondence between our diplomatic agents in Colombia and our State Department.

It appears from the communication from Minister Beaupre, on April 7, 1903, after the treaty had been ratified by the United States Senate, but before the Colombian Government was notified of the fact of ratification, that the Bogota authorities had informed the railway and canal companies that it would be necessary to appoint agents to negotiate terms upon which these companies would be allowed to sell and transfer their property and concessions, as provided for in the first article of the treaty.

This is the first evidence of bad faith, since the very purpose of the first article of the treaty was to enable these companies to do the very thing that it was now sought to deny to them by these proposed negotiations.

The following extracts from the correspondence between Minister Beaupre and the State Department will show the duplicity and perfidy which characterized the manner of the Bogota Government in dealing with the ratification of the treaty:

Mr. Beaupré to Mr. Hay.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
[illegible]

[illegible] are well known, and he is reported [illegible]

[illegible] the feeling of opposition to Señor Obaldia's appointment was given expression by a resolution proposed by Senator Perez y Soto, to the effect that—

[illegible] passed by an almost unanimous vote.

Publicly avowed on the floor of the Senate and discussed in connection with the resolution calling attention to it, his appointment was perfectly well known to be the first step in a revolution if the canal treaty was not adopted. It was a settled and defined policy, in the declaration of which no sort of secrecy was practiced. It was stated upon the floor of the Senate; it was made the subject of a resolution and a vote there, and yet there are those who pretend to believe that it was instigated at a later day and elsewhere.

Panama had the right of revolution, and we did not confer it upon her, although we had frequently prevented her successful resort to it. We had the right of recognition, and we are not compelled to account to Colombia for the manner in which we exercised it.

The debate itself, though short, for it lasted under two hours, was one of the most important that has yet taken place during session. As I telegraphed yesterday, it was nothing more or less than a direct vote of censure.

It was said that Obaldia's appointment could have one, and only one explanation: that he was sent to the Isthmus to make necessary preparations for the presidential election—

Reyes was the candidate of the party with which Obaldia affiliated—and that other similar appointments had been made with the same end in view, which [illegible] designates to the Department of Bolivar [illegible] from to vince [illegible] general interests of the country for purposes of [illegible]

[illegible] Senator Caro, in a passionate and much applauded speech, warned [illegible] that should it persist in its present course, [illegible] revolution was not far distant [illegible] the general spirit of hostility shown [illegible] Senators themselves and by the [illegible] speech. There was [illegible] resolution opened the door to a general [illegible]

Here is another:

[illegible]

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that there is no [illegible] the Senate [illegible] that the minister for foreign [illegible] that the view [illegible] outlined to [illegible] the President [illegible] Senate [illegible] United States [illegible] upon receiving the President's message. (Mr. Beaupré to Mr. Hay, November 2, 1903.)

Senator Caro, in the course of an impassioned speech in the Senate assaulting the Marroquin government, said:

The [illegible] made by the Government was the appointment of Señor Obaldia to the governorship of the Department of Panama.

And he uttered a statement which ought to be emblazoned in golden letters on the walls of that Senate:

The only strength which a small nation has is its good faith.

* * * * * *

An effort was made by the Government to falsely place the blame for the rejection of the Hay-Herran treaty upon the notes addressed by this legation to the minister for foreign affairs, and the result was awaited in the belief that this view would be accepted by the Government of the United States. This attempt failed; the situation is disturbing; and now the further [illegible] quite apparently, for the purpose of awaiting the action of President [illegible] upon receiving the President's message. (Mr. Beaupré to Mr. Hay, November 2, 1903.)

The election of General Reyes to the presidency of Colombia meant the election of a Congress next year pledged to pass whatever canal treaty the Government should present. Senor Obaldia was therefore a supporter of the canal treaty of Congress, though, and it was for this reason that he was appointed governor of the Isthmus. Mr. Senor Obaldia was before Congress, however, and he was known to have said that, should the Department rise in favor of Government, he would be with Panama. Therefore the Government had a conscienceless purpose, challenged their possession of the Isthmus. He [illegible] to the Senate an extract from the New York Herald containing an interview with Governor Obaldia in which he is quoted as saying [illegible] stated, and in which Senor Obaldia said that, during his sojourn in [illegible] had several interviews with the Americans in order to learn what he had communicated these facts, which Mr Beaupré had doubtless transmitted to his Government.

The reading of this extract caused much confusion. Senator Carmack noted on that occasion the views of President Roosevelt and he thought it was certain he had no intention of adopting the Nicaragua route. It was the prime expectation of the present owners of the canal of United States Government who had events on the Isthmus were being watched. Newspapers [illegible] them for the first time [illegible] the power of the United States Government. Colombia was told that the concession of the canal was essential to the continued good [illegible] of the civilized world, and that she should not, therefore, stand in the way of an enterprise so undertaking. Hence, because of the [illegible] Colombia's sovereignty. But why he acted, and why it should be deemed a crime to deny the existence of a sovereignty. It was because the United States wanted the canal for themselves and not for commerce and civilization.

Beaupré to Hay.

OCTOBER 31, 1903.

Congress adjourned to-day. No action has been taken upon the act [illegible] the canal. Therefore nothing done than the vote of August 12 on voting treaty there.

The people here show great anxiety over conflicting reports of secession movements in the Cauca and Panama.

After the rejection of the treaty and final adjournment of Congress the Colombian Government in its official notification to this Government of the fact placed the rejection of the treaty upon the hyperstrained and unfounded ground that the provisions of the treaty invaded its sovereignty to such an extent as to threaten her territorial integrity. Here is the communication:

At the time [illegible] the treaty was signed by the Colombian plenipotentiary the country was in a state of siege.

Thus seeking to justify her unpardonable act by attempting to take advantage of the very fact which [illegible] in entering into the negotiations in April, 1902, when the Herrera revolution was about to succeed.

The country was in a state of siege; there was not any law giving authority [illegible] and the national representatives could not consider the matter.

No, of course not; simply because the minister for foreign affairs in his request sent through Hurtado on September 2, 1903, says that until the American people put down the Herrera revolution they would not call Congress together. That was the reason they could not consider it—and as the treaty involves the construction of public works on a large scale and the expenditure of a considerable part of the Treasury [illegible] the Congressmen who signed it [illegible] the face of the Constitution [illegible] a constitutional power of the treaty were [illegible] and political powers would be entirely [illegible] Congress would necessarily [illegible] the treaty [illegible] the Government [illegible] Congress [illegible] the Government [illegible] a treaty of this nature [illegible] convention or by a reforming act of the constitution [illegible] provided.

The Senate declared by the same resolution that it is natural to accept the terms in the contract [illegible] the Government [illegible] United States.

So far from this being true, it will be seen from the following provision that we had not only to guarantee her sovereignty to an extent that left us scarcely safe in our treaty [illegible] possession [illegible] and operate a canal, but she actually insists on our using it as a purpose to increase our territory at the expense of [illegible] or any of the sister republics in Central or South America.

Mr. SPOONER. From what is the Senator reading?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The Hay-Herran treaty, which was rejected by Colombia.

I now read Article IV of that treaty:

ARTICLE IV.

The rights and privileges granted to the United States by the terms of this convention shall not affect the sovereignty of the Republic of Colombia over the territory within whose limits the works, stations, and properties [illegible] are to be established.

The United States freely acknowledges and recognizes this sovereignty and assents that no claim of any kind based on any supposed exercise of sovereignty in the territory of the Republic of Colombia shall be made by the Government of the United States, nor shall any such claim be prejudiced by the exercise of the rights and powers conferred by this convention.

It appears from the foregoing extracts from the official correspondence that the Marroquin Government was either too corrupt or too badly intimidated to give to the intervention of the United States the support that her country [illegible] and the history of this particular transaction made it its absolute duty to do. On the contrary, we find him refusing to commit himself unequivocally to its support by declining to perform the perfunctory act of signing his name thereto, and this after he had authorized its negotiation and approved its terms. We find the executive officers addressing communications to the canal company, proposing levies of blackmail, which could only be successfully made by denying the authority to seal contained in the first article of the Hay-Herran treaty and for which the Colombian Government was compensated in the payment of $10,000,000 provided for; find them scheming to deny the validity of an extension of the ten years granted to the canal company to complete its project on the pain of forfeiture, in the hope that after committing this act of spoliation they would be able to dispose of the same to the United States and receive the $40,000,000 contracted to be paid the canal company.

We find in the debates that took place on the general question of the treaty, and the circumstances under which it was made, the expression of an utter want of confidence in the Government and a covert notification of a belief that the United States had complicated itself by the passage of the Spooner Act that it could not now go back to the Nicaragua route, and in consequence could be successfully blackmailed into paying an additional sum. Another large element in the Senate was so bitterly and [illegible] hostile to Marroquin and his administration that a purpose to undo him dominated all of its action and subordinated the desire to advance the public good to that of his obstruction. This element cared nothing for the interests of the United States nor the bad reputation for the want of good faith which Colombia would make by conforming her conduct to their suggestions. As Parez said in the article in the North American Review from which I have quoted, to them the amount of $10,000,000 was offensive; $50,000,000 would have been more so.

Just as I remarked a few moments ago, the recorded history of the entire transaction is evidence of the utter want of good faith upon the part of that Government; or, if its officers were acting in good faith, they were living in an environment that subjected them to the control of a despotism behind the throne greater than the throne itself; where the intrigues and cabals of politicians ostensibly had in importance the place of good and blinded the judgment of those who should have advised and protected a country of its rights and warned it of its dangers. They ought to have known, as one of the Senators stated upon the floor of the Senate, that the only protection for a weak nation is its good faith. They ought to have understood that the time for trifling with this great Government upon this great question had passed, that an offer had been made to them which contained every security which covered every value, which protected every right, which pandered to every whim—and Latin American vanity is prolific of these latter—that fairness and justice in its fullest limit had been tendered to them, and that their opportunity was now.

They knew, or ought to have known from their past experience, how ludicrously inadequate Government troops had proved on Panama, but upon every other Department of the Colombian territory. They knew that the Isthmus, outside of the canal and railroad interests there, was of no value whatever, being no greater part which is uninhabited. The Bogota Government knew, or should have known, that [illegible] the United States to Nicaragua, and therefore jeopardized the canal and railroad property values, a revolution would have quickly ensued. They did not have to go back very far in their history to learn this. It was repeated upon the floor of the Senate during [illegible] and there was not the slightest attempt or any body [illegible] denying or [illegible] that the treaty was not ratified another revolution would break out in Panama.

There is no fair [illegible] when it is considered in all its circumstances [illegible] the Hay-Herran treaty, and the [illegible] of the Colombian Congress [illegible] these in the [illegible] our historical and contract rights, but who will admit [illegible] of November [illegible] and not a theory [illegible] the antecedents of the United States. Desire to [illegible] Colombia what her officials should have had sense and patriotism enough to do for her—that is to say, by taking from her, without her consent, a canal strip on the Isthmus upon paying to her its fair and full value. But under existing and recognized modes of procedure we could not do this. But we could take the profits of what had actually transpired and observe with greater accuracy those rules which are the consequence of which must inevitably follow, ready to avail ourselves of any proper opportunities that circumstances might provide. The Colombian Government and the Colombian people had demonstrated an utter incapacity to know their own interests, or a want of will, courage to pursue them, that is amazing. Further negotiation on our part with Colombia was out of the question.

We were therefore warranted in a course of interested nonaction, having a right to assume that out of the chaos of inevitable revolution some adjustment would come that would approximate more nearly to justice than from the deliberations of the so-called Government of Colombia. We therefore stood at arm's length with Colombia. We accepted the situation. We had a right to say to her, in the homely language of the day, "You can paddle your own canoe. For the last fifty years we have been putting down insurrections on that Isthmus for you, looking to the time when it could be used for the construction of a canal to promote the commercial intercourse of the world. We have entertained negotiations at your invitation, in the progress of which we have provided ample and liberal pay for every right we sought to secure from you and respected every suggestion of territorial protection and sovereignty that you expressed. Now we are convinced, beyond the necessity of further enlightenment, of your utter want of that self-respect, coherence, stability, and civic pride that is necessary to constitute any people a government to be dealt with and respected. Now, go your way."

In saying this we had no right to imply that we had it in contemplation to ourselves to invade her rights, or by corrupt connivance aid others to do so, notwithstanding our abundant provocation. We still rested under our traditional duty of dealing justly and fairly with all. But when mere matters of favor are concerned we were restored to our absolute freedom in choosing the beneficiaries thereof. This we could well and justly say in the face of a full knowledge of what was going on on the Isthmus; not only what would go on there as the result of natural and local influences, but of what others might be encouraged to do as the result of assuming that this Government no longer intended to stand ready to suppress insurrections which the misgovernment of Bogota had made a necessity on Panama. These influences were sufficiently formidable to provoke a revolution against the Bogota Government, wholly regardless of any attitude of indifference that the United States might manifest.

In its last analysis the rejection of the Hay-Herran treaty and the continuance of the domination of Colombia over Panama meant that the United States Government would be forced to go to Nicaragua for a canal route. If this were done, the $40,000,000 to be paid for the canal property, as well as the value of the railway property, would be absolutely wiped out of existence. In all former revolutions on the Isthmus the influence of the promoters of these great enterprises was against revolution. Now a successful revolution was absolutely essential to their preservation. Fifty million dollars can mobilize a great many friends, particularly when it has its quarrel inst. The foundation for the obligation to support a government consists in the duty and willingness of the government to protect those who support it. And when by the disloyalty and criminal folly of governmental action it becomes evident that the very purpose for which governments are established among men is being defeated by the government itself, the right of revolution becomes a duty.

[illegible] Panama Canal necessarily require in their successful [illegible] many able men. That they had such it is unnecessary to go outside of these negotiations to be convinced. They and those with whom they cooperated had witnessed so many revolutions on the Isthmus that they knew every [illegible] to be consummated. This will account for the consummate skill as international lawyers they displayed in getting into possession of the Isthmus, the neutrality of which the United States Government was bound by solemn treaty to guaranty, by peaceable means, or, at all events, means that did not involve actual warfare. Thereafter they were [illegible] attack.

[illegible] it is doubtful if they ever contemplated that a [illegible] attack would be made upon them. They knew that as a result of the revolution of but a year ago, in which Herrera come [illegible] in resources and in military [illegible] was compelled to impress boys from 9 to 15 years to fill the ranks of her army. The promoters of the revolution also had reasons to believe that, since governmental mismanagement and oppression had destroyed the sentiment of pride and patriotism among the people, no plea that Colombia could make to them to suppress people in other sections seeking to rid themselves of the same oppression would meet with any response. It is, therefore, evident to any one familiar with the situation of affairs and the history of the Isthmus that, independently of the then known or prospective attitude of the United States, in the revolution on the 3d of November [illegible] Panama began operations under more formidable auspices than any of its predecessors.

I do not find it necessary to deny that I believe that the President of the United States knew what was taking place on the Isthmus or what was likely to take place there. If it is necessary to show [illegible] of events there he either had [illegible] his intelligence I maintain that this can only be done at the expense of his intelligence and sagacity, if not his fidelity to his duty. Every well-informed observer of public events knew it. It was the logical and necessary culmination of forces which the Colombians themselves had set at large. After the rejection of the treaty in the manner it was done we owed to the Colombians nothing and could afford to laugh when their calamity came. Our only duty in the premises was to ourselves, and that was to support the cardinal principles of right and justice, not among religiously from clandestinely or openly inflicting wrong upon her. That we did so refrain I have no doubt.

In what was done by the President and those acting under his orders irregularities may have occurred. I have no doubt. It is probably true that in some of the things done by the President he was, in the opinion of many, too hasty. It may be that in some things he displayed qualities which arouse indignation and subject him to criticism. But with his irregularities I have nothing to do. Others who stand nearer to him must take care of that. But with the fundamentals I must deal, because if I were convinced that he had been guilty of entering into a conspiracy to dismember that country, that fundamental fact would determine my course to vote against this treaty. So far as mere details and methods and incidents are concerned, they are matters for his friends to take care of and for his enemies to exploit as evidencing a tendency of character by which he is made to do wrong even when he seeks to do right. That is their business, and not mine.

Of course, an active conspiracy with the revolutionists or prior assurances of aid clandestinely given to them would constitute a fundamental violation of the principles of rights, and then to assume that after this had been done that the positive disclaimer contained in the President's message was untrue is to make a case of total depravity. Leaving out of the view the President's denial, not because I have any doubt about its sincerity, for I have none, the development of the facts show no aid or comfort given to the revolutionists prior to their declaration of independence, and any haste in thereafter extending recognition to the new Republic was a matter of detail and largely within the discretion of the President. A mistaken or improper exercise of it furnishes no foundation for a charge of prior complicity. We were under no further obligation to Colombia to consider any injurious injury to her welfare that might come about as the result of the exercise of any of our discretionary powers of government.

Keeping within the boundaries of our rights, we could act as our interests or inclination prompted, wholly without responsibility to her. She had kept a Punic faith with us. A jury composed of nearly all the nations of the civilized world has rendered its verdict of the issue tendered by our action, and I see no reason why we should [illegible] what we have done [illegible]. Any sympathy bestowed on Colombia is, in my opinion, misplaced.

Mr. President, it may serve to remove a misapprehension that is quite prevalent when I call attention to the fact that in the construction of an isthmian canal the United States is to reserve to herself the rights and privileges in its use that Egypt and Spain the [illegible] of which is to all of the nations of the earth. A realization of this fact will serve to disarm criticism aimed at our recognition of Panama upon the assumption that in so doing we sought by the power of might to acquire for ourselves a useful [illegible] A great improvement which is to benefit mankind [illegible] character of ownership we will possess with reference to its use, I call attention to the provision of the treaty of November 18, 1901.

Acting upon the belief that any negotiation entered into with Colombia on Colombian ground would be carried out in good faith, that Colombia would carry out the Hay-Pauncefote treaty [illegible] by which it agreed to declare the canal [illegible] in the construction of the world upon terms of perfect equality and impartiality as to tolls and use and added a guaranty that absolute neutrality should be maintained in its [illegible] I confess I did very honestly believe that it was entering into a compact with a civilized power. That we should not have reserved to ourselves, at least to our commercial trade, some discriminating advantages. However, we entered into such a treaty with Great Britain, and here it is:

ARTICLE I.

The high contracting parties agree that the present treaty shall supersede the provisions of the convention of the 19th April, 1850.

ARTICLE II.

It is agreed that the canal may be constructed under the auspices of the Government of the United States, either at the expense of the Government or by aid of loans to private enterprises or corporations, or through subscriptions to or purchase of stock in the company which undertook to do the work, and that, subject to the provisions of this convention, the United States may control the canal as a military highway and may, in time of war as in time of peace, enjoy the exclusive right of providing for the regulation and management of the canal.

ARTICLE III.

The United States adopts as the basis of the neutralization of such ship canal the following rules, substantially as embodied in the convention of Constantinople signed the 28th October, 1888, for the free navigation of the Suez Canal, that is to say:

1. The canal shall be free and open to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations, under the same rights and upon the same footing of equality, so that there shall be no prejudice affecting, either as regards the navigation, the conditions, the charges of traffic, or otherwise. Such conditions and charges of traffic shall be just and equitable.

2. The canal shall never be blockaded, nor shall any right of war be exercised nor any act of hostility be committed within it. The Powers, however, shall be at liberty to maintain such forces along the canal as may be deemed necessary, and to avail themselves of the canal in time of war as a neutral power, with only such interruption as may result from the application of this article.

3. Vessels of war of a belligerent shall not avail themselves of the waters of the canal to refit and victual except in the case and to the extent to which it may be ordered by the competent authorities that such vessels may do so without gaining an advantage over the other belligerents. The interval between two departures of vessels belonging to the same belligerent shall be not less than 24 hours.

4. The prizes, in all respects, are subject to the same rules as vessels of war of the belligerents.

5. No belligerent shall have the right to use the waters of the canal for the purpose of [illegible]

6. The powers agree that the execution of works intended to facilitate the passage of vessels by the cutting through of the isthmus, whether by means of canals with fresh water [illegible] shall be free to construct such works as may be deemed necessary, at their own expense, within the limits of their possessions, [illegible]

7. The high contracting parties, in virtue of the principle of equality [illegible] shall not seek, for themselves, any territorial concession nor any advantages with regard to the commerce or navigation of the countries with which the contracting powers may have treaties in force, [illegible] with only such interruption as may result from the application of this article.

8. The powers, on an equal footing, agree to subject to the same rules as vessels of war of the belligerents [illegible]

9. The powers [illegible]

10. The powers [illegible]

It may be said and has been said that many of the things thus were done conflicted with some of the fundamental principles of international law. Many of the arguments have been [illegible] and are now have been duly presented. I have listened with [illegible] and, indeed, under my responsibility as a member of this [illegible] I have [illegible] that if the thing had only would have been and have been [illegible] I have been able to [illegible] that it is [illegible] but, as with other [illegible] and for [illegible] it can not be [illegible] strongly enough, that we are [illegible] have been [illegible] by generations borrowed [illegible] the common [illegible]

Many things are hastily [illegible] and [illegible] taken for the [illegible] and complete [illegible] Parliament [illegible] Declaration of a [illegible] of precedent which [illegible] on an [illegible] or on the [illegible] the end justifies the means as the [illegible] and [illegible] law. But even where [illegible] with the [illegible] have been made in their [illegible]

As a [illegible] of nearly every era-marking achievement in our history many of these [illegible] have been [illegible] as on these particular [illegible] of a distinctly protest against all precedent and keeping [illegible] of precedents and predecessors of [illegible]

A reference to [illegible] will suffice for the purposes of the present [illegible] When the [illegible] pay the price for the Louisiana purchase was [illegible] in Congress. Jordan Cushing, a Democrat New England [illegible] of his time, said if the act became a law it would [illegible] from right moral conception and as it would be the right of [illegible] would be the duty of some to prevent by a resolution—amounting if they could, [illegible] of that act. The [illegible] and nullification thus obtained its first practical application in New England.

Again, when Texas, now the Empire State of the South, and when the Panama Canal is in successful operation, [illegible] the Empire State of the Union, was about to become a part of the great Republic, the legislature of Massachusetts, in its wisdom, of [illegible] resolved:

That under no circumstances whatever shall the people of Massachusetts regard the [illegible] as constituting a [illegible] of the rights of the people of Massachusetts [illegible] of those things which [illegible] the government.

The danger to the peace of the Union contemplated by this resolution would [illegible] the determination of the New England States to forcibly resist the annexation of Texas or to secede from the Union at the happening of that event. The resolution was forwarded to Congress and to the several States. It was intended on the part of Massachusetts that no matter under what circumstances Texas might be acquired by the Union, secession must follow. The succeeding legislature adopted a similar resolution, which it was directed should be sent to the Congress, and in this last it was solemnly resolved:

That the project for the annexation of Texas, being pressed to the threshold, may lead to dissolution of the Union.

In our country it is the right of everybody to speak out against those things in public affairs which he does not approve. This is often necessary even where the things have become accomplished facts, if there is thought to be a wrong side to the transaction in the manner of its accomplishment. The wholesome effect is to educate the public opinion of the country into an understanding of correct principles, because no government can maintain the confidence and respect of its own citizens that permitted the violation of principles of rights in its public acts and policies. No excuse is more appropriate for this than the tendency of some given even such as the present case, for it is difficult, [illegible] to impress these lessons in a more [illegible] way, [illegible] to the [illegible] of the people.

[illegible] that whatever may be done [illegible] be [illegible] by [illegible] of [illegible] have. [illegible] room for [illegible] which is the [illegible] to the [illegible] which [illegible] Nor must [illegible] the fact that [illegible] history of things done, and which when once done are [illegible]

[illegible] furnish an instance where mere discussion has [illegible] or restored a [illegible] the [illegible] on any given [illegible] the [illegible] of [illegible] the [illegible] to a [illegible] he was undone did not in all things come to pass [illegible] And then, as well intensify the elation of the [illegible] with [illegible] I [illegible] a [illegible] upon which rests upon the one or the other [illegible] a party to or to correct the wrongs of a government [illegible] war, or in a certain way, by the force of public [illegible] in its own country. The correction enforced by public [illegible]

I [illegible] when this Panama affair is [illegible] by our people [illegible] the spirit of [illegible] the [illegible] to impress these lessons in a more [illegible] and to declare martial law as a means to its suppression. This act would incidentally give him the power to negotiate and ratify treaties. Considering the hostile environment in which he was seeking to embarrass the Government, and the violence and utter want of patriotism manifested in their factious contests on the part of those who, in the regular course of events, cooperate with him in concluding the negotiations for the construction of the canal, we may well accord him, with a purpose not altogether reprehensible, when we attribute to him the purpose to inaugurate in a revolution at Panama hoping thereby to accord him in taking into his own hands the whole power of government under his authority to declare martial law.

He knew that our Hay-Herran treaty was as favorable to Colombia as any that he could ever hope to secure, if it not only conferred the best terms that could be secured, but it vouchsafed all that in fairness could be demanded. He knew the hopeless state of bankruptcy that existed in his country, and how generally the people looked upon the proposed Hay-Herran treaty as assuring the prosperity of his distracted country. He was likewise well aware that under the terms of the Spooner Act, whenever it became plain that no concession could be secured from Colombia, that negotiations would be conducted looking to the construction of the canal on the Nicaragua route, and that in the meantime the colossal wealth of the companies in the canal railway and the partially completed canal would be utterly destroyed and the canal idea dead. Among his people there prevailed a belief that, in the light of the negotiations, had attention not been diverted by Commander Hubbard's reports. Before closing on I will say that the reports referred to in the commander's report are in the main accurate. The governor of Panama, Amador, Herrera, president of Panama, Lewis, Santos, a native and Kentucky, and known locally as the "King of the Isthmus," and a leading spirit in the revolution, the act of which was sent to Colon by Torres on the evening of the 3d, are Monroists.

It appears from a telegram sent to the State Department by Minister Beaupré, the American consul at Colon, that the troops who arrived at Colon on the night of the 2d of November were not expected until the 5th. Amador is a native of Colon and a sympathizer with the revolution. It thus appears that the revolutionists were advised of what was going on at Bogota to a fair, at least, as the movement of troops was concerned. After the arrival of the troops at Colon on the morning of the 3d, for the pretended purpose of being transported to Panama, to constitute a garrison there, ostensibly to keep down a revolution, they were permitted to remain in Colon while Generals Tobar and Amaya went over to Panama to arrange matters, as it was said. The 475 troops were left at Colon in charge of Colonel Torres.

Instead of awaiting orders from Panama, to be given by General Amaya as stated, Torres sent a dispatch to Panama. It seems that one arrived at the transportation for his troops having the day of the 3d. This Colonel Shaler, superintendent of the railway, refused to forward troops he was requested to do so by Governor Amador. Later in the day Amador furnished Colonel Shaler with the necessary money to secure the passage of the troops. It is difficult to explain why Amador, the head of the revolutionary party, caused these the Government troops sent to the point at which the revolution was to be consummated without a few hours notice, it is admitted that he fully understood what their errand was to be after they reached Panama. It also appears from the cross-examining clause of the second paragraph of Commander Hubbard's report of November 8 that after the revolution was consummated and its leaders had organized a form of Government, it was found that these so-called Colombian troops at Colon under Torres be then sent over to Panama.

It is shown that on the 4th numerous "pronunciamentos" were made by the representatives of the new Government to Colonel Torres at Colon, and that after several hours consultation with Mendez, the alcalde of Colon, and which was carried on in a well-known cafe of that town, Torres appeared on the streets of Colon with a proclamation publicly that he intended to accept the Amaya an entente in Colon under the auspices of Tobar and Amaya, were pressed by 2 o'clock. This declaration on his part immediately caused consternation among the Americans, and before it was known that it had been made was promptly communicated to Commander Hubbard, who proceeded to hastily take down building and to assemble there all the American citizens who believed in good faith that this warlike preparation was necessary to prevent their extermination. After thus affording a pretext requiring the American forces to land for the first time on Colombian soil, for a purpose unmistakably justified under the practice of nations, and in doing so made a show of force that would afford Torres an excuse for any course that he might have it in mind to pursue as the result of his negotiations with Mendez, Torres entered the fortified building and notified the officers in charge that he had no intention of injuring any American citizen, but on the contrary he loved them very much.

It became necessary for Melendez to procure from Panama sinews of war of a certain kind much sought in Colombia. Torres, under the pretext of having the alcalde obtain from the imprisoned General Tobal an order authorizing him (Torres) to withdraw, secured as the result of this interview, at 8.45, a special train to carry the alcalde to Panama at once. At 10.45 on the 5th Melendez returned to Colon, and it is a fact that is not denied that he brought with him $[illegible], which was paid over to Torres without any effort at concealment, and after receiving the money Torres brought his soldiers into the town of Colon, and Commander Hubbard's report says upon this second entrance: "They did not assume the threatening demeanor of the previous day." The story is that $[illegible] of the money was publicly paid to the troops on the pier of the Royal Mail Line, and that shortly thereafter the troops, together with Colonel Torres, departed for Cartagena.

The day or more Colombian soldiers stationed at Panama under the command of General Huertas were likewise won over to the revolutionists by bribery, and thereafter constituted a part of their force, and so now. There is not the slightest doubt that the troops which reached Colon on the 3d of November were intended to form part of the revolutionary force at Panama, and that Amador and Reyes knew this to be true. Had the plot of Torres been that the revolution should be when these troops were added to the garrison of Panama, Marroquin would be furnished with the pretext for declaring martial law, which he could justify where he called by the political means by calling attention to the force at the disposal of the revolutionists. This is clearly shown by the following telegram sent by the minister from Panama on the 6th of November. It confirms perfectly what the foregoing circumstances make probable:

The same is true of the following telegram of the 7th:

BEAUPRÉ.

It will not fail to attract attention that this is a very mild and unconcerned form of communication, considering that there was to be an effort in good faith to suppress the outbreak.

It will also not escape attention that General Reyes had passed the United States Government to take up a position having arrived at Panama and had an opportunity to consult with the new Panama Government, and knew above all things the United States Government must not recognize the new Government. To do that would cause his whole scheme in bringing about the revolution to miscarry.

Then again, in the point of the time [illegible] Colombia and in her people being able to suppose [illegible] well to note that our minister, on November 7, sent the following dispatch:

BOGOTA, November 7, 1903.

[illegible] Government of the United States [illegible] Colombian Government [illegible] line of railway. [illegible] tion to suppress the movement [illegible] ance with a view to the treaty of 1846 [illegible] Government is entirely unable to suppress the movement [illegible]

Here it is squarely admitted that a contingency was likely to come about where the Colombian Government would be entirely unable to suppress the secession movement at Panama. Well this doubt might be expressed, for the revolution then in progress had more elements of strength to support it than any of its predecessors, and, in addition to this, it found the United States in a relationship to Colombia that had never existed on any former occasion. In support of this supposition of knowledge and complicity on the part of Marroquin and Reyes the following letter from Vice-Consul Ehrman is relevant, as showing that the whole revolution was brought about by a previous arrangement:

of the canal project to unite with them to take out of the list of mere probabilities this great enterprise.

I have said that evidence of popular approval of the President's course in Republican ranks is wanting, notwithstanding he has [illegible] by some of the ablest and most [illegible] men in this Chamber, by reason of the lengths that he has authorized to go in the advancement of this great enterprise. In fact, I think I may go further and say that popular approval of the President himself is somewhat [illegible] if we may rely upon the surface indications.

He is now the central figure of a continuous Belshazzar's feast, awaiting in perturbation of spirit for some friendly Daniel to come forth who can interpret the handwriting on the wall, so that he may know definitely what the chairman of the Republican national [illegible] do—"to fish" or "to cut bait." It is deemed a matter of such [illegible] importance to be discussed daily in the country in box-car headlines when Alaska has instructed her delegates to the national Republican convention in favor of his renomination. It is likewise an event calling for friendly journalistic exploitation when the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] [illegible] that the editor, [illegible] they are for Roosevelt and that they intend to see that [illegible] gation from Massachusetts is instructed in favor of his renomination, and that they [illegible] to it that any efforts to Hannaize or Democratize the Roosevelt State convention of Massachusetts [illegible] Senator aforesaid, come to naught.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Yes, sir.

Mr. LODGE. I am sure the Senator does not mean to attribute to me words that I did not utter. They appeared in the newspapers, but I am not responsible for them. I saw the statement in a newspaper, but I assure the Senator nothing of that [illegible]

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. "Et tu, Brute!" Then to whom can the President look for comfort and succor in this his hour of [illegible] So it is even doubtful whether the three Federal officials of Boston are loyally for Roosevelt, and the Republican convention of Massachusetts is not entirely safe from the danger of being Hannaized or Democratized.

Again, we find in the new rock-ribbed Republican State of Ohio, after having just recorded an almost indecent majority of 125,000, that a veteran who has served that party for a quarter of a century, displaying every type of activity from the "fire-alarm" [illegible] to a present well-nigh innocuous docility, can no longer hope to appear in his prescriptive capacity as delegate at [illegible] it be upon condition that he shall forego the right to [illegible] his banner a formal [illegible] of his [illegible] the President's reelection.

[illegible] to permit the Republican masses of the [illegible] to express their [illegible] instructions to their [illegible] established in the history of parties in this country and [illegible] conditions precedent in their [illegible] that can not but be cheering to the friends of good government.

On the other hand, what is the condition in the Democratic ranks? Even its vigilant enemies proclaim to the world that it is [illegible] and dangerous." The countenance of every [illegible] is radiant with the smiles of hope and promise of a better day near at hand. The breezes are fairly laden with the sound of the tramp of feet and the hum of voices of "the faithful" as they approach the shrine of Democracy to there renew their allegiance to the party that has always sought to maintain a government of the people, for the people, and by the people. I do not intend without an hour's protest from me to see these patriots elbowed away from that altar now and allow it to be converted into a Wailing Place [illegible] which shall be poured forth the [illegible] of those who [illegible] understand their country's [illegible] to be always to advance it.

I think, rather, that we should profit by the lamentation of the time, and without [illegible] to fall [illegible] strive for harmony of [illegible] and action. For [illegible] principles [illegible] of this nation its safety and advancement.

[illegible], Mr. President, is outside of the purpose of the [illegible]. The matter here under [illegible] in its character. If in carrying out some of the [illegible] curred that which might be turned to party advantage, I [illegible] of [illegible] I can not [illegible] of the earth. The Democratic party has never sought to predicate its success upon the loss of dignity or national pride that would inevitably ensue from such a course, and I trust it never will. No matter how widely and vigorously we may differ as to [illegible] I may say when it comes to a matter upon which has passed into history the Democratic party never has and never will in any possible contingency, insist that this country shall stand discredited before the nations of the earth by insulting upon an [illegible] from any position taken.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

A bill (H. R. 2871) to incorporate the Mutual Investment Fire Insurance Company of the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 7024) to name streets, avenues, alleys, highways, and reservations in that part of the District of Columbia outside the city of Washington, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 7899) in relation to bonds on contracts with the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 8692) to authorize the apprehension and detention of insane persons in the District of Columbia, and [illegible] for [illegible] in the Government Hospital for the Insane, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 9235) to create a board for the condemnation of insanitary buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 10417) to prevent cruelty to certain animals in the District of Columbia.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the [illegible]:

A bill (H. R. [illegible]) [illegible] circuit and district courts of the [illegible] at Albany, Ga.;

A bill (H. R. [illegible]) [illegible] "An act to determine the [illegible] in the district of the United States for the eastern district of Wisconsin," approved March 3, [illegible], [illegible];

A bill (H. R. 9618) to amend the first section of an act provided [illegible] of appeals for the fifth judicial circuit of the United States [illegible] term of said court annually in the city of Montgomery, in the State of Alabama, approved January [illegible], 1891; and

A bill (H. R. 10145) to provide for writs of error, and other appellate proceedings from the circuit and district courts of Oklahoma, in the northern district of Texas.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 79) for the transportation of Porto Rican products to the United States and return was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

CONSIDERATION OF CERTAIN DISTRICT BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, there have come from the House of Representatives five bills relating to the District of Columbia [illegible] have been reported favorably from the committee on the District of Columbia of the Senate. I wish simply to make a statement [illegible] a moment to show the difference between the two Houses in the matter of dealing with private legislation.

In the other House two days in each month are given for the consideration of private legislation, while here no such rule applies. So in getting through legislation for the District we have to take our chances [illegible] a bill on the Calendar or calling it up by motion. I desire to ask that these five bills may be given consideration to the present time subject to objection. If objection be made, they will then be referred to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent.

Mr. SPOONER. How long have they been reported here?

Mr. GALLINGER. Similar bills have been reported.

Mr. BAILEY. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will not ask the Senate to agree that these bills shall be before it for consideration without any of us having an opportunity to examine them.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator from Texas that similar bills are on the Calendar of the Senate, reported some time ago by the Senate committee.

Mr. SPOONER. And these are to be taken up subject to objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes: subject to objection.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator is not now asking unanimous consent for their consideration?

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all, unless the Senate shall agree to consider them.

Mr. BAILEY. Then I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the House bills on the calendar.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me for a moment?

Mr. GALLINGER. Cheerfully.

Mr. TILLMAN. It looks like I am going to get lost in the shuffle again. I had a resolution which came over, and I gave way to let the two appropriation bills and magnificent speeches be made. It is now so late that I do not think it is fair to me. I have had business coming up for months, and I have had to be disappointed in it because it was never reached. If the Senator from New Hampshire will allow me to have it laid aside with its consideration and ask for its immediate consideration, he can dispose of it, and it will go over and I can call it up to-morrow.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I can not resist that appeal.

RECESS APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. TILLMAN. I submit a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the resolution offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

The Secretary read as follows:

Whereas Article II, section 2, of the constitution of the United States provides:

"The President shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate shall appoint, ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments.

"The President shall have power to fill up all vacancies which may happen during the recess of the Senate by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their session."

Whereas it is known that certain officers appointed during the recess of Congress from March 4 last to November 9 last were appointed from persons not members of the Senate, and were in possession of and exercising the powers of said offices prior thereto; and

Whereas it is the duty of the Senate to advise and consent to such appointments, and it is the duty of the Senate to consider the facts and circumstances of such appointments and to advise and consent thereto or not, according to the facts and circumstances of each case; and

Whereas it is necessary to postpone the holding of an office by any person against whom charges are made or are held by Executive order to be indefinitely suspended, pending such investigation; Therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the President should not make any appointment to office during the recess of the Senate by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session of the Senate in the case of any person who is not a member of the Senate, or who was not such member when such office became vacant or was created, and who was not in possession of and exercising the powers of said office prior thereto, except in cases where the facts and circumstances of such appointment have been considered by the Senate and the nomination confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Let the resolution go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over under the rule.

VINCENZO GERARDI.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire that the bill referred to by him be taken up for consideration, subject to objection? The Chair hears none.

The bill (H. R. 4344) for the relief of Vincenzo Gerardi, of Washington, D. C., was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all real estate lying in the District of Columbia heretofore purchased and conveyed to Vincenzo Gerardi, of said District, prior to the passage of this act, by the property clerk, or other officer of the United States Navy, or other officer of the United States, in charge of the property of an alien enemy, in the prosecution of the war with Spain, in the territory in question, shall be held and deemed to have been lawfully conveyed to said alien, and the property so conveyed shall be held and deemed to be the property of said alien, free and clear of all claim of the United States or any officer thereof, by reason of said conveyance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. BAILEY. I would like some explanation of this measure. Really, I had supposed that the request was that these bills should remain on the Calendar, subject to be called up and still subject to objection. That is what I had supposed to be the request preferred by the Senator from New Hampshire a moment ago.

Mr. GALLINGER. My request, I will say, Mr. President, was that consent should be given for their consideration, subject to objection. If objection was made, they would then be referred to the committee from which similar bills have been reported.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that similar bills are on the Calendar, reported from the Senate committee?

Mr. GALLINGER. Precisely similar bills.

Mr. BAILEY. With favorable reports, of course?

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course.

Mr. BAILEY. It would seem a little ungracious for a Senator, because he does not know anything about a bill, to object to its consideration when a similar measure has been reported by the committee having the subject in charge, and I am not going to object.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course I expected to make a brief explanation if any Senator wished it.

For instance, in relation to this bill I will say that we have passed quite a number of bills to accomplish the same purpose in other cases. A man, who was an alien, came into possession of certain property here. He has since become naturalized, and the bill simply waives the statute which provides that aliens shall shall not hold property in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BAILEY. If he is naturalized, he would certainly be within the statute.

Mr. GALLINGER. He acquired the property while an alien.

Mr. BAILEY. I am inclined to think that if he was a citizen before an action was instituted by the Government to forfeit the property the Government could not forfeit it. At the time the property of an alien came into the Government, at the time the suit was instituted would determine the power of the Government to forfeit.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have had before me and quite a number of similar cases it has been held that [illegible] and, of course, legislation can do no harm if the Senator's conclusion is correct. I will not [illegible]

Mr. BAILEY. The Government must [illegible] the disability of an alien; and, mark you, it is not [illegible] when the [illegible] under the law. Still, [illegible] a man double protection. But I venture [illegible] of that.

Mr. GALLINGER. [illegible] may be found in the last line or two of [illegible] It is barely possible that that is one reason.

The Secretary again read the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. There have been forfeitures not only incurred, but declared.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is it exactly.

Mr. BAILEY. It is practically a proposition to give it back to him.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill, which will be indefinitely postponed.

The bill (S. 3597) for the relief of Vincenzo Gerardi, of Washington, D. C., was indefinitely postponed.

PUBLIC RESERVATION NO. 32.

The bill (H. R. 8686) to transfer jurisdiction of reservation No. 32, in the city of Washington, D. C., was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all that part of reservation No. 32, in the city of Washington, D. C., lying south of the south line of Virginia avenue southwest, be, and the same is hereby, transferred to the jurisdiction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, to be used for park purposes, and the jurisdiction of said Commissioners over said portion of said reservation is hereby extended for said purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. 3983) to transfer jurisdiction and control over reservation No. 32 in the city of Washington, D. C., was indefinitely postponed.

REMOVAL OF SNOW AND ICE.

The bill (H. R. 10421) to provide for the removal of snow and ice from the sidewalks of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was read the first and second time by its title, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. 4000) to provide for the removal of snow and ice from the sidewalks of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was indefinitely postponed.

SECTION 895 OF THE DISTRICT CODE.

The bill (H. R. 8686) to amend section 895 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 895 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia is hereby amended by adding the following to the first paragraph thereof:

"SEC. 895. Every vessel coming to anchor in any other portion of the navigable waters in the District of Columbia shall also be governed under the provisions of this act, and be liable to the penalties provided for violating the harbor laws, as provided in this act. The provisions of this act shall be construed with those of the act of March 3, 1899, entitled 'An act to prevent the throwing of refuse into navigable waters of the United States,' and the penalties provided in the last paragraph of the act of March 3, 1899, shall be imposed for the violation of the provisions of this act.

"Sec. 2. That the provisions of the third paragraph of said section requiring the [illegible] to be posted in any dock or at the end of any wharf in the District of Columbia."

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. 2884) to amend section 895 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia was indefinitely postponed.

LICENSES FOR BATH ESTABLISHMENTS.

The bill (H. R. [illegible]) to regulate the issue of licenses for Turkish, Russian, or medicated baths in the District of Columbia was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph 30 of section 7 of "An act making appropriations to the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June thirty, nineteen hundred and four, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1903, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"30. Every person who shall open, keep, or maintain any Turkish, Russian, or medicated bath, or establishment wherein the provisions of this paragraph shall have been violated, shall be [illegible]

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to amend the bill by striking out, in lines 9 and 10, page 1, the words "[illegible] and." The next section of the code provides for their regulation, and these words ought not to be in the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read the third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I believe some Senators desire an executive session. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 3, 1904, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 2, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

RESIDENT COMMISSIONER TO THE UNITED STATES FROM PORTO RICO.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania submits a privileged report, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Rule XII of the House of Representatives be amended by [illegible] United States shall possess the same [illegible] service and in the House [illegible] on the [illegible] on [illegible] Resident Commissioner to the United States from Porto Rico.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. I read in Rule XVII, on page 379, the following:

[illegible] pending the motion for the previous question on any resolution or amendment thereto, shall be recommitted or a motion to recommit, with or without instructions, be in order.

Now, I wish, pending the motion for the previous question, to move that the resolution be recommitted to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman from Mississippi can not take me from the floor to make a motion which even if he could, a motion to recommit a report of the Committee on Rules is not in order at any time. But [illegible] to say that I have the floor, and the gentleman is not entitled to get it at this time. I insist on my motion for the previous question.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I was making a parliamentary inquiry and telling the Chair what I wanted to do.

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman can not take me off the floor to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. We can make a parliamentary inquiry in the gentleman's time; certainly.

Mr. DALZELL. I think not.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It is in order under the rules that govern the Democratic convention, anyhow. [Great laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not obliged to answer parliamentary inquiries touching a matter that is not before the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. DALZELL. I insist on my motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then I [illegible] Rule XVII to offer, pending a motion for the previous question, a motion to recommit.

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman has not the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And I do offer the motion to recommit, with the [illegible]

Mr. DALZELL. I insist that the gentleman is not entitled to the floor, and in my time, to make a speech.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will rule on the motion made. The gentleman from Mississippi rose to his place and proposed, as the Chair understands, a motion to recommit with instructions to the committee with a certain direction, coupled with a request to the Chair to rule it out of order that it is not at this time, pending a motion for the previous question.

Mr. DALZELL. Well, then, Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order [illegible]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, I want to be heard on the point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the Speaker of the House to the fact that pending the motion for the previous question, a motion to recommit is not in order. The House [illegible] the point of order against the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule on the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee [illegible] a motion to recommit, and therefore overrules the point of order.

And I call the attention of the Speaker to this ruling, also made by Speaker Henderson.

On March 1, 1886, the previous question had been ordered on the adoption of a resolution reported from the Committee on Rules, relating to the consideration of certain bills relating to trusts and monopolies, and it was sought to present a motion to recommit. Mr. JAMES D. RICHARDSON, of Tennessee, being in the chair, the point of order against the motion was made by Mr. JOHN DALZELL, of Pennsylvania, and the point was sustained. Mr. JOHN DALZELL made the point of order against the motion.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] has made a speech in making arguments and suggestions which ought to be addressed to the consideration of the House.

The same Speaker on another occasion, to which I will refer, decided that certain [illegible] to recommit.

On February 27, 1888, Mr. JAMES B. BELFORD, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Rules, reported a resolution for the adoption of this rule, and [illegible] lately which [illegible] to the House [illegible] to be taken upon the motion to recommit, and therefore overrules the point of order against the motion.

And I will ask the Clerk to read the ruling of Speaker Crisp, to be found in Mr. Speaker Pearson's Precedents, section [illegible]

The Clerk read as follows:

On March 26, 1894, the previous question had been ordered on a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, relating to the consideration of certain bills relating to trusts and monopolies, when Mr. JAMES D. RICHARDSON, of Tennessee, being in the chair, the point of order against the motion to recommit was made by Mr. JOHN DALZELL, of Pennsylvania, and the point was sustained. Mr. JOHN DALZELL made the point of order against the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

On March 26, 1894

Mr. JONES of Virginia. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Is it not a fact that the House of Representatives in the last Congress unanimously passed that identical [illegible]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I am glad to be reminded of that fact.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. And the very gentlemen who now report this rule voted for it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I am glad the gentleman reminds me of that fact. It is true that the House of Representatives in the Fifty-[illegible] Congress, [illegible] I do not know [illegible] the island of Porto Rico a Delegate.

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes, sir.

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman tell the House what became of that bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It died in the Senate. I suppose.

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, no; it did not die in the Senate.

Mr. BRENNAN of Indiana. I will tell what became of it. If the gentleman from Mississippi will yield.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield [illegible]

Mr. BRENNAN of Indiana. As soon as [illegible] passed the House [illegible] It passed the House of Representatives [illegible] and the Senate [illegible] which I will read:

[illegible] and insert

[illegible]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman need not read it all. [illegible] I know.

Mr. DALZELL. [illegible]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. All right.

Mr. DALZELL. [illegible] amendment [illegible] the United States [illegible]

[illegible]

And so on. That is the second paragraph of the Senate amendment. Now, [illegible]

[illegible]

And so forth. That is the fate that the bill that this House passed [illegible] Capitol [illegible] would probably meet the same fate that this bill met in the last Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, the conduct of the Republican Senate has been worse than I thought it was. [Laughter.] I had the idea that the Senate allowed the bill to die a natural death because it did not want to do anything for Porto Rico, but it seems that in addition to that they wanted to do a good many other things, which, in the opinion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, would be [illegible] wrong, and in my opinion would be also other wrong, too, if I had time to examine it, among other things, to appoint by the President, "with the advice and consent of the Senate," a Delegate on the floor of the House.

The gentleman's argument, Mr. Speaker, reminds me of an anecdote that Zeb Vance of North Carolina used to tell. He says there was an Irish landlord who sent a message to his agent, "Collect the rents." The agent sent back word, "It is absolutely impossible to collect the rents. I have now lost half the tenants, my hat, two through my coat, and one bullet in the seat of my trousers." [Laughter.] Immediately upon receipt of that, a message went back from the landlord, "Collect the rents. They can not scare me by shooting at you." [Laughter.]

The gentleman from Pennsylvania can not scare me by shooting at a Republican Senate. That is all right. I shall heartily join him. [Laughter.]

Now, I was going on to say, Mr. Speaker, that this resolution, reported by the Committee on Rules, reads as follows:

Resolved, That Rule XIII of the Rules of the House of Representatives be amended by adding thereto the following:

"The Resident Commissioner to the United States from Porto Rico shall possess the same powers and privileges as to committee service and in the House as are possessed by Delegates, and shall be entitled to serve on the Committee on Insular Affairs as an additional member."

Now, what we proposed to do upon this side was to amend it so that it should read as follows: mark me and follow me closely, and I believe that if we could have gotten it before the House it would have passed, and I believe that the reason why we can not get it before the House promptly is the fear that it would pass. I understand me. I do not mean that that is the reason why the Speaker has ruled as he did. [illegible] convinced me that from the standpoint of parliamentary law [illegible] at any rate, his ruling was correct. I bow [illegible] him, but I hardly believe that the previous question would [illegible] been called and the right to amend shut off unless there had been some fear among leading Republicans that the House would pass a bill we wanted. And I am sure we want we wanted:

Motion to recommit to the Committee on Rules, with instructions to bring in [illegible] That the third Tuesday of February."—

Or any other day that would make no difference; we had to fix a day [illegible]

[illegible] from Porto Rico.

That bill has not which has been reported, and I believe, [illegible] unanimously by the Committee on Insular Affairs, [illegible] It was merely [illegible] that. Then our amendment goes on—

[illegible] to serve on the Committee on

In other words, we simply ask, in addition to the resolution [illegible] be fixed for the consideration of the bill [illegible] passed by the Insular Committee, [illegible] for [illegible] to six Democrats, [illegible] reported by that committee. I am informed that I am not [illegible] upon that subject. We merely ask that a day be fixed for the consideration of that bill and that in the [illegible] powers, and privileges of the Resident Commissioner [illegible] be our rule of conduct, but that [illegible] me a Delegate and that Porto Rico, [illegible] and [illegible] power and privilege and advantage of representation [illegible] we ought not have some of those curious [illegible] of Hawaii, but I [illegible] the people of Porto Rico are [illegible] which has come from the Committee on Insular Affairs and become a part of the law of the land only the intelligent part of the population of Porto Rico can vote for a Delegate.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not better, in view of the fate that our bill met last year at the other end of the Capitol, that we pass this resolution and later pass the bill [illegible]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. My friend takes it for granted—and I as a Democrat never did that—that if the Republican Senate does make a fool of itself it is going to keep on forever. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] I do not think it necessary that they will consider it necessary that substitute for this bill that passed last time and return it by which they found that it satisfied not good days with the House of Representatives. All I ask now is that a day be fixed when this bill shall be considered, and if considered, I think it will be passed, because I think the Members of the Fifty-seventh Congress, with the changes of membership, a large proportion of those constitute the membership of the Fifty-eighth Congress who voted for that measure—will vote for it again.

How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has nine minutes remaining.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I wish to give nine minutes to the gentleman from Missouri, if he desires it.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I do not.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Is there any other Member on this side who desires to speak? I will yield to any other Member. I shall reserve the nine minutes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DALZELL. Well, I suggest to the gentleman that he use his time, as we are entitled to close on this side.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I know that you are. Have you more than one you wish to put in to speak? If you have, put one in now.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. We will vote for your resolution.

Mr. DALZELL. Thank you.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, the last Congress passed a resolution giving the Commissioner from the island of Porto Rico the privilege of the floor. The pending proposition will confer upon him the right to introduce bills, the right to speak, the right to recommit [illegible] members upon him, as I understand it, all the privileges [illegible] from the Territories, excepting the right of a private secretary and the right of mileage. If I am correctly informed, if this amendment is made the Commissioner shall have all other rights and privileges of a Delegate except a private secretary and the right to receive [illegible]

Now, the Committee on Insular Affairs in the last Congress reported a bill creating a Delegate for the island of Porto Rico, and the House passed the bill. But it failed to become a law. The Committee on Insular Affairs during the present session of this Congress has reported a similar bill, and it is now on the Calendar.

[illegible] proposition, which [illegible] a proposition to amend the rules. The House has control of its own rules. It has the right to admit to the floor, the right to admit to discussion and to membership upon committees a representation from each of the outlying Territories as it chooses. It can do that without the concurrence of the other branch of the Government, and it can confer this right immediately. We can confer upon the island of Porto Rico a substantial benefit now, without delay, and it is the object of the Committee on Rules to grant that right, and it does not interfere with the absolute right of the House and the [illegible] of Congress to grant a Delegate to the island of Porto Rico. It does not [illegible] the right to pass subsequent legislation, but it [illegible] this side of the House to confer this benefit upon the people of Porto Rico, and it seems to be the object of the other side of the House, judging from the remarks of its leader, to further illustrate the incorrigible cussedness [illegible]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question for information?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. You may.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Does the gentleman himself believe that if this resolution is passed that the bill which came from the Committee on Insular Affairs providing a Delegate from Porto Rico will ever be considered at this session of Congress?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I believe it will.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. You do?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have no reason to believe otherwise. It was considered in the last House, but I fear if it shall be considered and pass the House again it will be many, many months before it will ultimately become a law, and if that apprehension be well grounded it will be many months before any advantage would come to the people of Porto Rico by virtue of that measure and now we have the opportunity to confer upon them immediate benefits.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but if he will allow me just a moment—I dislike to use up his time—but the gentleman clearly did not catch the drift of the proposed amendment. We do not propose to prevent the Resident Commissioner from getting the advantages proposed under this resolution immediately. We say, let it be that a certain day shall be fixed for the consideration of the bill, and now, if the gentleman will give me his attention, we say then in the meantime the Delegate shall be given exactly those advantages proposed by this resolution brought in from the Committee on Rules, so that he has not to wait, and the gentleman's remark to the effect that he would in the meantime be deprived of the advantages which you propose to confer on him now is unfounded.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is an attempt, it seems to me, to load up the resolution with something that will possibly defeat its passage. I can not construe it in any other way. This is a plain proposition, and the gentleman's resolution or his motion to fix a time for the consideration of the bill giving to the island of Porto Rico a Delegate may come up on suspension day or under a number of other ways. There is no necessary connection between the two propositions. This is a temporary matter and will operate immediately. We can do this now, and ought to do it untrammeled, and therefore I can see no reason why the rule should be encumbered or anything attached to it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. DALZELL. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has [illegible] minutes remaining.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I introduced the bill to which the gentleman from Mississippi has referred, giving to Porto Rico a Delegate on this floor. It was unanimously reported from the Committee on Insular Affairs. I introduced a similar bill in the Fifty-seventh Congress. It also was unanimously reported from the Committee on Insular Affairs and passed the House by a unanimous vote. I am still in favor of the enactment of that bill into law. But I am also in favor at this time of the passage of the pending resolution reported by the Committee on Rules. The bill which went through the House in the Fifty-seventh Congress met in the Senate the fate described by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. It is possible, if not probable, that to-day a similar bill would meet a similar fate in that body.

However, the passage of this resolution amending the rule will not prevent the passage of the bill through the House at a later day. I therefore think that it will be the part of wisdom to pass the resolution amending the rule without regard to what may be the ultimate fate of the bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in my judgment, Porto Rico, with a million of inhabitants, as as much entitled to representation by a Delegate on this floor as is Hawaii, with less than two hundred thousand—

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman how it would hurt this proposition to amend the rule [illegible] with it the proposition to set the bill down for consideration by the House at an early day?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Because if this rule passes, the Delegate [illegible] on the floor with an opportunity to speak. He will be a member of a House committee. He can voice the needs of his constituents and be [illegible] in open debate. If you wait until the passage of the bill he may never be heard.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield to me for a suggestion?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. This rule does not propose to wait until the passage of the bill [illegible] but fixes a day [illegible]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The resolution reported from the Committee on Rules does not go to the Senate at all, but it goes into operation at once; and all my amendment does is to fix a day for the consideration of the bill so that the House can express its opinion, no matter what the Senate did. If the Senate [illegible] passed a bill [illegible] the House [illegible] Delegate to this House, still the resolution would become effective immediately.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The Committee on Insular Affairs [illegible] the passage of the bill in good time. They are unanimous now in the opinion that the resolution should pass without delay.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has [illegible] minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RODEY].

Mr. RODEY. Mr. Speaker, on the 2d day of March, when the bill referred to by the speakers that have preceded me was under consideration, I spoke on the bill and said there was something pathetic in the Territories at that particular time trying to aid people in a worse condition than themselves. I would like, if I had time, to repeat those remarks here. But I will only take time to say that I believe there is a kindly feeling on behalf of the States represented in this House to grant the million people living in Porto Rico at least the full privilege of having a Delegate on this floor. Most of you gentlemen who represent great States do not stop to think that there are a million people down there on this island which is more people than there are in some ten States of this Union. Most of you do not realize the position of the people in Porto Rico.

The Supreme Court of the United States the other day, in passing upon a question under the immigration laws, held that they were citizens only in a sense, that they were not subject to exclusion under the immigration laws; but the court did not go so far as to say that they were citizens. Now, that is an anomalous condition for a million people, who owe allegiance to the flag of this country, to be up in the air in that manner. I say that the House ought to do something, whether the Senate approves of it or not. To grant to the Resident Commissioner the privileges of a Delegate because the House primarily represents the people of the United States, and Congress ought to pass some sort of a law that will fix the status of these people. It will be an act of common justice.

People do not stop to consider the conditions of the Territories. We in the West, being more familiar with the Territories, when the cattle country say that the people of the Territories are "mavericks." They never vote for President, for Vice President, for a Senator or a Member of Congress, for governor, for attorney-general, or any of the other officers we vote for in the States, and not even for or against any congressional measure. It is the least privilege you can grant these people in Porto Rico to have a Delegate on the floor of the House. How can the House know the wants of those people unless they have a representative here. Children of the United States ought not to be left in that position. Now, I am glad to see that such a great precedent has been, and if the same spirit will continue when the bill that you propose comes from Wisconsin, says my colleague, in onto the floor in a few days I am sure you will pass that as well, and do some of common justice to the people you have taken under the flag of this country. [Applause.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I will yield the gentleman a minute.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. There was a question before the Supreme Court of the United States by virtue of the status of these people. I do not remember just the name, but my recollection is that it was a question whether they were citizens of the United States. I would like to see the gentleman from New Mexico [illegible] the decision of that court.

Mr. LOVE. The court decided, as I have just stated, that they were not aliens in the sense of the immigration laws, not that they were actually citizens.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Mexico has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] is evidently mistaken about the import of the amendment which was proposed to make it would not, if passed, introduce to the Senate business with the legislation proposed by the Republican majority in the committee on Rules. It merely says that as a matter of common justice it ought to be maintained and not be altered or amended. It does not say that we will give a Delegate to Porto Rico. It simply sets the same course of procedure of the Republican majority on rules to the Senate. It does not change a jot or tittle the character of a House resolution, or that of either a joint or concurrent resolution. It merely says that while we are waiting in the meantime to add to this amendment to Rule XII, and give to the Resident Commissioner in the United States from Porto Rico the same powers and privileges as to committee service and in the House as are possessed by Delegates, and he seems to be an additional member of the Committee on Insular Affairs, that we add a further provision that a time shall be fixed for the consideration of the bill reported by the gentleman from Wisconsin, chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs.

I was myself a member of the Committee on Insular Affairs at the time that bill was adopted in the Fifty-seventh Congress, and I voted for it and advocated it in committee and on the floor. Now, does the gentleman mean to tell the country that he would have voted against that measure, based on the views he has expressed of a bill from his own committee, and a bill which he advocated so warmly and for which he stood so staunchly? I suppose I am a prophet, but I will venture a prediction that he does. I predict that this is the very last legislation on this subject at this session, and probably in any session of the Fifty-eighth Congress, affecting the rights, powers, and status of a "Resident Commissioner" or any other sort of representative from the island of Porto Rico.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I came in just before the Speaker began his ruling. I understood him to hold that the proposed amendment was out of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes, he did; but I am calling the attention of the country now to the fact that the Speaker was forced to make that ruling by the call of the previous question upon the part of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], who would not have called it if he had been willing that the House should have a chance to amend the pending resolution. He is standing there as a representative of the Republican majority on this floor when he calls for the previous question. He is supporting the policy of the Republican party upon this question, and he is outlawing it in a way of giving partial justice to Porto Rico and a Representative here; he is outlawing it in a way that looks to me as if full justice was not to be given now or hereafter.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman from Mississippi permit me to say one word?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I want this resolution passed.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. So do I, if we can not get anything better.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But I do not want this situation to arise: I do not want the bill to pass this House and——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It is not a bill.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No, it is a resolution; but it can not be amended now under the ruling of the Chair. I do not [illegible] to go to the Senate, and there be [illegible]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman totally misconceives. The gentleman does not comprehend me.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit me to state my position?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No, sir; not in my time—yes, I will. The gentleman is so uniformly courteous that I can not resist.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. This is what I wanted to say: My idea is that were the bill first to pass the House to-day, it would be pigeonholed in the Senate. Then the bill being dead, I should be compelled to ask that a resolution like this be passed before the House, and the answer to my request would be, as I know it will be: "Oh, no; you wanted the bill, now let us wait and see what the Senate is going to do with it." Thus we would get nowhere, but would lose time, and there would be no chance for Porto Rico to have representation on this floor. I therefore think that it is better to pass this resolution, and thus at once secure to Porto Rico representation on this floor. Later we will see what can be done with the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Why, none of the evils and troubles which the gentleman apprehends could possibly occur. The gentleman voted with the majority for the previous question. It is evident that he did not understand the situation, else with his experience he would not have so voted. If my resolution had been adopted, or if it had been adopted by the House, if my amendment had been adopted, he would not have said a thing in the world about its going to the Senate, about having the bill lie there and sleep, or having it amended.

All it would have done under the sun would have been this: It would have allowed a member, the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico, from the moment of the passage of this resolution, without any changing of any rule or any appointment on the part of the Senate at all, with out any reference to the Senate whatsoever, the committee powers and the right of speaking upon the floor which are accorded to a Delegate from any Territory.

Then it would have done only one other thing, and that would have been to fix a day for the consideration by the House of the report of the committee on Rules. All. If I have not made myself understood now, it is because I do not know how. It could not have piled up in the Senate the bill which has been reported by the gentleman's committee with this resolution of the Committee on Rules at all. Nothing would have gone to the Senate. All it could possibly have done would have been in the [illegible] and [illegible] a day for the consideration of a bill and [illegible] the bill be [illegible] considered, in my private opinion. I am not, of course, in the secrets of the majority, but I believe that this will be the full meed and measure of justice accorded to Porto Rico.

Now, [illegible] better than the present law, and I am going to vote for it. [illegible] that no amendments are in order. And every member of the Committee on Insular Affairs on the Democratic side is going to vote for it, because, if we can not get full justice and full rights for the people of Porto Rico, we are willing to take partial justice and partial rights.

But how could this measure to give the representative of Porto Rico partial justice have been hurt by giving heed to my request for a day for the consideration of your bill?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DALZELL. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, the real question in this case is a practical one, not a theoretical one. The real question is, Which side of this House is running the machine of the House? The majority side of the Committee on Rules presents to you a course of procedure looking to a change of one rule of the House, and to adjourn upon the floor of the House the Commissioner from Porto Rico and give him a place on one of the committees of the House. That is a change from the provision of the rules as it now stands. The other proposition is to combine not only the action of the House in amending its own rule, but to provide also for the action of the House and Senate jointly in the matter of the creation of a Delegate. Now, however any Member of the House may feel in regard to the question whether there ought to be a Delegate from Porto Rico or not, surely the membership of this House will not take out of the hands of the constituted organization of the House the question of the amendment and control of its own rules and allow it to be transferred to the other side of the Chamber for the purpose of creating a Delegate.

I want, however, to remind the gentlemen on the other side of the House that after all the talk we have heard here and all the talk that has been current [illegible] for a number of months [illegible] the Republican party for wanting to bring about a [illegible] that [illegible] will bring States into the Union from the insular possessions of the Government, we now find the same side of the House in the attitude of very [illegible] urging [illegible] over the [illegible] for Porto Rico—at least a step in that direction. So [illegible] after when our Democratic friends in this Chamber [illegible]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. GROSVENOR. In a moment.

When they undertake to charge the Republican party with wanting to fill the Senate Chamber and the House of Representatives with representatives of those people on the other side of the [illegible] the direction of conferring statehood upon Porto Rico.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Of course the acquisition of California was in a certain way a step in the direction of making a State of it. But does the gentleman from Ohio contend that a vote for a Delegate from Porto Rico as well as one from Hawaii is a step in the direction of statehood? If this be so, then did the gentleman take a step in the direction of granting statehood to Hawaii when he voted for admitting a Delegate from Hawaii? Will the gentleman answer me those two questions?

Mr. GROSVENOR. To begin with, I did not do anything of that kind, as I now remember.

Now, let me say to the gentleman, in the little balance of time remaining to me, that I do not know what he means by talking about California and a Delegate from California. I never heard of a Territorial government in California. Such a fact, if it existed, escaped my knowledge; and I was old enough to understand it at the time it should have occurred. I have read many things.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman from Ohio has evidently misunderstood my suggestion. I said that the acquisition of the Territory of California was, as it proved, as much a step in the direction of statehood as the appointment of a Delegate [illegible]

Mr. GROSVENOR. I did not say anything about California. California never had a Territorial organization.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman from Ohio said that giving Porto Rico a Delegate was a step in the direction of statehood, and I said that to some extent the admission of California was a step in the direction of statehood, but a vote for either did not mean for statehood.

Mr. GROSVENOR. My friend overlooks the great fact that his own party has constantly been driving at. We are not complaining of any step in the direction of forthcoming statehood of any Territory on this continent bounded by the oceans that surround us.

That is one question. That is a question about which we are all agreed. The real question that I am trying to make is the question of steps toward statehood of the insular possessions of the Government. That is my proposition.

But, Mr. Speaker, I have expended time uselessly. The question here is whether you will stand by this rule that apparently everybody is in favor of or whether you will mutilate it by a defeat of the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, which would result in throwing open the whole question here to the amendment of the rule.

I think the House will stand by the report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENT.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico, Mr. DAVILA, a member of the Committee on Insular Affairs. [Applause.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, with Mr. FOSTER of Vermont in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House under a special order for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar. The Clerk will report the first bill.

THOMAS J. COWARD.

The first business was the bill (H. R. 3875) for the relief of the estate of Dr. Thomas J. Coward, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

[illegible] for services rendered and expenses incurred by him in caring for and attending the sick and wounded soldiers and sailors of the United States during the late war of the Rebellion, the sum of $1,000 for services and [illegible] furnished by him as contract surgeon during the late war of the Rebellion.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on War Claims, was read:

In line 7, strike out "$1,000" and insert "$326.66."

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, I will state briefly the character of this claim.

Dr. Thomas J. Coward was employed by the officer commanding a post at Clinton, Tenn., during the war of the rebellion, to attend the sick at that post. He served one month and sixteen days at one time and one month and twenty-four days at another time, and furnished all necessary medicines. The War Department found that he was entitled to $326.66, but disallowed the claim upon the ground that he was not employed by a competent military authority.

The rule of the Surgeon-General's Office at that time required that before a contract surgeon could be employed his employment must be approved by the Surgeon-General.

This was a case of emergency, and it appears by the report of the War Department that this physician was employed by the officer commanding the post. He also furnished his own medicines. According to the report of the War Department his services would have entitled him to compensation of $326.66 if the Surgeon-General had subsequently approved his employment.

The circumstances were such that during the delay which would have been caused in sending to the Surgeon-General's office for the requisite authority there would have been no one to attend the sick soldiers in the hospital. The emergency forbid the delay.

So the committee are unanimous in opinion that this is a meritorious claim, and ought to be allowed, and I move that we favorably report it.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

WARREN MITCHELL.

The next business was the bill (H. R. [illegible]) for the relief of the legal representatives of Warren Mitchell, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

[illegible] Warren Mitchell, deceased, the sum of [illegible] in full for all claims against the Government of the United States for the use and occupation of his property in the city of Nashville, Tenn., during the years 1862 and 1863, and for the destruction of his property in said city, and for all other claims against the Government of the United States growing out of the said use and occupation and destruction of said property, the same to be paid to the legal representatives of said Warren Mitchell, deceased: Provided, that no part of the sum herein appropriated shall be paid to any person who was not his legal representative at the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, this bill carries a large sum of money, not money that belongs to the Government of the United States, but that has been held in the Treasury a long time, money belonging to this claimant. Being an important bill, the committee, after a long and tedious investigation, made a unanimously favorable report. I ask that that report be read, and that gentlemen give attention to the reading of it. I ask that it be read in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read in the gentleman's time.

The report (by Mr. MAHON) was read, as follows:

[illegible] Warren Mitchell, a citizen of Nashville, Tenn., and a loyal citizen of the United States, during the years 1862 and 1863 and prior thereto, owned a valuable property in the city of Nashville, Tenn., which was used and occupied by the United States Government during the years 1862 and 1863 for a military post, and had the same destroyed by the United States Government during the years 1862 and 1863 for military purposes, without any compensation therefor.

Mr. Mitchell died in the year [illegible], and I honor is [illegible] John W. Stevenson, Hon. Benjamin H. Lewis and Mr. Tom L. H. Ransom, are said to be personal and financial advisers to Mr. Mitchell, and have passed a point to a Confederate [illegible]

Mr. Mitchell promptly brought his suit in the Court of Claims under the [illegible] and the court being equally divided [illegible] the petition was dismissed. On appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States the question was not his loyalty, nor the ownership of his land, but the ownership of his domicile. Attorney-General Wilson [illegible] the proposition:

"If Mitchell resided at Nashville within the Confederate lines, his business there was illegitimate, and he is entitled to recover. If not, his business there was illegitimate, and he is not entitled to recover."

[illegible]

[illegible] book the bill and recommend its passage.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I understand that this claimant was not able to point out to the Court of Claims or to the Supreme Court, and the court indicated in its opinion that it did not appear that the domicile of this man was in the Confederate States during the time he was collecting the cotton. [illegible] that perhaps there was other evidence [illegible] used. While the report is full in its statement of the law [illegible] etc., and in the judgment of the Supreme Court which decided that this man or his survivors were [illegible] not seem to be very full in stating what evidence there was if there was any, that showed that this man had a domicile in the Confederate States. He said he was in the Confederate States for three years. Now, that fact, that evidence, and all that sort of thing is lacking, and the difficulty in this class of cases is this: They go to the courts, they employ attorneys; the lawyers present their cases, and present the best kind of evidence they can find.

On the other side they are open to cross-examination on the part of the Government attorneys, and the court finally [illegible] the Supreme Court of the United States—and they will then come in with ex parte evidence [illegible] which sends them to the Committee on War Claims, which proceeds to set aside the judgment of the Supreme Court on this ex parte evidence. I do not know in cases of this sort, why the committee should not submit the question of claims to the Court of Claims. I understand there are bills on this Calendar now reported from the Committee on War Claims where the claims themselves are now pending before the Court of Claims and can be reached and the evidence taken on either side and that court decide them and bring them to the House on their report, or entering judgment, or finding the facts, and referring them to be paid by appropriations. I think in large claims like this the chairman of the committee should not be content merely to submit the report, but should tell this committee what there is in it.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, the committee did not report this bill on any ex parte evidence. It was reported on the decision of the Court of Claims and of the Supreme Court, where Justice Harlan was the attorney for the claimant, Mitchell, and United States Attorney Williams appeared for the Government. In 1868 Warren Mitchell was a resident of Tennessee. The captured and abandoned property act had been passed. The reasons for the passage of the captured and abandoned property act were several. The first was, in the States that were in insurrection there were [illegible] of dollars' worth of cotton, sugar, and other valuable property that could not be consumed by the Army, and it came to be a question of destruction or saving this property and keeping it for the wealth of the nation, for the present and for the future. The second was, it was a great temptation, with these large amounts of cotton in those States, for the blockade runners to run in and carry it to foreign ports, and bring the gold back to the treasury of the Confederate government. Our Government proposed in this law to take charge of the property and bring it into the Northern market, and dispose of it to people who needed cotton in foreign countries, and bring the gold into our Treasury. So the captured and abandoned property act was passed.

Now it is called captured and abandoned property. The act provided that any man in the South or in the States in insurrection [illegible] market places and warehouses [illegible] all property of this character captured by our forces was to be turned over to the places designated by the Treasury Department. The law provided that the cotton and property captured and abandoned should be sold; the expenses of transportation and of selling should be deducted and a careful account should be kept, and that the sale should be reported to the Treasury of the United States, a careful inventory made [illegible] of the proceeds. So a sum of $37,000,000 under that act passed into the Treasury of the United States. The act also provided that people could apply to the Secretary of the Treasury, and if [illegible] in the Treasury [illegible] 40 were the net proceeds, and about [illegible] that were paid out. This act expired in 1868. They [illegible] to apply for the proceeds of their property. [illegible] loyalty was not raised, got their money; but when [illegible] loyalty was raised against the claimants in the [illegible] Court of Claims held that if the claimant was disloyal [illegible]

The Fahnestock and Klein cases were carried to the Supreme Court of the United States to [illegible] of loyalty. Now, in brief, let us see what the Supreme Court of the United States said about it.

In the Klein case, [illegible] on the subject the court held:

[illegible] the property [illegible] except to those who have continually [illegible]

Now, to be brief, this case came up after the President's proclamation. This case was settled. Then the question of loyalty came up, and in this case and in the two other leading cases the Supreme Court held that the proclamation issued by President Johnson in 1868—which he had the absolute right to issue under the Constitution of the United States—restoring to all these people in 1868 their political, personal, and property rights, gave them a right to this property in the Treasury, even though they had been in active rebellion against the Government. That is the decision of the highest court of our Government.

Now, under the proclamation prior to 1868, while the war was in progress, much of this money was paid out, and it required if any one of these people who owned cotton would come before a United States officer and take the oath of allegiance to the United States and renounce his allegiance to the Confederate government, that early proclamation stated that they were to be restored to their political, personal, and property rights; but this proclamation in 1868 required no oath of any kind. It absolutely wiped out the question of taking an obligation to the Government, and so the court held that every man who could identify his property, identify his part on of the money which was held as a trust fund, was entitled to have it, but while these decisions were in progress the money of 1865 expired and $37,000,000 were left in the Treasury, which perhaps no man will ever claim because no man can file a claim for it——

Mr. PAYNE. Is not that a violent assumption?

Mr. MAHON. Well, unless Congress authorizes them. There is no law on the statute books to-day by which any man can go to the Treasury of the United States or to the courts and put a claim in for [illegible] of Congress, because they are debarred by the statute which expired in 1868. Now, what is this case? This man Mitchell was a resident of Kentucky. His loyalty was [illegible]. The claim went to the Supreme Court. He [illegible] of the best men of the State of Kentucky, [illegible] in the United States Senate, [illegible] say that this man was absolutely loyal to the Government.

He was asked why he did not claim Tennessee as a residence. He had been in Tennessee for three years, and Justice Harlan, who was then [illegible] filed his claim and said if he had put in his petition [illegible] he had been a resident of Tennessee [illegible] out of the Treasury by a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. PAYNE. That was based upon the fact of the nonintercourse act.

Mr. MAHON. I am coming to that. The nonintercourse act would not have interfered, but Mitchell said, "I am not a resident of Tennessee; I am a resident of Kentucky," and insisted that his petition should be filed in that way.

How did he get down to Tennessee? He went down because the captured and abandoned property act had been passed. He was familiar with its provisions. At that time he did know the nonintercourse law had been passed. He goes to the general commanding that department, who issued him a permit to go down into the State of Tennessee, where he had had large transactions when the war broke out, and settle his claims. To save himself from bankruptcy he settled with his creditors and took the property—cotton, sugar, etc.—in payment of his claims. He was a wealthy man, and under that permission from the general commanding, waiving for a time the nonintercourse law, he went down into Tennessee to carry out the purpose of the abandoned-property act and get the cotton out of the country. He made settlement and took cotton to the amount of over $200,000, [illegible] he had settled with the people who owed him he shipped the cotton to Savannah and had it placed in the warehouse, and in 1864, when General Sherman's army entered the city of Savannah, under the captured and abandoned property act General Sherman took the cotton, turned it into the warehouse, and it was sold by the United States official under that act, carefully inventoried, and the net proceeds of the sale of these 740 bales of cotton were turned into the United States Treasury, and the Treasury is indebted to him, so the Treasurer says, for about $138,000.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that that money is carried on the books of the Treasury Department to the credit of Warren Mitchell?

Mr. MAHON. Yes. When the Court of Claims had this up——

Mr. PAYNE. Why, it simply says in the books of the Treasury Department that the money was received as the proceeds of cotton that Warren Mitchell owned.

Mr. MAHON. Yes; that so much cotton was sold under this act.

Mr. PAYNE. The credit made by a clerk in the Treasury Department would not cut much of a figure.

Mr. MAHON. What is that?

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from Kentucky asked the gentleman from Pennsylvania if the money was not carried on the books of the Treasury Department as a credit to Warren Mitchell. Of course the mere fact that it appears on the books as the proceeds of cotton that belonged to Warren Mitchell does not cut much of a figure. The question is whether he was entitled to it.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Certainly. I only asked the question to bring out the fact as to the amount of the claim; that there is no dispute—that there was that much money turned into the Treasury Department as the proceeds of the cotton.

Mr. MAHON. Now, Mr. Chairman, these facts are clear about the case. First, that Warren Mitchell was the owner of the cotton in the warehouse at Savannah; second, it was taken under the captured and abandoned property act, and, thirdly, it was sold by the United States officials, a careful inventory made of every bale, the expenses of the sale deducted, and the net proceeds turned into the Treasury of the United States. Now, if he had been a citizen of the State of Tennessee, although he had been guilty of disloyalty to the Government, under this act as construed by the Supreme Court of the United States and President Johnson's proclamation he would have had his money long ago.

Now, what is the trouble? The Court of Claims was divided equally. I have got the report, and the judges were equally divided on one question. They agreed in everything else; they had found all the facts, and the only question before the court upon which this man was denied a judgment was that he had violated the nonintercourse act; that he had left the State of Kentucky and gone into the State of Tennessee and purchased this cotton. Now, the Court of Claims, as I say, was equally divided, one-half saying that he did not, and the other half saying that he did.

What is that act? That was an act prohibiting people in the loyal States going into the Confederate States and transacting business. How did this man get there? The mere fact of the man's loyalty was this: He applied to General Anderson as to whether he had the right to go down there under this act and gather the cotton together, and General Anderson issued to him a license or permit to go and do this very thing. Under that license, he went there. Now, when we come into the Court of Claims, one-half of the court holds, under the conditions that he went into Tennessee, that he had not violated the nonintercourse act, and the other half holds that, technically, he did. All the members of the court expressed sympathy with this man that on account of this technical ground they were compelled to rule him out of court.

Now, where was he to come? They have found all the facts, and simply on the purely technical ground that he did not do it possibly but under a commission from the general commanding that department he went there to do this very thing, but the Supreme Court said that that did not set aside the law, and they expressed regret that they could not so decide, and even said to the claimant: "If you had put in your petition that you had been a resident of Tennessee for three years this court would have given you judgment against the Government for this sum of money."

Now, it is up to Congress. I want to say to the House that this is a large claim. I have been on the Committee on War Claims for nearly twelve years. The claims that come from that committee are generally small, running usually from two to three hundred dollars and very seldom exceeding five or six thousand dollars.

The committee went over the decisions of the courts and all of the evidence in the Court of Claims, and, after a careful and long deliberation, came to the conclusion that the Congress of the United States, the sovereign power, owed to this man who had been, I am not money out of the Treasury of the United States which was put there by the taxpayers, but this one hundred and twenty-eight thousand and odd dollars which had been there since 1864 without interest. This man was not guilty of laches. That act expired in 1868, and as soon as his property had been captured and turned over to General Sherman and the property had been sold, and within a few years after the money had been turned into the Treasury of the United States he filed his application with the Treasurer for the proceeds of his cotton and filed his claim in the Court of Claims, and from there it went to the Supreme Court, pressing it all the time until he became an old man and finally went down in bankruptcy and poverty.

He has an old wife and children, and I will say this: I have been on that committee for twelve years, and if this House is ever going to pass a claim doing absolute justice to a claimant against the United States Government this is one of them. No cleaner case ever came before you—no case having stronger equities and justice than are in this case. I don't know this old lady. I do not know her children, never have laid eyes on them; but I absolutely know that this claim is right and that they are now before the last tribunal, the Congress of the United States, asking by this bill that that money which has been lying in the Treasury since 1865 shall be paid over to these people, to whom it rightfully and equitably belongs.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, the only doubt I had in this case at the commencement was the question of whether this man had been guilty of violation of the nonintercourse act.

Mr. MAHON. It was a technical violation.

Mr. PAYNE. Of course this act was passed for a useful purpose. It was passed to prevent citizens of the United States, loyal citizens of the United States, who loved their country more than anything else except, perhaps, personal gain, from going into the Confederate States and bringing out property and selling it and sometimes returning the gold to the Confederate States. It was passed for that purpose. Now, this man went in at the commencement of the war. He went in for the purpose of collecting his property, as was stated by the chairman of this committee. He remained in the Confederate states for the space of about three years and collected it so successfully that he obtained $128,000 worth of cotton, which was stored at Savannah. I believe that some cotton which was stored at Savannah got to floating down the river and out of the Confederate States and into the markets of the world and that some money was secured in afterwards—paid for the payment of this cotton. The Supreme Court decided this case upon the point of a violation of the nonintercourse act.

Mr. MAHON. It was a technical violation.

Mr. PAYNE. Well they did not say it was technical. The Supreme Court says:

"Hence the only question upon the proof whether the appellant was domiciled in the Confederate States which he joined in seceding from the Union."

I am not reading from the original report of the court, but from the report of the committee. I do not suppose they put all of the report in. I hope they are frank enough with the House to put in all that bears on this question. Then at the end of the opinion we find this, that—

"Counsel expressed further doubt touching the question whether the appellant was domiciled in the Confederate States when he joined in seceding from the Union. As the case is presented to our consideration it need not be answered in the affirmative."

That is all I see of any expression of regret on the part of the Supreme Court in regard to their coming to that conclusion; but the court thought that both the Government and the claimant could have got in other evidence, and they regretted that this was not done. This case is reported in 21 Wallace. Of course that is a very early report and this is a very early case in the Supreme Court. It appears from the report that John M. Harlan was the attorney for the claimant at the time. I supposed he had always been on the Supreme Bench. It is hard for me to think back to a time when he was not there. The case must have been decided very soon after the war. Now, I asked the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] if the committee had decided the question of facts upon ex parte affidavits and he said, "No."

Mr. MAHON. We took it from the record.

Mr. PAYNE. As I understand it, the committee has no evidence in regard to that.

Mr. MAHON. We have the evidence that was before the Court of Claims.

Mr. PAYNE. But the Supreme Court said that the committee had any other evidence than the Supreme Court had upon which they rendered their decision.

Mr. MAHON. Oh, no; we have had nothing outside of that.

Mr. PAYNE. Though good men have claimed since Lincoln's time of the Supreme Court, all this time has elapsed, yet it has not been proven that this claimant has not been able to show even by ex parte affidavits that the ruling of the Supreme Court was not correct or that the finding of facts was not correct as to the fact of domicil and the fact of the violation of the nonintercourse act.

Mr. SHIRLEY. Does not the gentleman recognize that the Supreme Court was necessarily limited to a purely legal decision, and that frequently a case will arise——

Mr. PAYNE. They were limited to the question as presented by the attorneys for the claimant and the attorneys for the United States, upon the evidence as presented by them.

Mr. SHIRLEY. The gentleman does not answer my question.

Mr. PAYNE. Upon the evidence as then presented they said that the claim could not be allowed upon this very question of domicil or the question of the violation of the nonintercourse act. All this time has elapsed, and according to the statement of the chairman of the committee no evidence has been found, not even by ex parte affidavits, to show that the finding of facts upon which the Supreme Court acted was not correct as stated in the record upon which the court based its opinion.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. The gentleman will allow me to suggest that the committee thought that even though this man was a citizen of Kentucky he ought not to be cut off from his right to this money, which in equity is due him, he being a loyal citizen of a loyal State, when disloyal citizens of disloyal States were held to be entitled to their money, which was turned into the Treasury under the same circumstances.

Mr. PAYNE. He was cut off by the provision of the nonintercourse act, as held by the Supreme Court. Now, to bring him within some equity—some morality—by which the United States Government might be supposed to be bound to him, I think that this committee ought to have been able to state some facts showing that he had not engaged in collecting cotton and selling it outside.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. He had a permit.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. No attempt has been made to disprove that; he admits that he went in there.

Mr. PAYNE. It does not appear that he ever shipped a pound of cotton as a dealer in or shipper of cotton. I asked the chairman of the committee what evidence he had and he said he had no evidence.

Mr. MAHON. Evidence presented to the Court of Claims.

Mr. PAYNE. Evidence presented to the Court of Claims and also to the Supreme Court.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. The Supreme Court cut out his claim upon technical rules of evidence.

Mr. PAYNE. The court could not do otherwise than try the case upon the facts presented by the claimant.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. There was no special controversy over the facts. The court held that he had violated the nonintercourse law and therefore could not recover. The same facts were before the committee, and they concluded that, notwithstanding the strong equities of the case, he was entitled to his money, notwithstanding the fact that he had violated the nonintercourse law.

Mr. PAYNE. So that this is a question merely of moral obligation.

Mr. MAHON. The court held that the title was in Warren Mitchell, and therefore it could not be in the Government.

Mr. PAYNE. But the court did not hold that he was entitled to pay.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. The court held that he acted as a trustee.

Mr. PAYNE. Of course it is only a step beyond this case to an entire disregard of the nonintercourse act and a loose way of determining claims here, without any legal evidence whatever as to the facts.

Mr. MAHON. The court held that this man's right to this private property was unchallenged, that his title had not been divested, but refused to render judgment in his favor because of the violation of the nonintercourse act.

Mr. PAYNE. My friend has stated the case very fairly. Claims in the United States Treasury, claims for which will probably never be made. He should not lay any such flattering unction to his soul. Why, Mr. Chairman, a question similar to this came up in the last Congress in reference to the claims of certain persons for carrying the mails in the Confederate States after the war broke out. These claimants were asking payment of these claims. The Confederate government [illegible] claims were paid. The Confederate government [illegible] paid for these mail facilities. The Government of [illegible] The Government [illegible] of the Confederate government, a book showing [illegible] mutilated in some way by cutting out of it [illegible]. I saw the book myself, and it shows payments to a great many [illegible] in here and swore, without [illegible] that they had never received such. Yet this [illegible] complete settlement of these claims. Well, Congress [illegible] very well with these claims. They would [illegible] the Postmaster-General, and it [illegible] claim had been settled in full at a certain date.

Mr. MAHON. That is an entirely different matter from these claims.

Mr. PAYNE. They were quite along very well, but it turned out finally that the [illegible] they did not find on that book [illegible] an effort was made to get at the book. The [illegible]

Mr. MAHON rose.

Mr. PAYNE. Wait a minute until I tell this little story. The Postmaster-General kept the book locked up and did not allow people to see it, but some one, at the suggestion of somebody, I suppose it was the original suggestion of somebody outside, in and out of Congress where they suppose they are engaged in legislating, offered an innocent resolution one day, asking the Postmaster-General to furnish a list of these people who had been [illegible] and the full particulars contained in this book. This information was [illegible] and published as a document. As many of these people whose [illegible] did not appear on that [illegible] with, began to come to Congress with their claims. They made the same kind of a showing that they had made before. I suppose [illegible] have been paid.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. If the gentleman will permit me, I think he ought to state that these reports did not come from the Committee on War Claims of this House.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, I said another place. I did not say they came from a committee of this House. And so, if these accounts are there in the Treasury Department, that So and so's cotton has been sold, I suppose some way will be found by which these [illegible] will be ascertained, and these agents at the city of Washington, who are most industrious, thrifty, frugal people, will be sailing around these enticing letters saying that "There is such and such a claim in favor of the estate of So and so, who was your grandfather (or whoever he may have been), and if you will put it in my hands I will carry it through for you for the usual compensation of 50 per cent on the recovery." So this sort of [illegible] will go aglimmering. If we let down the bars and set aside this nonintercourse act by this bill, it will only hasten the day when these individuals will appear here and the money will be paid out. That is all I have to say.

Mr. MAHON. Now, I want to say to the gentleman from New York that the books he speaks of were kept by the Confederacy and were turned into the archives of our Government. The difference is that these books we are now referring to have been kept by the Treasury of the United States. They are not mutilated. The accounts are in Treasury books, and the Court of Claims have found that the money is in the Treasury and that it is the proceeds of the property belonging to the claimant in this bill.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, right there——

Mr. MAHON. Hold on. As I said, I have no interest in this case except to do this man the justice that should be done him, even at this late day. It is not his fault.

Mr. PAYNE. Of course the gentleman has no personal interest in the case.

Mr. MAHON. We appeal to sovereign power, and beyond all controversy that money belongs to Warren Mitchell, except that the Supreme Court on a technical point refused judgment, at same time expressing their sympathy with him. Now, in place of talking about disregarding other old rotten claims, why [illegible] That is no reason why this claim should be [illegible]. I believe in paying every [illegible] of the case. This is a body that [illegible] an outraged citizen. This is a body where no technical objection will be heeded, and if any citizen of this great Government comes here and says that the Government has taken his property, [illegible] in the Treasury, not as the money of the Government, but as his money, and that money can be traced there for an absolute certainty, I say this is a body where no technical objections will avail. We are not complaining about the Supreme Court. This man is a citizen of this country, and this is the sovereign power. He comes here and asks us to do him this justice.

Now, I hold that the act which has been referred to expired in 1868, and every man who did not file his claim to the proceeds in the Treasury was debarred by the act of 1863; but this is one of the few men who is not covered by that. I want to say, gentlemen, that the War Claims Committee are getting about three or four thousand bills referred to them every session. They report back only two or three hundred. There have been thousands of bills sent down here, but upon inquiry at the Treasury Department they could not ascertain whether the claimants owned the cotton, and the Committee on War Claims, where [illegible] asserted that a claimant has never filed his claim under the act of 1863 and asserted his right under the law, in the last twelve years have never reported a bill favorably. But this is one of the few men who did go into the Treasury Department and file his claim, and carried it through the courts, as I have stated, with the results [illegible] stated.

It is not a question of whether there is four millions. I do not know of a dollar that goes out, but if it ever does go out, it goes out by an act of Congress, so that bugaboo does not affect this bill at all, and the gentleman from New York goes to the House [illegible] by saying that he thinks a great many who get this money are not entitled to it. Why, I know of cases where President Lincoln himself gave a license, which was signed by the Secretary of War, allowing men to go down into the rebel States where Pres[illegible] and thousands of pounds of tobacco [illegible] of that State, and where that property was sold the most [illegible] Now, I ask this House in business [illegible] pass this bill. If you do, I am content; if you do not, I am content. I have discharged my duty. I say that this bill ought to pass.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MAHON. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand that there are some bills that the committee do not report that come before it.

Mr. MAHON. A great many.

Mr. PAYNE. Does the committee ever report many of them adversely and file the reports, so that they are printed for the consideration of future Congresses?

Mr. MAHON. I expect about 500 in this Congress.

Mr. PAYNE. I am very glad to hear that.

Mr. MAHON. I want to say this——

Mr. PAYNE. I had been of the opinion that the committee did not file any adverse reports.

Mr. MAHON. The only bills that are on this Calendar reported from that committee are those which have been reported after the most careful consideration.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, some of them have needed careful consideration.

Mr. MAHON. I admit that.

Mr. PAYNE. Not only turning aside the judgment of the court——

Mr. MAHON. Thousands of bills have come into that committee that will never be reported.

Mr. PAYNE. If this was to go on—granting the right to set aside the judgments of courts—there is going to be a million of them instead of 4,000.

Mr. MAHON. But we will only have [illegible] them.

Mr. PAYNE. The number will only depend upon the avarice of the claimants.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken, and the bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

LIGHT-DRAFT MONITOR ETLAH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 201) for the relief of the contractor or his legal representatives for the construction of the light-draft monitor Etlah.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the contractor or his legal representatives for the construction of the light-draft monitor Etlah [illegible] be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, with jurisdiction to hear, adjudicate, and determine the same, and to render judgment upon the merits of said claim, and to ascertain and report the amount, if any, due said contractor or his legal representatives for the construction of said vessel, and the amount so found due shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States: Provided, that the claimant or his legal representatives shall be barred from prosecuting said claim in said court unless the petition in the proceeding shall be filed within one year from the passage of this act: Provided further, that the Government of the United States may plead the statute of limitations and set up any other defense which it may have against said claim, and the same shall be heard and determined by said court, upon such evidence as may be produced by the parties to said suit, and given such weight and effect as the court shall deem equitable and just.

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. OTJEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I was requested to make this report. Therefore I will endeavor to explain the case as near as I can. In the latter part of 1862 and the beginning of 1863 the Government contracted to build twenty light-draft, iron-clad monitors. They were built in city as near the same pattern, were to be [illegible] in equal proportion, were to cost $65,000, and if completed in six months were to cost $70,000. The Government, knowing that the contractors of Boston were now in the line of war ships, reserved the right at those contracts to change the plans from time to time. The contract had at Charleston changed [illegible] plans [illegible] granted had to be very material [illegible] so the plans were [illegible] changed, and there were so many changes that, instead of these boats being completed in six months, not one was completed and accepted until November, 1865. Charles W. McCord, of St. Louis, built this boat, and built twelve besides.

There were so many delays, and the price of labor and material increased rapidly, and the cost of the monitors, as given by the testimony of the United States naval officer and the United States inspector, was nearly double [illegible] price. The result was that Mr. McCord failed, went into bankruptcy, and his assets were sold by the court in bankruptcy. Among the assets assigned were the claims for extra and for the enhanced price of labor and material in constructing this boat. The assignee of McCord went into the Court of Claims under the law [illegible] of that court, and during the progress of the trial McCord died. During the progress of the trial there was presented by the Government a receipt which was to the effect that a receipt had been given for $26,000, and that it was in full of all claims. It was signed by Gillman, Son & Co., bankers, of New York, as the agents of McCord. The messengers being unaware of this receipt, were, however, forced to submit the case to the judgment of the court without an explanation of the receipt. The Court of Claims found the facts as it shows:

From these circumstances the work required and done under the original contract was [illegible] the contractor of the extra [illegible] was paid, having a balance for extra material and labor of $6,[illegible].

The claim [illegible] the item [illegible] honor and propriety was rejected [illegible] Congress on Ways [illegible] under the [illegible] the contract [illegible] for all claims. They stated that they had no authority to sign such a receipt [illegible] assignees had been [illegible] claim to the Court of Claims [illegible] of this character [illegible] not take [illegible] stated that [illegible] to show the merits of the case.

A supplement [illegible] claim to the Court of Claims [illegible] which bill was vetoed by President Harrison. The [illegible] any precedents [illegible] that he thought the Court of Claims had [illegible] ings in the matter and had given the [illegible] which Congress could adopt the report, if it saw fit to do so. Acting upon this veto, resolutions were made in this House and also in the Senate for a direct appropriation of amount of claims, and the Senate passed a bill, but it was not reached in the House. Later, in the Fifty-fourth Congress, the bill was [illegible] in the general deficiency bill. It passed both Houses, and went to President Cleveland. President Cleveland vetoed the bill on several grounds and among other reasons he vetoed it on account of this bill, stating that there had been already paid to these people $200,000 for extras.

The President in his veto was mistaken in this regard, because the Court of Claims found that [illegible] had been paid but $110,000 on these extras, the President being in error by $894,000. His further objection was that this claimant had receipted in full for this claim, but the Court of Claims found that there was still due $90,000 on the very item which the President claimed had been receipted for, and Congress in four [illegible] made direct appropriations to relieve claimants where they had signed similar receipts. They had also in about half a dozen other cases referred claims to the Court of Claims [illegible] jurisdiction where the Court of Claims held that there [illegible] a bar to the claim. The action of the committees of both Houses since this Forty-fifth Congress have been uniformly favorable with one exception, and that is the report in the Fifty-fifth Congress. The House has reported this bill [illegible] at two different times, and at two different times passed the same. The Senate has reported this bill twenty-seven different times, and at five different times in some way or another has passed the same.

This bill is entirely similar to those that Congress has heretofore sent to the Court of Claims known as "Annie Fowler's relief of Nashville." McKay and the executors of Donald McKay for the building of the frigate "Shiloh." McKay & Aldus were the builders of the boat. They later went into bankruptcy and the assets of the firm were sold. McKay purchased these assets. By act of Congress he was permitted to go to the Court of Claims. The Court of Claims awarded something over $[illegible]. This case is almost identical with the Eliah, because the contracts were the same, the price was to be the same, and the time for completion was to be the same and these people went into bankruptcy. They had an assignment and had also signed a receipt similar to that that was signed in this case, only in the case of the Eliah it was signed by bankers in their regular course of business, but in this case the receipt was signed by McKay & Aldus, and the court held that this receipt was no bar to recovery and awarded them the sum of $[illegible].

It will also be remembered that Congress made a direct appropriation relieving the contractors who built the monitor [illegible], appropriating $125,000 for items similar to what is claimed here and substantially under similar circumstances. The boat Shiloh was built in the same yard with the Eliah, and the general office was used by both of these builders. So that the equities in the case of the two are substantially the same.

By an act approved May 3, 1902, Congress sent to the Court of Claims nearly every one of these remaining twenty claims. I believe they are all disposed of now except this one and perhaps one more. The terms under which they were sent to the Court of Claims were similar to this bill, with the exception of the last provision which has reference to matters that took place in the court heretofore in the case.

Now, I [illegible] of what amount [illegible] any one of these other claims that Congress has already [illegible]. They have paid in four instances by direct appropriation, and half a dozen other cases have been sent to the Court of Claims [illegible] been [illegible] of this character were sent to the Court of Claims, and it is no more than justice to give these people the same treatment [illegible].

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. OTJEN. Very well.

Mr. FINLEY. The real claimants are the people who purchased [illegible]

Mr. OTJEN. The [illegible] Yale. The [illegible]

Mr. FINLEY. Were they the purchasers at the bankrupt sale?

Mr. OTJEN. I [illegible]

Mr. FINLEY. What consideration did they pay?

Mr. OTJEN. I do not know; they were the largest creditors, having furnished the iron, and they owed them something like $200,000.

Mr. FINLEY. The committee has no information as to the amount of the consideration?

Mr. OTJEN. No. I presume the consideration is in some of these Court of Claims reports, but I do not remember now what it is.

Mr. FINLEY. I ask if the committee had any method of ascertaining what the consideration was?

Mr. OTJEN. I think so; but that would not be a very material point [illegible] as I take it.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman mentions other vessels built in the same yard and settled for. Did the builders go into bankruptcy and the claims pass into other hands?

Mr. OTJEN. In the case of McKay & Aldus, they went into bankruptcy, and McKay bought the claim against the Government [illegible]

Mr. FINLEY. I notice in the report of [illegible] that the bankers Gilman & Son signed a receipt. Were they [illegible] the authority of these bankers?

Mr. OTJEN. They testified before the Court of Claims that they signed the receipt in the ordinary course of business, but they did not examine the receipt, and that they had no authority from McCord further than to take the money they received.

Mr. FINLEY. I understand that. That is in the report of the committee; but I ask this question: What was the nature of the authority of these bankers as to signing the receipt?

Mr. OTJEN. They were simply agents to collect the twenty-six thousand and some odd dollars as bankers. I now yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MAHON. How much time does the gentleman from Tennessee [illegible]

Mr. SIMS. Three minutes.

Mr. MAHON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, this claim is on all fours with quite a number of others reported to the House and passed, as stated by the gentleman from Wisconsin who has just taken his seat. I opposed every one of the bills from the fact that in every instance they had settled with the Navy Department and accepted valid releases [illegible] I could in every case and got defeated most ingloriously in every case. This claim is just as good as any of the others that have been paid, and having made such an inglorious failure to convince the House with the justice of the claims, I thought I would leave the job to some one who would have much better success than I had. I shall vote against it and oppose it on the same ground I did the other cases. But if we are going to vote consistently, I think you gentlemen who voted for the other bills will have to vote for this. I shall vote against it, as I did against the others.

Mr. OTJEN. Congress having relieved practically all the others of these monitor claimants is it not right to treat this claim in the same way as the others were treated?

Mr. SIMS. To be consistent, those who voted for the other bills should vote for this one.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman from Tennessee stated that this bill is as good as some others that have been passed. Will he say that it is as good as many others that have not been paid?

Mr. SIMS. Oh, I think hundreds have not been paid that are far better than this. As I say, I only want to put myself right in this matter. I see no additional grounds for voting against it except that this has been vetoed more often than any of the others.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, of course the gentleman can make that motion, but we will debate it for a while.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Pennsylvania yielded the floor?

Mr. MAHON. Oh, no. I will give the gentleman all the time he wants.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not ask the gentleman for any time. When he gets through, I will take my seat.

Mr. MAHON. I simply want a vote on the bill.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I find that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON], the chairman of the committee, reported adversely this bill in the Fifty-fifth Congress at the second session.

Mr. MAHON. I did.

Mr. PAYNE. So I suppose we will have him voting with us against this claim now. I am glad to see that we are getting on [illegible] It only [illegible] for [illegible] some years, that we [illegible] mittee and the committee is satisfied that they ought to report [illegible] so and put themselves on record. Now, this boat was [illegible] $80,000. It has been so manipulated that if this bill passes it will cost about double that sum. We are [illegible] build up a new Navy. We expend from $[illegible] more or less, a year, paying it out on contract to build up a new Navy. If these precedents are to be followed out, in the coming generation what we expect is going to cost us $60,000,000 a year is going to cost us $120,000,000 a year.

Mr. OTJEN. In the new Navy that we are building up does the Government reserve the right to change the contract at will?

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, yes; they constantly change the contracts. The Board of Construction changes them. They put in things up to date, and things that get out of date, and all that sort of thing. We are liable to the same thing in the future, and the vice of the whole business, Mr. Chairman, is that never, never can we get a settlement. Here is the bill for a monitor built, I think, in 1862. The Government settled with the original contractor, paid him about $200,000, I think, according to this report. I will quote from the report of the chairman of the committee [Mr. MAHON] in 1897:

"The contractor has paid * * * the sum of $[illegible] for extras over and above the contract price, and of this sum the first payment on $[illegible] was made on the [illegible] day of May, 1866, and then Charles W. McCord receipted for the extras expressly in full."

It appears that some attorney signed this receipt for Charles W. McCord, and afterwards one of them testified that he was not authorized to say it was in full for all extras and bind his principal in that way, but he was authorized to receive the money.

I don't care whether he was authorized or not. Charles W. McCord was the original contractor. He knew how much had been expended in extras. He knew how much he had been delayed, and he knew at the time. He knew before he was in bankruptcy; he knew while he was still doing business; he made up his bill for his extras, and he was settled with and received his $210,000, according to the report of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. There is a good deal of haziness, if you look through all these reports, as to the amount he actually did receive. When President Harrison vetoed this bill he put it on the ground that all the facts in the case were known to Congress and there was no use in sending it to the Court of Claims. It got in as a deficiency in an appropriation bill, and on account of this item and two or three others President Cleveland vetoed the deficiency bill and put it on the ground that the man had been paid nearly double the contract price and had settled in full.

After he had settled in full, and after this receipt had been given, he went into bankruptcy, and the assignee in bankruptcy sold his assets. This valuable asset was put up and sold, and these gentlemen who are now the claimants, who now come before Congress with this large bill for extra services, were the purchasers from the assignee in bankruptcy. I have looked through these reports, as far as I have been able. The report of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OTJEN] contains some twenty pages, and the report of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] some six or eight pages.

Mr. CLAUDE KITCHIN. At what price was it sold?

Mr. PAYNE. That is what I was going to say. I have not been able to find out what price it was sold for, whether they gave a dollar for it, or some other good and valuable consideration. That does not appear anywhere in these reports. They come in here now and ask the Congress of the United States to open up this case. A gentleman who sits near me says that they did not give one dollar for it. They were creditors of this gentleman, and I suppose they had to give some nominal sum. They bid it in as creditors, to be allowed on their claim, I suppose, but they did not pay any actual money for it.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Well, there might have been a consideration even then.

Mr. PAYNE. I suppose there was some consideration named. I have not been able to find what it is, as yet. This committee has not given us that information, or, if they have, I would like them to point it out.

Mr. SPALDING. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to my friend that he is in error in [illegible] to the reasons President Cleveland gave for vetoing this. One of the grounds was that if the item was allowed the cost of the boat would be about double what the contract price called for, and I think the gentleman stated that the objection was that it had cost that much.

Mr. PAYNE. Perhaps I did make a mistake on that point. But let me read the language of President Cleveland's veto:

"The contract for the construction of this battery was made by the Government [illegible] the battery in question would be almost double that of the contract price."

Now, I am not going to debate this bill in extenso. I am not fully enough posted to do so, and I do not know that any other Member is.

Mr. OTJEN. Will the gentleman read what Senator BURROWS said, following the reading of the veto?

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, yes. I see that Senator BURROWS says on the next page that these people were paid, not $200,000 but $[illegible]. On the other hand, my friend from Pennsylvania, who is usually very accurate in figures, says that they have been paid $210,000. Where these learned doctors disagree, far be it from me to undertake to settle such a question of fact. But I do not care whether the amount paid was $110,000 or $200,000.

Mr. OTJEN. The Court of Claims found the facts.

Mr. PAYNE. I see it stated in another of these reports that $210,000 was the amount paid. I can only get my information from the statements presented to us by the committee. Of course, I have not time to go and examine the files; it would be impossible. I must take the facts as presented here.

But I repeat, I do not care whether the amount paid was $110,000 or $210,000. This man was settled with. He brought in his bill for extras; he submitted the details to the Department; he agreed with the Department as to the amount, and the Department paid him in full, and that ought to be, it seems to me, an end to this claim.

But, sir, my friend from Nebraska [Mr. MCCARTHY], who sits behind me, has had more time to examine this matter than I have, and I yield to him.

Mr. MCCARTHY. Mr. Chairman, I have made only a casual examination of this case, and if the gentlemen who are in favor of this bill can convince me that it is right no man in this Hall will more cheerfully vote for the measure than I will. But after my examination of the case I am satisfied that the claim is wrong. I am satisfied that the amount was paid before the claim was assigned. I am thus satisfied from an examination of the evidence and from the further fact that two Presidents of the United States have vetoed bills for the payment of this claim, and from the further fact that the Supreme Court of the United States has squarely declared that the claim was paid, and paid in full.

The only reasons assigned by the committee for making a favorable report on the bill are these: First. That other bills fully as iniquitous as this have been paid. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] has candidly admitted that heretofore he has always opposed such measures as this. I assume that he was candid in his opposition, and that he still believes the opposition which he interposed to former bills of this same character was right. Now, if it was wrong to allow these other bills, it is wrong to allow this, just because this is similar to those and no worse.

Mr. SIMS. I opposed this bill in the committee and did all I could to prevent its being reported, and I am going to oppose its adoption by this Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MAHON. I hope the gentleman will not undertake to dis-

Mr. [illegible]. I did not file any minority report, and it is only in this way that I can vindicate my position.

Mr. McCARTHY. Another reason assigned by the committee in its report for the consummation of this bill is that [illegible] Congresses have acted upon it favorably. [illegible] of these two measures is sufficient [illegible] consideration of the House.

I assume that this report [illegible] from this report. First, on page 4, we find that

Mr. [illegible]

Now [illegible] for an intelligent [illegible] it it is be [illegible] ding of [illegible] of that same firm who had an [illegible]

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes.

Mr. MAHON. [illegible] the gentleman [illegible] Treasury Department [illegible]

Mr. McCARTHY. That may be the [illegible], but I submit [illegible] evidence in this case to show that du[illegible]

[illegible] In any event, he would be [illegible] to deny the [illegible] facts. We will [illegible] and we will see if the real facts in the case [illegible] or understanding on the part of Mr. Gillman or his firm. The report says:

[illegible]

Now it does not matter what his understanding was. His authority was derived from a written power of attorney, and that [illegible] power of attorney is incorporated in the [illegible] Supreme Court, and it is better [illegible] than to rely upon the report of Mr. Gillman [illegible] reminiscences in his mind twenty or thirty years later. [illegible]

[illegible] had no power to bind their principal [illegible] McCord and the United States.

[illegible] for Mr. McCord had received [illegible] in these transactions. [illegible] not to do any act pertaining to the money that he could do if personally present. [illegible] not seem to [illegible] upon the authorities, and the most was expended [illegible] for that purpose.

Mr. [illegible]. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes.

Mr. [illegible]. Where do you get that information?

Mr. McCARTHY. I get it from the copy of the power of attorney filed as a part of the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States. I will read it [illegible]

Again this report, copying from the report of a former Congress, says:

It [illegible] that this whole statement is erroneous and misleading it is only [illegible]

That is, the misstatement by President Cleveland in his veto [illegible]

Now, what are the facts [illegible] agent [illegible]

Point to Mr. [illegible], please, signed this receipt without [illegible] the knowledge of his principal or his authority to bind him in [illegible]

We will see about that. Now, I should like to know what there [illegible] full [illegible] receipt.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. [illegible] Mr. Gillman's an[illegible]

Mr. [illegible]. [illegible] authority to sign it. He had power and authority [illegible]

[illegible] to the point now where they begin seriously [illegible] ly signed the receipt or not. But [illegible] it was done [illegible] to receive whatever moneys [illegible] the payment to be made [illegible] of the ac[illegible]

You will agree with me, after having [illegible] the second power of attorney executed in this case, that they had full authority and that it was their duty to know. Any man in McCord's situation, who places his case in the hands of his attorney, is bound by what his attorney does as fully as if he had performed the act himself.

Again, the courts proceeded seemingly upon the theory that McCord had participated in or assented to the transaction of the attorney and his rights were therefore necessarily concluded by the receipt executed by his attorneys in fact.

Again:

In fact, from the [illegible] your committee [illegible] their part of adjusting the claims of [illegible]

Now I read from the United States Reports, volume 95, beginning on page 62. I will first read the [illegible] which Gillman, Sons & Co. signed:

[Ellah—Payment on account.]

NEW YORK, April 21, 1866.

[illegible] United States [illegible] W. [illegible] were [illegible]

[illegible] extras as compared with the original contract price, [illegible] paid long before, and [illegible] was executed solely for the purpose of settling the claim which remained for extra work and labor.

Mr. CHRISMAN. Does the gentleman know how much [illegible] of extras?

Mr. McCARTHY. Well, President Cleveland said that after his investigation [illegible] had been paid for extras and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MAHON], in his report to the House, said the same thing.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Two hundred and ten thousand [illegible] dollars.

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes. I desire to read the first power of attorney and then ask why the second power of attorney was executed:

[illegible] McCord [illegible] made [illegible] and [illegible] at the navy agency [illegible] all payments due or to [illegible] at St. Louis, Mo., named the [illegible] as per contract dated [illegible] June, 1861, [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] my hand and seal the 24th day of [illegible]

CHARLES W. McCORD [SEAL.]

Sealed and delivered in the presence of—

THOMAS L. THORNWELL.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. That was three years before this receipt was [illegible]

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes, sir; but before the time that the light-[illegible] had been completed under the original contract [illegible] had been suggested and arranged for.

Now, [illegible] of January, 1894, the following power of attorney was [illegible]

[illegible] of the city of New York, by true and [illegible] it, without pro-[illegible]

What! Do as they were authorized to do under the other one? No.

To ask, demand, sue for—

It looks as if they were going to have a lawsuit now, so there is authorization—to sue for, recover and receive all such sum or sums of money, debts, goods, wares, and other demands whatsoever, which are or shall be [illegible]

And will you permit Messrs. Gillman, Son & Co., in the face of a written authority of that character, to come before you [illegible] that they did not have authority to receipt for Mr. McCord? Would not we be considered a wise set of legislators to [illegible] any such violent construction of this instrument as they [illegible] place upon it in view of what the Supreme [illegible] presently? However, I will proceed with the reading of this power of attorney:

[illegible] to the changes, the cost of that work was [illegible]

The appellants asserted a claim for this amount also, which the court re-[illegible]

[illegible] made [illegible] something had occurred to bring about a [illegible] the price of labor and the price of material from [illegible] have recovered from the other [illegible] the contract was [illegible] Not by any manner of means. [illegible] and are [illegible] by it.

[illegible] the [illegible] of Mr. McCord [illegible] claims [illegible] ington to St. Louis and from there to New York, and the presumption is that that is what was done.

The Supreme Court, in [illegible] says:

[illegible] it, without pro-[illegible]

the second proceedings brought in the Court of Claims. The other cases have gone to the Supreme Court, and the second proceeding was upheld out of the Court of Claims on the ground that it did not have jurisdiction.

Mr. McCARTHY. I have already discussed the first proceeding.

Mr. STALLINGS. And the testimony of Gillman & Sons has not been overturned or rather has never been explained by the testimony of Gillman & Sons in the proceeding that went to the Supreme Court, but was explained in the subsequent case in the court of claims.

Mr. McCARTHY. It has never been explained by Gillman & Sons. [illegible]

Mr. STALLINGS. I am not discussing that branch of it.

Mr. McCARTHY. [illegible] $74,000 which [illegible] the government for [illegible] land [illegible] $1.25 [illegible] where the [illegible] and such [illegible] [illegible] a [illegible] [illegible].

Let us do [illegible] let us save our money and use it liberally for legitimate purposes. Instead of squandering it on spurious and fictitious claims.

Mr. COLLIER. Now, it does not make any difference to me whether this [illegible] or not. All I care about is to do a debt to the [illegible] [illegible] to me. The facts are [illegible] showing as the [illegible] [illegible] its path. It [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] and a United States [illegible] have [illegible] before the Court of Claims that the court of this land was [illegible] what it was [illegible] to be in the first place. Nobody denies that this claimant signed a receipt which purported to be in full but [illegible] the case of Nathaniel McKee v. The United States, where [illegible] receipt was signed just the same as in this case. Congress sent that claim to the Court of Claims, and the claim was allowed and the man received $[illegible] and the receipt was not held a bar. In the act passed and approved May [illegible] [illegible] very best claims are sent to the Court of Claims under [illegible] lar to this. Now, I don't care whether this [illegible] [illegible] ably or not. But I do say that we ought to treat [illegible] the same as we do another. If it is right to send these [illegible] claimants to the Court of Claims then it is right to send this one there. If it is not right to send this one [illegible] Congress [illegible] [illegible] these other cases. I believe that [illegible] hearing the [illegible] has just as much merit as the other claims, and he [illegible] [illegible] as these other claims. [illegible] been out of [illegible] has already passed. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation?

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. PAYNE) there were ayes 71, noes 44.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report back the bill to the House with the recommendation that it be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. As it stands now, the committee will go right back to the House.

Mr. PAYNE. Then I shall insist upon my motion that the committee rise and report back the bill to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation that it be laid on the table?

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

SETTLEMENT WITH THE STATE OF IOWA.

Mr. HAUGEN. The chairman of the committee yields to me that I may call up the bill (H. R. 6345) for the relief of the State of Iowa.

The bill was read, as follows:

[illegible] Secretary of the Treasury be and he is hereby authorized [illegible] the State of Iowa [illegible] Iowa troops after being mustered into the United States service. [illegible]

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

[illegible] $90,545.70 [illegible] the State of Iowa for money paid and expenses incurred in Iowa troops after being mustered into the United States service. [illegible] in a report made by the Auditor for the War Department on a similar bill introduced in the Fifty-second Congress on January 26, 1903, to the Secretary of the Treasury, to state:

[illegible] of Iowa within a few days [illegible] shown that the total disbursement of every nature amounts to [illegible].

Amount stated in this bill is $90,545.70, a difference of $[illegible]. The amount stated in the bill is [illegible] less than the amount shown in the report made by the War Department and is accounted for in Adjutant-General Byer's letter, of Iowa, under date of February 11, 1903, and incorporated in this report, and I refer you to page [illegible] of this report.

I also call your attention to the Adjutant-General's statement in his letter of January [illegible], page [illegible] of this report.

[illegible] Department [illegible] A.

I also call your attention to the statement made by the Acting Auditor of the Treasury, Mr. Spaulding, in his letter of January [illegible], page [illegible] of this report.

[illegible] disallowed.

O. L. SPAULDING.

I also call attention to Acting Auditor Seeds's statement, of the War Department, page [illegible] of this report.

The evidence goes to show that the money was expended in good faith. That the Adjutant-General had the supervision and paid all claims through his department, and that [illegible] they had the approval of Capt. J. C. Olmsted, of the United States Cavalry, mustering officer, then on duty at Iowa National Guard.

It appears [illegible] claims were made out, but bills were not taken out [illegible] for payment [illegible] that the approval of the United States [illegible] authority for reimbursement by the General Government. [illegible] disputed [illegible].

STATE OF IOWA, [illegible]

[illegible] before me by L. M. Shaw, governor, and M. H. Byers, adjutant-general, of Iowa, this [illegible] day of September, A. [illegible]

[illegible]
Clerk of the Supreme Court of [illegible]

The act of July 8, 1898, was clearly for the purpose of reimbursing the States for money paid out by States in mustering into the United States service. Many of the claims have been disallowed by the War Department merely on technical grounds. [illegible] of the [illegible]. We find a [illegible] the War Department or [illegible] law, and if there is any doubt as to the legality of a claim or the claims are a proper charge under certain laws, then it is necessary to disallow the claims; but the spirit of the law was to pass this and all similar claims, and it is now for Congress to carry out the intent of the law and not to stand on technicalities.

The governor of the State of Iowa, Leslie M. Shaw, and his honest and efficient aid, Adjutant-General Byers, whose integrity and patriotism have never been questioned—Governor Shaw recognized all over this land as one of the most [illegible] men, whose fame and popularity are not confined to the State of Iowa, but have spread beyond those recognized as a lawyer, a man of vast [illegible] in business affairs, supported by his able aid—have acted in good faith.

Now, then, suppose some irregularity occurred, and that some of this [illegible] had been [illegible] and not been [illegible] memorandum [illegible] receipt [illegible] claim: Nobody questions the [illegible] or the standing of these gentlemen, or their capacity for business.

We were then at war with Spain, and I fancy the question was not [illegible] with all the [illegible] red tape [illegible] rules and regulations of any [illegible].

Iowa had been called upon to furnish her share of the 125,000 volunteers called for April 23, 1898, and subsequent calls. The question uppermost in the minds of these men was not only how to furnish the men, but how to furnish the best men, and how to get them to the front the quickest, as well as [illegible] their [illegible]. And let me say to you that the [illegible] were furnished promptly and cheerfully. You got the best we had; they were the very flower of manhood, the very cream of this country; wherever then went, whatever they encountered, they conducted themselves like men, and contributed their part in bringing about the [illegible].

Will any Member of this House say by vote or action that this or any other State shall not be [illegible] paid or incurred in the muster into service, or a single dollar paid for the comfort and protection for any one of these men in health or sickness? I believe not. We all glory in the heroic deeds of these gallant men who have brought so much fame and luster to America's name and are anxious to show a just appreciation of the noble sacrifices which have been made for this country. In all our direful hours, whether during the war with Spain or any other conflict, a sacrifice which includes, in addition to the sufferings at home, the expenditure of money [illegible] the loss of the brave men who [illegible] memory we will ever bow with reverence and respect.

The American people believe in a just recognition of the services rendered, either by our soldiers, our States, or any individual.

Gentlemen, here is an opportunity to show your appreciation of services by the State of Iowa and her people.

This bill has been carefully considered by the Committee on War Claims, and has been unanimously reported [illegible] Fifty-seventh and Fifty-eighth Congresses.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks for the purpose of printing a few tables in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. [illegible] consent to extend his remarks as in the RECORD. [illegible] [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAUGEN. The tables referred to are as follows:

Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HAUGEN, the bill as amended was laid aside to be favorably reported to the House.

INDIANA STATE BOARD OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. MAHON. I call up the bill (H. R. 7402) for the relief of the Indiana State board of agriculture.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be and he is hereby, authorized [illegible] Indiana State board of agriculture [illegible] Army [illegible] thorized [illegible] lings and [illegible] value [illegible] to certify to the [illegible] due to said Indiana State board of agriculture [illegible] transportation, and damage, or in any manner arising or growing out of the same.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, it appears by the report that this claim was not filed in time under the act of June 6, 1900. What liability does that act create?

Mr. MAHON. That act provided that the governors of the States should file these claims under that act. Through a misunderstanding or oversight this claim was not filed within the time prescribed by the act.

Mr. PAYNE. Does the act prescribe under what terms the Government shall be liable?

Mr. MAHON. Oh, yes; that is all settled under the terms of the act.

Mr. PAYNE. Why should not this bill be so amended as to [illegible] terms [illegible] must [illegible] the terms of that act.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Prior to the time this bill was introduced [illegible] the claims which are set up in the report [illegible] would probably have been [illegible] I would [illegible] passed, but for the fact that the members and officers of the State board of agriculture were [illegible] This gentleman was therefore [illegible] Where [illegible] was passed on by the Fifty-second Congress [illegible] for a [illegible] but as has been [illegible] I believe that the War Department [illegible] the subject [illegible] That is merely an [illegible] question. [illegible] money of the Treasury to pay this claim [illegible] explained by the [illegible] and [illegible] general [illegible] claim.

Mr. PAYNE. [illegible] is, I believe, a general appropriation for the payment of such claims.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I do not know as to that. [illegible]

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman [illegible] that the Secretary of War [illegible] under the terms of the act of June 6, 1900?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I am not familiar with the terms of the act. I have not examined it carefully.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, here it is. You refer to it in your report.

Mr. MAHON. [illegible] limited, [illegible] under [illegible] as may have been [illegible] by the act of June 6, 1900, and [illegible]

Mr. HOLLIDAY. All that the committee propose and all that the [illegible] have been [illegible] claims [illegible]

Mr. PAYNE. The report states that this claim was filed in the War Department under the provisions of the act of June 6, 1900, but after the time prescribed for filing claims of this character had passed. Now, I have not the [illegible] ing the [illegible] payment, but we do not want to enlarge the scope of the statute.

Mr. MAHON. Such an amendment as the gentleman from New York [illegible] Mr. PAYNE [illegible]

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I have no [illegible] an amendment if the gentleman thinks there is any danger that should be guarded against.

Mr. MAHON. I ask that the bill be read again for information.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill will be again reported.

The bill was read again.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, where the words [illegible] "that from [illegible] I move to strike out the proviso in the [illegible]

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I do not deem the amendment necessary, but I have no objection to it.

Mr. MAHON. That is all right. What is the date of that act?

Mr. PAYNE. [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

[illegible] is "United States," insert "under the act of [illegible]

Mr. PAYNE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the [illegible] I [illegible] there is no provision but what the appropriation will be made.

Mr. MAHON. It will come back as an adjudicated account and will go into the deficiency bill.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. My impression was that this did not carry a direct [illegible]

Mr. PAYNE. It appears that you must get the money out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I see no [illegible] should be done provided the matter can be safely accomplished.

Mr. PAYNE. Then I move to strike out the words appropriating the money, directing it to be paid out of any money not otherwise [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

[illegible] all after the word "damage," on page 2, line 2.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I am satisfied to accept that amendment.

[illegible] to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a [illegible]

Mr. PAYNE. It seems to be a pretty old matter, and I think the House ought to have some information on it.

Mr. HASKINS. It has been reported favorably at every session, either by one House or the other, and it passed both Houses in the Fifty-sixth Congress.

Mr. MAHON. It has never been vetoed. It simply reached the President too late.

Mr. PAYNE. I have not been able to find out what the bill is about.

Mr. HASKINS. I will ask the Clerk to read the report of Senator TELLER, commencing on page 2 of the committee report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read it in the time of the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

The [illegible] Claims, to whom was referred the petition of George [illegible] report, which [illegible] submitted have examined the petition of George [illegible] over the Tennessee [illegible] the power of this Department to assist you in the [illegible]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, the report seems to be very clear and complete, and I shall take great pleasure in voting for the bill.

Mr. HASKINS. I ask for a vote.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

BOWMAN ACT CLAIMS.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on War Claims has passed a resolution authorizing me to call up the bill H. R. 9518. This bill I will put in charge of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GREENE], who reported the bill. It contains the findings of the court under the Bowman Act. It is purely findings and nothing else, and the bill has been very carefully prepared by a subcommittee.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Is that the omnibus bill?

Mr. MAHON. It is what we call the "findings-of-fact bill."

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I do not wish, and do not propose, to offer any obstruction or objection to the omnibus claims bill, because I am interested in that bill myself, but I will ask unanimous consent before that bill is taken up to take up House bill 2819, for the relief of St. John's Masonic Lodge, Newbern, N. C. The reason I ask this is because it is different from other bills, having passed both Houses of Congress, and it is res adjudicata. It has the seal of approval of the Fifty-sixth Congress, and we can pass it in a few minutes. If you will pass it, I will promise not to object to the passage of any other bill of equal merit.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 2819. Is there objection?

Mr. MAHON. I object.

Mr. PAYNE. Regular order.

Mr. MAHON. I would like the gentleman's bill to pass, but I am obliged to carry out the instructions of the committee.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Understand I am not opposing the omnibus bill, but the Masonic claim bill has been reported favorably to this Congress and passed the Fifty-sixth Congress after full debate, and it will only take a few minutes to pass it now.

Mr. PAYNE. The regular order is the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. MAHON. I move to take up House bill 9518 and proceed to its consideration. The committee has instructed me to make that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the committee now take up House bill 9518.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I raise the point of order against that motion. It seems to me the order of the Committee is the way to consider the bills.

Mr. MAHON. It is entirely within the power of the committee to take up any bill.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I think it is in the power of the committee to do that under the order for the call of committees, but not under the order.

Mr. KEIFER. The rule provides that the Committee of the Whole may take up any bill on the Private Calendar. There is no question about that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the rule so provides.

The question was taken on the consideration of the bill; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. PAYNE. Division.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 42, noes 13.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to pay the balance due on account of certain claims for stores and sup[illegible] the act ap[illegible]

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill and read to page 4, line 19.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. The bill must first be read; and I make that point of order.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be further dispensed with.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be dispensed with, as we could not get to the second reading of the bill to-night.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MAHON. I move that the committee do now rise and report the bills to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FOSTER of Vermont, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration sundry bills on the Private Calendar and had directed him to report back the bill H. R. 201 with the recommendation that it be laid on the table; and also sundry other bills, some with and some without amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bills do pass; and also that the committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 9548 and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bills and amendments reported.

Mr. PAYNE. Ask unanimous consent. It is not in order to make that motion.

Mr. MAHON. I ask unanimous consent that the previous question be considered as ordered on the bills and amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the previous question may be ordered upon the various bills and amendments to their final passage. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LIGHT-DRAFT MONITOR ETLAH.

The first bill reported from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 201) for the relief of the contractor or his legal representatives for the construction of the light-draft monitor Etlah, with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

The question was taken, and the bill was ordered to be laid on the table.

HOUSE BILLS PASSED.

House bills of the following titles, favorably reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendment, were severally considered, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed:

H. R. 1700. A bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Warren Mitchell, deceased; and

H. R. 1513. A bill for the relief of the estate of George W. Saulpaw.

House bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole [illegible], were severally considered, the amendments agreed to, the bills as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed:

H. R. 7875. A bill for the relief of the estate of Dr. Thomas J. Coward, deceased;

H. R. 6645. A bill for the relief of the State of Iowa; and

H. R. 7402. A bill for the relief of the Indiana State board of agriculture.

On motion of Mr. MAHON, a motion to reconsider the votes by which several bills and amendments were passed was laid on the table.

[illegible]

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were [illegible] and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 2794. An act [illegible] building of a dam across the [illegible] River at or near the village of Sauk Rapids, [illegible] Minn.—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. R. 11. Joint resolution [illegible] gentlemen [illegible] Treasury Department [illegible] of [illegible] ties of Arizona—to the [illegible]

S. R. 97. Joint resolution [illegible] ing for the editions to be printed of [illegible] of the Librarian of Congress—to the Committee on the Library.

[illegible]

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 98. A joint resolution to provide for the removal of snow and ice from the streets, cross walks, and gutters of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. [illegible] An act providing for an additional officer in the district of Chicago, in the collection district of Indiana and Illinois; and

S. 2795. An act to amend an act entitled "An act for the regulation of the practice of dentistry in the District of Columbia and for the protection of the people from empiricism in relation thereto," approved June 6, 1892.

UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. BEDE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 707 be taken from the Speaker's desk and placed on its passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota calls up the following Senate bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 707) to amend an act entitled "An act providing the terms and places of holding the courts of the United States in the district of Minnesota, and for other purposes," approved April 26, 1890.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of an act entitled "An act providing the terms and places of holding the courts of the United States in the district of Minnesota, and for other purposes," approved April 26, 1890, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. That regular terms of the circuit and district courts shall be held as follows: For the first division, on the third Tuesday in May and the third Tuesday in November; for the second division, on the fourth Tuesday in April and the fourth Tuesday in October; for the third division, on the 23d day of June and the first Tuesday in December; for the fourth division, on the last Tuesday in April and the first Tuesday in October; for the fifth division, on the second Tuesday in January and the second Tuesday in July; for the sixth division, on the first Tuesday in May and the second Tuesday in November."

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after the 1st day of March, A. D. 1904.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a similar bill (H. R. 3598) will lie on the table.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 16 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Willamette River, Oregon—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation cases relating to the brig William, Joseph Thompson, master—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, submitting, in response to an inquiry of the House, a statement of the number of horses and vehicles used in his Department—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3598) to amend an act entitled "An act providing the terms and places of holding the courts of the United States in the district of Minnesota, and for other purposes," approved April 26, 1890, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 667); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. CRUMPACKER, from the Committee on the Census, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10653) to amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act to provide for a permanent Census Office," approved March 6, 1902, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 668); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9919) providing for the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North at Fargo, N. Dak., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 670); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. BROWN of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11355) to ratify and amend an agreement with the Indians located upon the Grande Ronde Reservation, in the State of Oregon, and to make an appropriation to carry the same into effect, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 671); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. McCALL, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 853) for the erection of a monumental statue in the city of Washington, D. C., to Paul Jones, the founder of the American Navy, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 672); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. Mr. PETTIGREW also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $[illegible] for the purchase of a site for a public building at Glendive

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator asks that the resolutions may go over, lying on the table, without prejudice.

Mr. TILLMAN. And that they shall retain all the privileges they now have.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TORPEDO BOATS AND TORPEDO-BOAT DESTROYERS.

Mr. HALE. I move that Senate Document No. 112, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, being a statement [illegible] torpedo boats and torpedo boat destroyers authorized by the act of May 4, 1898, in connection with the report of the commission thereon, together with certain other data in [illegible], be reprinted and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

RELATIONS WITH NEW GRANADA OR COLOMBIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States: which was read, and, on motion of Mr. HALE, was, with the accompanying papers, ordered to lie on the table, and be printed:

[illegible]

WASHINGTON, February 5, 1904.

[illegible] THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, February 5, 1904.

PUBLIC BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (H. R. 1518) for the relief of the estate of George W. Snodgrass;

A bill (H. R. 1709) for the relief of the legal representatives of William Mitchell, deceased;

A bill (H. R. 3875) for the relief of Dr. Thomas J. Cowan, deceased;

A bill (H. R. 6845) for the relief of the State of Iowa; and

A bill (H. R. 7402) for the relief of the Indiana State board of agriculture.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6655) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for prior years, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. HALE. I make the usual request in regard to action on the committee amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the amendments of the committee stand first reserve consideration. The Chair hears no objection.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Department of State," on page 2, after line 9, to insert:

[illegible] the President to cooperate through diplomatic [illegible] and the [illegible] for and the [illegible] for the year ending June 30, 1904.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 24, to increase the appropriation for contingent expenses to the Department of State from $[illegible] to $[illegible].

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 3, to insert:

For the purchase of two horses for the official use of the Department of State, $[illegible].

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Foreign intercourse," on page 3, line 12, to increase the appropriation for salaries of secretaries in the diplomatic service, "including not exceeding [illegible] of all grades in the Department of State, connected by telegraph and cable," for the fiscal year 1904, from $[illegible] to $[illegible].

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 12, to insert:

For expenses and services of inspectors of consulates, to be expended under the direction of the Department of State, $[illegible].

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 5, after the word "annum," to insert "consul at Dalny, Manchuria, at the rate of $3,500 per annum;" and in line 6 after the word "all," to strike out "$3,111.27" and insert "$4,569.60;" so as to make the clause read:

Consular service in Manchuria: For the following for the balance of the fiscal year 1904, namely: [illegible] consul at Mukden, Manchuria, at the rate of [illegible] per annum; [illegible] consul at Antung, Manchuria, at the rate of [illegible] per annum; and so much of the [illegible] as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Treasury Department," on page 6, after line 11, to insert:

For postal service to foreign countries addressed to Postal Union countries, and for postage for the Treasury Department, for the fiscal year 1904, $[illegible].

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 10, to insert:

[illegible] For [illegible] for the [illegible] of the [illegible] in all, $9,025.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 1 on page 10, the amendment under the heading "Interstate Commerce Commission."

Mr. BAILEY. I desire at this point to inquire whether it is necessary to make points of order as the bill is being read or to reserve them?

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me, the practice in the Senate is different from that of the House. Points of order need not be reserved.

Mr. BAILEY. A point of order can be made at any time.

Mr. HALE. No; a point of order can be made on any amendment that is offered when it is presented, and it can be made to any part of the bill as it is read.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand that the bill is being read now for amendment.

Mr. HALE. If I may be allowed to make a statement, I understand that the bill is now as in Committee of the Whole Senate, and that when it is reported to the Senate, after it has got through the Committee of the Whole, all points of order are open that would be open upon the bill as originally presented.

Mr. BAILEY. I wanted to reserve my right to make a point of order against this particular amendment.

Mr. HALE. As the Senator from Massachusetts suggests, it can be made at either time.

Mr. BAILEY. Just so that I can make it before it is closed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary read the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations which was on page 10, beginning with line 1, to insert the following:

[illegible] and

Provided further, That if at any time after said exposition company has received the amount hereby appropriated it makes default in the application or in the prosecution of said enterprise, or any part thereof, as herein required, then, and in that case, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to [illegible] the Secretary of the Treasury shall [illegible] upon which the same is to be issued, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall [illegible] upon which the same is to be issued, and the Secretary of the United States.

Mr. CULBERSON. Is an amendment to the amendment in order at this time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. CULBERSON. I move to amend the amendment by adding at the end the following proviso:

[illegible] from all sections of the United States, a [illegible] line established by the Secretary of Agriculture [illegible] Department and by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask that the following letter from the Secretary of Agriculture on the subject of the amendment to the amendment be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. HALE. (Going back to page 31, in line 12 I move to strike out the word "three" and insert "six."

The SECRETARY. In line 12, page 31, it is proposed to strike out the word "three," before the word "hundred," and insert the word "six;" so as to read:

[illegible] * * * and for preparing, at a cost not exceeding $[illegible], an illustrated description of said statue.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. That is all, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois rose to an amendment. The bill is in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. HALE. The amendment has been withdrawn.

Mr. HOPKINS. After a conference with the Senator in charge of the bill I will not present the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments? The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any wish to reserve any of the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole? [A pause.] Shall the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole be agreed to in the Senate?

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I beg to call attention to the fact that the Senator from Texas is not in his seat. He stated that he desired to have something to say upon one amendment which he wanted to have stricken out.

Mr. COCKRELL. He knew the bill was under consideration.

Mr. BATE. I merely call attention to it. It is nothing to me. I observed that the Senator from Texas was not in his seat, and I called attention to it as a usual courtesy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not the duty of the Chair to have Senators present when a bill is under consideration.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, what is the question?

Mr. HALE. I sent for the Senator from Texas some time ago.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us vote.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair asked whether or not it was the wish of any Senator to reserve any one of the amendments reported to the Senate from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to reserve the point of order, or to make it now, if necessary, against the amendment of the committee, beginning in line 1, page 10, providing for a loan of $1,000,000 to the Louisiana Exposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the other amendments reported to the Senate from the Committee of the Whole? The Chair hears no objection, and they are regarded as agreed to.

The Senator from Texas makes a point of order on one amendment. Will the Senator please state his point of order?

Mr. BAILEY. It is that there is no existing law authorizing further aid to this exposition, either by the way of a loan or direct gift. I take it that the Chair does not deem it necessary to have the point further argued.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas does not distinctly state the point of order. Is it that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill?

Mr. BAILEY. It is what would properly be called special legislation, and that is the very objection I have to it. If it were a proposition to loan money to every man in the country who had undertaken an enterprise and found himself without sufficient funds to carry it through, it would be a general law; but it is a special law, because it provides a special loan to this special institution. But the rule, I observe, uses the words "general legislation," and to conform the point of order to the rule I submit that this is general legislation and therefore not in order under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator from Texas now desire further to enforce his point of order by argument?

Mr. BAILEY. I think I could not enforce it by an argument, and I am not disposed to occupy the time of the Senate needlessly. I take it that the Chair is as ready to rule on the point of order now as he would be after the most elaborate discussion.

I should like to defeat this proposition if I can. I should like to see it go out on the point of order; but I have never seen anything go out on a point of order that a majority of the Senate desired to keep in. Still, however, out of a kind of [illegible] deference to the rule I make the point of order in the hope, but not in the expectation, that it will go out.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I fully sympathize with the Senator from Texas. I do not desire to occupy much time of the Senate.

The situation is anomalous. It has never existed before. The answer to the Senator, in short, must be that the Government has already embarked in this enterprise, that it has committed itself to it by appropriations, that it is a continuing enterprise, and that all that is done now is the advance of certain moneys, to be repaid in a specific way.

The charter of the Exposition Company is a very broad one. Anticipating a point of order, I have been looking it over. Section 1 of the act of March 3, 1902, declared by the United States that there should be this exhibit. It does not leave it to somebody else, but declares that there shall be this exhibit. Section 2 provides a United States commission, to be appointed by the President, to exercise certain jurisdiction over this enterprise and all through its operation. That is another part of this great charter. Section [illegible] provides that the commission shall accept the site selected for the exposition, and that is another very important feature of this large charter, as I call it.

Section 3 provides that anybody else shall fix the designation, but that the Government shall, and when the designation shall be and that is another step. Section 9 provides that [illegible] shall be made to the world, not by any officer of any company or any association, but by the Government of the United States.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from Maine permit me to interrupt him with a question just at this point?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. It has been some time since I have read this particular act, but all preceding [illegible] in any way suggestion that the passage of the act should not commit the Government in any way to further appropriation.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BAILEY. I wonder if that is in this act.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly; unless the Government did not go further and commit itself by further appropriations, this company and this exposition could not claim anything more. But while the Government is not committed, it may, as I contend, go further, as it is proposed to do here.

Section 14 provides for the Government participating in the exposition by an immense exhibit, and a block at less than something more than [illegible]. Section 20 gives copyright upon certain conditions to this great enterprise. $1,000,000 of our money. That has been paid in. We have that interest in it. Section 22 provides that [illegible] is all sealed and the business is wound up the United States shall be a shareholder or stockholder and have a share of all the proceeds that are left.

Now, I could not, if I amplified all the morning, state more clearly the reasons why the Committee on Appropriations believed that this further aid, limited and guarded as it is in every respect, was justifiable under the law and under the rules applicable to appropriations in the United States Senate.

The Committee on Appropriations is conservative, and it would not have reported the amendment unless it had believed that under all these conditions the appropriation was just. Under the corporate participation by the Government in this whole affair, its interest in it now and every day, and its final interest as a creditor in the property that is left to be divided, of which the United States Government has a part. The committee did not think that under any conditions should the Government come to the rescue—if I may so put it—of this great enterprise and further embark in it.

But I am willing to leave the question of order to the Chair.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the rule declares that all general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, with certain exceptions, and it then, after several recitals, declares:

And no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill [illegible] unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session.

The next amendment was, on page 57, after line 12, to insert:

Of course if this can be justified at all, it must be justified as the Senator from Maine has sought to justify it, upon the ground that it is in pursuance of existing law. It strikes me as a little singular that the Senator from Maine can find authority for this appropriation in an existing law, which existing law specifically declares that the Government shall not be committed to any further appropriation. In other words, the existing law gave these exceptional gentlemen $5,000,000 of the public Treasury for this great exposition, and then committed the Government to certain extensions which the Senator from Maine says will cost about $6,000,000, thus making it plain that the Government in that act provided for an expenditure of $11,000,000 of public money. That was generous enough. And it is usual, I believe, that Congress in its wisdom should have seen fit to incorporate a proviso that it should not be committed to any further expense. Possibly it is true that the owners had obtained your consideration.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator from Texas allow me? If I said so I regretted it. The amount is not nearly so large as that, but it is a large amount.

Mr. BAILEY. I have been misunderstood by the Senator.

Mr. HALE. No; I guess the Senator is right. I think I may have inadvertently used that before a Senator, but some other appropriation. It is a very large amount, but not so large.

Mr. BAILEY. I simply have a word to say about the merits of the proposition. I have nothing further to say about the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair submits the point of order to the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I can not add anything in the way of light on the rules. I do want to make one observation on the policy, and to try to persuade, to have some then get into the mooted question as to how long and how far this thing is to go on.

Mr. BAILEY. It will go on forever.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Buffalo Exposition came out in debt, and its representatives appeared here with a pitiful story of disaster, contractors not being paid, etc., and so on, and we gave them $500,000 more, I think. The Charleston Exposition came out in debt. Another pitiful story came up as to the great hardship that would follow if the Government did not come to the rescue and pay the debts, and the Government gave them $250,000 or thereabouts.

Now, there is the five millions that we put into the St. Louis Exposition. That is gone, and we have a request here for a loan. Is this a loan or a gift? If at the end, at the wind up of this business after the exposition has been held, it is discovered that we are not to recover this money, then are we going to pay some more debts if the Exposition Company comes out bankrupt and unable to pay its premium list and incidental expenses? In other words, how far are we going to travel down this bad road?

I have had a little else for my State, and you all remember that I stood here and contended that if we were going to steal, if Congress was going to indulge in that kind of thing, I wanted my share.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator does not mean a steal?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes, in one sense. It is unlawful, and everybody knows it is unlawful, and it is unconstitutional. It is constitutional to say that on account of the general welfare we are going to present $5,000,000. That is a very liberal and broad view we have taken. But nobody can undertake to say that to pay the debts of an institution which has gone into an enterprise on its own book is constitutional and lawful, and therefore it is an indirect steal.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. TILLMAN. Before I get away from that, and before the Senator interrupts me, I want to say a word in regard to that idea of its being a steal and my having had my share of a steal. I justify that on the ground that we pay taxes, and we contribute our pro rata share to the Treasury, and we get very little back, and if I can get any back I naturally reach out my hands for it.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator think they pay more taxes than they ought to?

Mr. TILLMAN. Undoubtedly, because we do not get back the same proportion of taxes that we pay in. In other words, we contribute a very much larger sum to the Treasury than is ever spent by the Government in our midst. Therefore we are contributing to the wealth of a people away from home who enjoy the benefits which arise from the Government spending elsewhere the taxes which we pay.

Mr. SPOONER. When the Senator speaks of "home," that means the whole country.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes, in a sense. I am an American.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. But I am a South Carolinian, too.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; but does the Senator want to occupy the position of recouping for unjust taxation by theft?

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, the Senator is quibbling.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not quibbling.

Mr. TILLMAN. He wants to try to play on my words. I simply say that in my judgment the action of Congress in contributing or spending out of the public revenues money in this way is contrary to the laws and to the Constitution and to the rules, and Senators salve their consciences on the legality of this matter by saying, "Well, we have got to vote it; we have to let the money go;" and all that kind of thing. If the Senator will allow me, here is a proposition to lend this money to this concern. Why not lend it to a cotton mill; or, as my friend the Senator from Texas just now illustrated it in private conversation, if it is permissible to lend money to have cotton things exhibited—cattle, for instance—why is it not permissible to lend to the farmer who grows the cattle? The two principles run on all fours. It is another embarrassing business in one sense of the word, as far as principle goes.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. SPOONER. I intended no play upon words at all. To tell the truth, I intervened rather to appeal to the Senator to protect himself against himself. I do not think he says what he means when he says that these appropriations, which have been long and which have continued from time to time and which have a pretty substantial basis in some respects, are steals, and that the State——

Mr. TILLMAN. Stop; let us differentiate right here. I acknowledge that the power to spend money for the public welfare would legalize a contribution from the Treasury for a specific purpose under it, and there stop.

Mr. SPOONER. Why does the Senator call it a steal and put himself in the attitude of being a participant in it?

Mr. TILLMAN. We lost our money. Our concern did not get any help. It broke. Buffalo did get help and it broke. They came here with their hats and said, "Gentlemen, we are bankrupt; we have not money enough to pay up. We want you to contribute out of the Treasury." Was that for the public welfare?

Mr. HALE. I wish the Senators would let me pass this little bill, and then they can continue the discussion.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Maine will get his bill passed in ample time. There is no necessity for being double-quick about it. It is only half past 1 o'clock; and if my friend from Wisconsin wants to protect me from myself, I wish to know wherein I have laid myself liable. I think my code of honesty is just as clean as his.

Mr. SPOONER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, then, where have I erred and what have I done which would warrant the Senator in getting up and undertaking to say that I have made admissions which convict me of being more dishonest than he is?

Mr. SPOONER. I will tell you. The Senator's code of honesty in his mind and in his heart is as high as that of anybody.

Mr. TILLMAN. Thanks for so much.

Mr. SPOONER. Thank me pro tanto; but the Senator's speech was not so high as his heart or his mind or his standard of honesty, in my judgment.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator please show how?

Mr. SPOONER. It is not a steal to begin with, as the Senator has admitted; but he calls it a steal, and puts himself on record as participating in a steal, and I mildly, and in a friendly spirit——

Mr. TILLMAN. In the first place, the Senator possibly carried my words further than I myself intended or meant.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator sometimes——

Mr. TILLMAN. I can not help the Senator's interpretation of my words, you know. It is, I believe, usually allowed a man to explain what he meant.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the word "steal"——

Mr. TILLMAN. What I meant is that from my point of view when the Congress of the United States levies taxes and takes the money from the people and spends it in this way it is a steal. That is my interpretation of a steal. And I say Buffalo got part of a steal and Charleston got part of a steal and St. Louis got a gift, and now comes here for a steal, if we do not get this money back, and nobody expects to get it back. That is what I say. That is what I meant and what I intended to say, and I want to ask Senators how much farther are we going down this road? How far are we going to participate in these——

Mr. SPOONER. Steals.

Mr. TILLMAN. Steals. Yes, I stick to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). The Chair has submitted to the Senate the point of order raised by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I wish to say only a word. I am not willing myself to appear to acquiesce in some things that have been said here. It is not entirely competent for me now to say whether, if we were at the beginning of this road which has been pursued for some time, I would favor appropriations out of the public Treasury for these expositions. At the same time it has been going on for a number of years, and all sections have given their approval in the fact that they have sought and obtained some of the benefits thereunder. And however improper, and, if you please, from some standpoints, outside of the strict letter of the law, these actions by Congress may have been, I am not willing to appear to acquiesce in the designation of these appropriations as having been in any manner tainted with dishonesty.

It is for that purpose that I rise to make this brief statement to the Senate, and a expression of this kind had not been made it is probable I should not have thought upon that part of the Senate. As I am on the floor I will say that if we were now contemplating approval by Congress of appropriations of this kind, I should say that this particular proposition is not the one furnishing the point at which we should call a halt. If there is any one of the exposition which should command the approval of the people and receive the support of Congress, it is one which is not only seeking to make an exhibition at this time of the great progress which our country has made, but which is sought to be used as a means of celebrating and emphasizing the wonderful acquisition in the purchase of the great territory which has been the means of enlarging our country and which has made it possible that we should be in the future, if not already so, the greatest nation of the world.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. BACON. Yes, with pleasure.

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope the Senator does not understand my little side remark here as indicating that I am going to vote against this thing.

Mr. BACON. I am sure I have not considered that question one way or the other.

Mr. TILLMAN. But as the Senator appears to be lamenting a difference of opinion and desires to put himself right as to the policy and wisdom and all that kind of thing, I want him not to put me down on a particular line. I merely wanted to know if we were ever going to stop this thing. As I said, Buffalo got hers, Charleston got hers, and St. Louis, of course, shall have hers, so far as my vote goes; but are we to continue perpetually and indefinitely along this policy?

Mr. BACON. Possibly, then, the vote which is to be taken today—not to decide the question which the Senator puts to the Senate, but as I am going to vote for it I am unwilling that the remarks made by the Senator facetiously shall appear to go to the country as an honest expression of an opinion that the contemplated appropriation is a dishonest one.

I wish to say for myself that I do not regard these appropriations as in any way tainted with dishonesty, nor do I regard this particular appropriation as the one at which that point should be made.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from Georgia permit me?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Senator from Georgia think that this is a proper application of the public money?

Mr. BACON. Abstractly considered, I should say to the Senator, undoubtedly, no. I do not, and for that reason I said that if we stood at the beginning of this departure I am not prepared to say but that I would disagree with the proposition and refuse to give it my assistance in any way.

I wish to say simply that the whole country having acquiesced in this practice and the entire country having received the benefit of it, it having to a certain extent the sanction of the public in general, while that, of course, can not settle the constitutional question, this is not the particular place and time at which I am willing that it should be brought up as a reason why this great enterprise should now be jeopardized. While I do not like the policy, and at the beginning of it think I should have opposed it, I shall to-day give my assent to it.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I desire to say a single word upon the point of order. I can not very well do so without mentioning also the facts and circumstances which have led up to this appropriation.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] has stated succinctly and clearly the original plan or purpose of the exposition, showing that the United States committed itself absolutely to the exposition in commemoration of the great achievement of Thomas Jefferson and those associated with him.

The exposition was organized in the way indicated by the Senator from Maine. The President of the United States was directed to do certain things in connection with it. One of these was to invite foreign governments to participate. That invitation was not extended by a private corporation, but it was extended by the Government, and so far as foreign nations are concerned, they only know practically the Government of the United States in this affair. The foreign governments have already expended or expect to expend, at the invitation of the Government, over $7,000,000 for purposes of the exposition on the site selected by the Government.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator from Iowa will permit an inquiry, I shall be glad to interrupt him there.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. Then, as a matter of fact, the Government of the United States is holding this exposition?

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, we will not enter into all the details. As a matter of fact, the Government of the United States is participating in the exposition. Foreign governments have been invited here. They have expended and they are expending large sums of money.

In the original plan or purpose we required the company to invest $10,000,000, and we agreed, upon that condition, to invest five millions more.

Mr. SPOONER. How is that investment represented?

Mr. ALLISON. Our investment is represented by the stock, which provides that $15,000,000 in the way of profits shall be divided between the United States and those who have contributed the $10,000,000 in proportion to the amount contributed. Therefore we are a partner in the enterprise. We are a partner in the sense that we are to participate in the profits of it.

Now, in that view it is found that in order to carry the exposition an additional sum of money is required. We are under an obligation to assist in making the necessary preparations for the opening of the exhibition. That is due to the foreign governments as well as to the States of this Union who have contributed large sums of money in this manner. Therefore it is that here is a work in which we have participated and in which we are bound to participate and follow until the end.

So it seems to me that it would be in order to make a direct appropriation, an additional appropriation. If we had chosen so to do, but instead of that we propose in this amendment to advance the money to the exposition in which we have one-third interest, and we require that the money now advanced shall be presently refunded to us.

Mr. SPOONER. How was it represented by statute?

Mr. ALLISON. It was represented by a statutory provision in advance that when the company had expended $10,000,000 we would spend $5,000,000, and that when the exposition is ended whatever profits there are shall be divided between the Government and the Exposition Company.

Mr. SPOONER. On the basis of five million to fifteen million?

Mr. ALLISON. On the basis of five to fifteen million. Therefore our interest, it seems to me, is plain, and our obligation is also plain, because we can not afford in the presence of foreign nations to allow the exposition to fail at this time for want of money to put it into a condition to be opened on the 1st of May. Now, that is all there is about this matter.

Mr. ELKINS. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. ELKINS. What security have we for the first $5,000,000?

Mr. LODGE. I wish to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. I have yielded to the Senator from West Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia did not address the Chair, and therefore he is not recognized. The Senator from Tennessee has addressed the Chair.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BATE. I have no question to ask, but simply wish to make a suggestion.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa a question.

Mr. BATE. I desire to say that the point raised by the Senator from Texas meets with my approbation. I think the amendment is amenable to the objection that it is general legislation, and I think we ought to observe the rule. I do not approve of all of the general legislation that has been had touching this and other expositions. I look at this one with great pride.

At the same time, Mr. President, I do not think the Government should become a partner in the loan of money to carry it on. I oppose that. I do not know what right we have to give this money, or to loan it, either, for such a purpose. I do not want to lend my vote to doing it, unless there is some more satisfactory reason given than any I have yet heard.

I wish, Mr. President, to say further——

Mr. ALLISON. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BATE. The Senator will please excuse me. I thought he was through. I do not——

Mr. ALLISON. I have yielded to the Senator.

Mr. BATE. I do not know how others will vote on this proposition, but I want to place myself right on the record in regard to it.

I wish to make a further remark in regard to the moneys appropriated by the Government for these expositions. I think the Government had better give than loan the money, for it seems that the Government has had most of that it became responsible for to pay in the end. I do not like this partnership between the Government and individuals and corporations. Besides, it is not clear that we have the right under the Constitution to use Government money for such purposes. Let the right be what it may, this partnership policy is bad business.

We held a very large exposition at Nashville in 1897, lasting for months, and I believe it came out without the Government having a dollar to pay. It was managed most beautifully and successfully. Its income was large and it was self-sustaining. I am glad to make that statement for my State and for the exposition that was held at Nashville, and repeat, I know that in the case of a large exposition like the one at St. Louis much has to be done and much has already been done. I want to see everything done in a liberal way, but I do not approve the course of doing it. I am proud of the career that brought it about, of the history that part of our country represents and hope it will be as it ought to be, a wonderful success. But, Mr. President, I think the point of order made by the Senator from Texas is well taken.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Was I wrong to ask the Senator from Iowa is this: We are going to give this additional half million and a half to the fair, and there is an amendment proposed to make that it will be returned. It seems to me that we had better deal with our exposition. Does the Senator from Iowa really believe, as a business proposition, that we are going to get back one dollar of the loan or that we are not much more likely to be called on to pay no more dollars of a bankrupt affair, as we have done two or three times? That is a matter of opinion, I am aware.

Mr. ALLISON. It is a matter of opinion.

Mr. LODGE. But I think we ought to know what we are doing.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not suppose my opinion is of any great value, but I should hate to impair the efficiency of the exposition in advance. Of course its success depends upon the people of the United States who choose to visit it. The Exposition Company have no other debts; this is the only debt they have, and I would venture the opinion that if it is well managed they will be able to refund this sum to the United States. The company will also be able to pay the expenses of the exposition if they have no other debts, and I think they will not create any other.

Mr. LODGE. I am very glad that is the opinion of the Senator from Iowa, because what I anticipate myself is that we shall be asked presently for a repeal of this law, which provides for the receipts being turned in to the Government. I hope I am not unduly pessimistic in expecting that result.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the Senator——

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from Iowa permit me just to remind the Senator of the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts? We may expect what is to come by what has come. The very concluding section of the act originally passed specifically pledged this company or committed the Government against any further appropriation. It says:

> That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to create any liability of the United States growing out of said exposition, or any part thereof, or any loan or guaranty of any bonds or other obligations of said exposition company, or any other form of aid by the United States to support or liquidation of any debts or obligations created by said company.

Now, that act was approved on the 3d of March, 1901. In less than three years they are coming back here and the Senator, as a Senator from Iowa is arguing that, notwithstanding that provision, we are in partnership with them and we must pay more.

Mr. ALLISON. I have endeavored to state the character of our relations to the exposition. That, of course, is a law which we passed three years ago, but I undertake to say that this Congress can, if it chooses, amend that law in order to promote the purposes of the exposition. Therefore I shall vote that this amendment be in order.

Mr. ELKINS. Does the Senator have in mind what our experience was in Chicago and how much the United States lost by that venture?

Mr. ALLISON. We did not lose the $5,000,000 which we have contributed already to the exposition.

Mr. LODGE. That contribution is lost, I take it.

Mr. ALLISON. It is lost unless there is some profit. The Government is to receive its share of the profits.

Mr. ELKINS. I was diverted at the moment, and I did not hear the Senator's explanation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend for a moment. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 82, by Mr. BACON, favoring the negotiation by the President of a treaty with the Republic of Colombia to satisfactorily adjust and determine all differences between the United States and Colombia growing out of the recent revolution in Panama, etc.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside that we may finish this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. ELKINS. As I remember, when this proposition came before the Senate originally there was a sort of understanding that the Government of the United States would not be asked again to contribute.

Mr. ALLISON. We have that understanding every time we propose to aid an exposition, that it is the last one we will aid.

Mr. ELKINS. Would not the Committee on Appropriations, charged with the interest of the Government in respect to guarding the public treasury, see to it that when an exposition wants money out of the Treasury its agents should keep their promises? The Senate can do that; it can oblige people to keep their promises. We have it in our hands right now to compel this exposition to keep its promises.

Let me say to the Committee on Appropriations, you are contributing to the support of a great enterprise that we can reasonably expect and exercise all the economy we can. Where is this money to come from? Where is this $4,500,000 to come from. I want to ask the Senator from Iowa how he proposes to provide for it? You could provide for the payment of this money without any difficulty, if you will be putting down every penny we come to pay and ask for.

This is in a large sense a local loan. This is for the Mississippi Valley, if you please. There is too much sentiment about this matter. Let us treat this as a business matter. Will the bankers of St. Louis and the promoters of this exposition company come to us upon the faith of this loan in advance that they will pay it back with 4 per cent interest, or without interest in case the gate receipts do not do it? Let us advance it on those conditions.

Let the people of Missouri, let St. Louis that is to be benefited more than any other part of the country, indorse this loan through her great trust companies and her great banks.

If the Senator from Iowa is going to do a piece of private business, I do not mean to say now that he would exercise more care about that than he does about the affairs of the Government, not near as much; but I venture to say that he would say, "I am good for a million for loans I make. I do not take promises." We have taken this promise here and the Senator says it is very probable we will ever get back the $5,000,000 the United States has already advanced.

Mr. ALLISON. What Senator said that?

Mr. ELKINS. The Senator himself said that it was doubtful whether we get back the last $5,000,000.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. We are taking this as a lien on that now.

Mr. ALLISON. We are giving a lien.

Mr. ELKINS. It is doubtful, in your mind, if we ever get a dollar back of the $5,000,000 already advanced.

Mr. ALLISON. I am not expressing such an opinion.

Mr. ELKINS. We are standing here as servants of the people, as their trustees, and why should we give away $4,500,000 when you do not know where the money is to come from, when you have got to stint the Government in other expenditures in its ordinary operations? I ask the Senator if everything I say on this point is not true?

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, if this money is paid, it will be paid from the Treasury of the United States. The security may not be ample, but we do not always have the best security. If we could have the benefit of the argument of my friend from West Virginia, I should feel very much safer.

Mr. ELKINS. If my friend represents the people of West Virginia, should set up an exposition and the Government had money and put it out to this end, I would gladly, with other citizens of my State, indorse any further loan the Government or banks might make to support the exposition.

Mr. ALLISON. But I have no doubt myself, at least I feel a reasonable assurance, that our security for this loan, which is a loan or advance, will be found to be good, and that we will realize the amount we now advance.

I did not intend to say so much on this subject, Mr. President, and least of all do I intend now to enter into an elaborate discussion of the resources of our Government and the question as to how much of these resources shall be annually applied to the improvement of rivers and harbors.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I desire to say only one word in answer to the statement from West Virginia. It is evident from his question to the chairman of the committee on Appropriations that he has not read the terms of this security. If he had done so as the head of one of the financial or banking corporations with large ability managers and representatives, he would say that this security is adequate. It provides that 40 per cent of the gross receipts from all sources received by the St. Louis Exposition shall be turned in to the Government under such disbursements and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may make and provide therefor. Therefore it only requires about $11,000,000 gross receipts from this exposition, in which every State and every county of every State and every American citizen feels a national pride in its success, to pay back the money with as well as reimbursed every dollar that she advances under the terms of the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator from California a question?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. If this is perfectly good security, why can they not borrow it in open market of private lenders?

Mr. PERKINS. Because money in the open market is not plentiful at this time. I know in the great money centers like Boston our Yankee friends, known for their prudence as well as their enterprise, because I found them in one of these business ventures, prefer Government securities rather than any other security for loans which they may advance; but I will say, in answer to my friend from Massachusetts, that the Government asserts no interest, and that is the only advantage. The Government is willing to lend its money for a good purpose.

Mr. ELKINS. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. ELKINS. Why is the Committee on Appropriations so willing to give up Government money without security?

Mr. PERKINS. We have security.

Mr. ELKINS. Allow me to ask the Senator one question. You say the Government will get 40 per cent of the gate receipts?

Mr. PERKINS. Forty per cent of the gross receipts.

Mr. ELKINS. You allow 60 per cent for operating?

Mr. PERKINS. Sixty per cent for operating.

Mr. ELKINS. I want to say to the Senator that in the administration of my own affairs, limited as they are, I would want better security than it is proposed to take for the Government. There is not a Senator here advocating the proposition who would not demand better security in his own private affairs.

Mr. PERKINS. The city of St. Louis and of the United States have made a substantial investment here of over $[illegible]. The Congress agrees to the venture and the public pay for admission to the exposition and take a chance for the chance of making an enterprise in this national capital.

Mr. McCOMAS. Will the Senator from California allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To whom does the Senator from California yield?

Mr. PERKINS. To both my friends, first to my friend from Maryland and then I will yield to my friend from West Virginia.

Mr. McCOMAS. I desire to ask a question, but I wish first to see the Senator from California, as 40 per cent of the gate receipts are the security for the advance, whether he recalls what was the total amount of gate receipts at Chicago.

Mr. PERKINS. We have the data at hand.

Mr. McCOMAS. About how much?

Mr. PERKINS. It is not in my memory at this time. Mr. President, there is no use to go into details upon this matter.

Mr. ELKINS. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. ELKINS. Now, suppose there was a great epidemic, and suppose the gate receipts did not amount to $2,000,000 or $20,000,000, where would be the security of the United States?

Mr. PERKINS. Where would be the great city of St. Louis?

Mr. ELKINS. It would be on the banks of the Mississippi.

Mr. PERKINS. Where would be my friend from West Virginia?

Mr. ELKINS. The city and the Mississippi Valley would be the beneficiary. The Government would be furnishing the money with a chance of losing it. Now, what security, let me ask the Senator, does the Government have? Suppose there would be $11,000,000 of gate receipts?

Mr. PERKINS. Because our estimate is four times that sum.

Mr. ELKINS. Whose estimate?

Mr. PERKINS. The estimate of the managers of the exposition.

Mr. ELKINS. The Appropriations Committee does not belong to the managers of the exposition.

Mr. PERKINS. But the managers have given us the benefit of their experience and their representations. The Appropriations Committee have considered this question both from a business standpoint and from a national standpoint, as the chairman of the committee has so ably presented to the Senate. Be it known that the honor of the nation is committed to making the exposition a success, and what we undertake we honor full to.

Mr. ELKINS. Let me state to the Senator that the first five million has been expended. Where and how?

Mr. LODGE. That is gone.

Mr. PERKINS. That was well invested, much better than some of the money we have given to improve the rivers in West Virginia, for the floods have washed away the levees and dams we appropriated money to build.

Mr. ELKINS. Ah, that belongs to the United States.

Mr. PERKINS. So does this great exposition belong to the United States.

Mr. ELKINS. No; the exposition does not belong to the United States. It is, as I said, in a sense a local matter and directly benefits the people who inhabit the great Mississippi Valley.

Mr. TILLMAN. We want to hear what the Senator from West Virginia is saying, and we are very much interested.

Mr. ELKINS. The object is said to be to carry the exposition to a successful conclusion. Now, what I want is security. I do not want to give the Government's money away without security.

Mr. BAILEY. I hope the Senator from West Virginia will not carry his business habits into the discussion.

Mr. ELKINS. I wish to say that it would be better to have less more businesslike habits in the Senate, especially when it comes to giving up the nation's money. Why could not the Appropriations Committee have gotten from the managers of the exposition a security better than the gate receipts?

Mr. KEAN. The gate receipts are cash.

Mr. ELKINS. The great trust companies of St. Louis are bursting with money, and [illegible] the great banks of the city. The [illegible] came to the relief of the Chicago Exposition, loaned to Lyman J. Gage and they took a good deal of the burden off the Government shoulders. The bankers of St. Louis, as I understand, have not agreed to give any of this money.

Mr. PERKINS. I wish to answer my friend from West Virginia, but his questions are too swarming; there is too much sea room. I wish to say to him that our great Government sometimes has had a claim against some of the Central American states and they have not had the means. St. Louis has not the means to pay, to make an advance to this Government and to pay the claim that had been adjudicated by our commissioners or by the Department of State. So they said to this Government, "We will give you a certain per cent of our revenue that comes through the collections in the custom-houses of our country." The Government took that security. My friend from West Virginia would say, "Suppose they did not report anything in their country, suppose they had no revenues, suppose they had nothing, where is the claim of the United States?"

But, Mr. President, above it all this Government is in honor bound and committed to this proposition. I believe I would vote for this appropriation if I knew that we would never receive a cent in return, and I would think in doing so, not, as my friend from South Carolina does, that I was doing a wrong act, but that I was doing a patriotic act to show to the countries of the world the great resources of this nation as presented by the great Louisiana Exposition.

The great Louisiana purchase, in celebration of which this exposition is to be held, has done more to redound to the financial benefit and the honor of this great nation than any other administrative act I can call to mind at this time. But we will have every dollar returned that we now advance to the exposition, and the payments will come right along. In June next the first payment will be made into the Treasury of the United States. We know how efficient that Department is, and certain rules and regulations will be made by which I believe it will successfully bring back to us every dollar we now advance.

I see my friend from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] is waiting to ask me a question, and, as I am on the witness stand, I shall be glad to answer him as best I may.

Mr. TILLMAN. I was not rising to interrupt my distinguished friend from California. I merely wanted to ask if an amendment is still in order. Then I wanted to know if this point of order is not sustained—and I know it will not be, at least I think it will not be—whether then the bill can be amended?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can be.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to offer at the proper time a proviso that after my friend from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] gets through with his Lewis and Clark appropriation, and if anybody, anywhere, has got another exposition, just long, he also be allowed to come in and claim a part of this donation, and then that we may at some time get a pledge among ourselves that we will stop. Everybody says it is wrong.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to some facts of record in regard to the character of the security which the Government will hold as a lien upon all the receipts of the St. Louis Exposition from all sources.

In the Chicago Exposition the total admissions at 50 cents—and I hope the Senators from Massachusetts and West Virginia, as they have been so exercised in saying that there is no security, will give attention to the record for a moment and then they can judge—

Mr. ELKINS. Let me correct the Senator from Missouri. I said it was not sufficient security.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then, as to the sufficiency of the security. The admissions at the Chicago Exposition—and this is the record—during the entire time, charging at 50 cents for each person, amounted to 21,168,000. That exposition was held six months. The St. Louis Exposition will be held seven months. In the last three months of the Chicago Exposition the admissions were [illegible] while in the last three months of the exposition the admissions at 50 cents were 14,904,000. The aggregate receipts per month at 50 cents upon the admissions in Chicago were over $[illegible]. This receipts only to admissions, remember, and not concessions and privileges granted, which would [illegible] equal amount. If in the St. Louis Exposition [illegible] seven months. The attendance for the great [illegible] they were at Chicago, the receipts from admissions at the gates will be twice as much.

The Secretary of the Treasury will [illegible] to take charge of and receive the admissions and the receipts from the concessions. He has the right to appoint an officer [illegible] provide the expenditure of [illegible] and at a [illegible] will begin to pay back to per cent of those revenues. Even on those it was abundantly sufficient to pay off the debt before the exposition closed.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. ELKINS. How can it be the Government lose by the Chicago Exposition, in view of the financial showing made by the distinguished Senator from Missouri?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not remember exactly. I have not the figures. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] can probably tell.

Mr. ELKINS. They are very satisfactory figures now, but the Government of the United States was a loser in that enterprise, according to the Senator's figures, the Government ought to have been paid every dollar it expended.

Mr. COCKRELL. We have gone over this matter carefully; we have discussed it with Governor Francis, the president of the Commission; we have taken the admission fees that have been received at other expositions; we have taken the revenues from the concessions, and I want to say, after hearing all this, the distinguished Senators from Maine, Iowa, and New Hampshire, who are on the subcommittee, considered 40 per cent to be ample security; but in order to guard against all possibilities we give the United States a lien upon all the receipts, and whenever the Secretary of the Treasury, supervising the expenditure and supervising the receipts, thinks that a default will be made in any payment he has the right to take charge and receive the receipts both from concessions and from gate fees, and the Secretary of the Treasury will do so. The understanding with him is that he will do so. He has sanctioned and approved this measure, and I believe every dollar of this loan will be returned.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. COCKRELL. With pleasure.

Mr. ELKINS. How can the Secretary of the Treasury enter into this kind of a transaction? How can he watch the gate receipts and decide arbitrarily these questions? The law does not confer such a power upon him.

Mr. COCKRELL. There are sworn officers of the Treasury Department there supervising and approving the expenditure of every dollar of the $5,000,000 that has been spent, and so it will be with this appropriation. The Secretary of the Treasury will be supervising it; he will be receiving the reports of the daily receipts and revenues.

Mr. ELKINS. Could the Secretary of the Treasury substitute his own officers, the officers of the Government, and put them in charge of this exposition?

Mr. COCKRELL. He could do it beyond question.

Mr. ELKINS. Where is the law for that?

Mr. COCKRELL. Right in the pending amendment. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who largely modified this amendment, put in it everything that he thought was a necessary guard for the protection of the Government.

I want it distinctly understood that I do not believe this is a gift. I believe that it is a legitimate loan by the United States as a shareholder in this enterprise and as an exhibitor at this enterprise. We have invited all the nations of the earth to come here and participate in this exposition. They have accepted the invitation and are spending seven or eight millions of their own money in buildings there. Nearly every State in the Union, I believe with two exceptions, has already taken part in it, and is constructing buildings there, and the Government has encouraged it. This encouragement has been given by all the Departments of the Government.

The Government has put up there one of the handsomest buildings on the grounds, and that building is to-day completed, with the exception merely of its ornamentation. The Missouri State building, costing nearly $[illegible], is completed, and nearly all the buildings are completed or are under contract and will be completed in time for the opening. It will be a complete exposition on the 30th day of April next. All the railroads of the country have agreed to make reduced rates, and it will not be astonishing to me, if our present prosperous condition continues and we [illegible] our policy, if this exposition shall prove to be a phenomenal success.

I do not consider that it is beyond reason that it should be [illegible]. The bonds will be the $[illegible] already expended and [illegible] sum. When this sum is returned, then the United States will have an interest in the St. Louis Exhibition of $[illegible] as against the St. Louis an interest of $[illegible] and [illegible] St. Louis [illegible] $[illegible]. Each one will receive [illegible] profits may be from the exposition. Some expositions in this country have proved [illegible] exposition at Omaha proved to be successful, as did the one at Nashville.

[illegible] will be such an exposition as has never been seen on [illegible] it will be far ahead of anything that has ever heretofore been [illegible]. It will be nearly a half larger than the exposition at Chicago, and the buildings are [illegible] larger.

Nearly all the States are erecting buildings there; the foreign governments are erecting buildings there, and the exhibits are now being put in in many of the buildings.

The buildings will be completed and the opening will be attractive. In my judgment twice as many admission fees will be received in the first three months, if not [illegible] times as many, as were received at Chicago, because, not [illegible], the Chicago Exposition, as everybody knows, was in [illegible] to on the day of the opening.

I do not consider that this Government runs a particle of risk in this matter. I think that it is in honor bound to see that the enterprise is a success. I think the honor of our country is [illegible] property invested in it. I believe that [illegible] world will behold the grandest exposition ever [illegible] by the greatest nation of the earth and the most progressive people.

I hope that the point of order will be voted down and that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I refrained from saying anything upon the merits of the proposition when I submitted the point of order, stating, however, that I did desire to have a word to say upon the main question when the point of order should have been disposed of. I believe no Senator [illegible] from Maine [Mr. HALE] has addressed himself to the point of order since the Senator, and if it is the practice here to discuss the merits of a proposition pending a point of order, I may as well avail myself of this opportunity to say what I desire. I will, however, say that the obvious [illegible] on the part of the supporters of the amendment to discuss the merits of it, instead of the point of order, encourages me to believe that I am undoubtedly right on the point of order.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BAILEY. I do.

Mr. LODGE. I was about to ask the Senator if he had the slightest doubt on the point of order?

Mr. BAILEY. Not at all; and I do not think any other Senator has much doubt about it.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator suppose for one moment that that point of order is going to be decided on its parliamentary merits?

Mr. BAILEY. I do not.

Mr. LODGE. I know the Senator sees why we are discussing the merits of the proposition.

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly; and the point of order is so obviously well taken that has been submitted to the Senate, so that it may decide the point of order according as it would decide on the passage of the amendment itself. Being a new and inexperienced member of this body, I supposed that the rule could be invoked; and I was innocent enough to think that our rules would control our deliberations; but if the practice is otherwise, I shall conform to the practice without a protest.

I believe that no body in the world can transact its business in an orderly manner, except in accordance with rules previously established. It was deemed so important that the Senate should have the power to make the rules according to which it should conduct its business that in the organic law of the Republic that is one of the especially conferred powers on both Houses; a power which they would undoubtedly have possessed if there had been no mention of it.

But, Mr. President, the only defense for incorporating this provision in a general appropriation bill is that there is now on the books a law which, in some indefinite way, commits us to the success of this great exposition. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] does not more heartily hope for the success of this great enterprise than I do.

The difference between us is that I believe the giving of expositions is a private or a corporate enterprise, and not a governmental function, and upon that difference I vote against such appropriations, while he votes for them. But whatever may be the difference between him and me as to the propriety of such an application of the public money, there can be no difference between him and me as to the proposition that this law, as it stands, is far from authorizing a further appropriation under the guise that the Senate, positively, explicitly, and specifically forbids it.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator read the language of it?

Mr. BAILEY. The language is this:

[illegible] in this act—

The original act—

shall be so construed as to create any liability of the United States, direct or indirect, for any cost or obligation whatsoever—

That was inserted to provide against contingencies that had formerly arisen, in which exhibitors from foreign lands, being underpaid or not paid at all, set up claims upon the equity of the Federal Government for their premiums, and the Federal Government beginning, as I now recall, with the great Cotton Exposition at New Orleans, has paid these unpaid premiums for every exposition. Having covered that in that provision, the act then proceeds—and this is the part of it that covers this case—nor for any claim for aid or pecuniary assistance from Congress—

And they did not stop there—or the Treasury of the United States—

Mr. SPOONER. That is the same thing.

Mr. BAILEY. I think so; but the words seem to have been used out of abundant caution, because how the Treasury could aid it without first procuring a law of Congress is, of course, beyond my comprehension, as it is beyond the comprehension of us all.

But, as if to "make"—borrowing the poet's phrase—"assurance double sure," they said that this act should not be construed to commit the Government to any aid either through Congress or through the public Treasury.

The mental process by which a Senator can find in a law which expressly declares against the idea that we are committed to aid a proposition an obligation to continue our aid to it I shall not undertake to follow. There is, of course, some reason for it, or else the Senator from Iowa, whose great ability I profoundly respect, would not make that kind of an argument. I only call attention to it to confess my inability to understand it.

Now, Mr. President, passing from the point of order as very material, but as not to be considered by the Senate, I want to say a word about this practice. It is not an old one. If it had continued through a century I would say that it was now too late to question the policy of applying public moneys to such a purpose; but the Senator from Iowa was a Member of Congress before the first of these appropriations was made. The first one, made to aid the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia, was, like this, made in the form of a loan, which the Government only recovered at the end of a lawsuit.

This morning, as I came to the Senate Chamber to perform my duties, I met a gentleman, still comparatively a young man, who then had the honor to serve the great State of Pennsylvania as one of its Members in the other House, and although that bill was giving aid to an exposition to be held in his own State and to celebrate, not one of the most important, but the most important, achievement of the human race, he did not see his way clear to support it; and to his honor, be it said, he chose to go out of Congress rather than to support that proposition. The most spiritual speech made against the appropriation, not even excepting the great speech of Mr. Thurman in this body, was made by Alexander G. Cochrane, then a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

That first proposition, even under the great enthusiasm of that time, was carried by a bare majority. Gradually we have gone on, first one locality and then another, contributing to the support of such projects men whose judgment did not approve them, even coercing my distinguished friend from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] to the point of voting for all of them because others had voted for one of his. He is not entirely satisfied with his position, and he propounds the very proper query: "Where will it stop?" I tell him there is no stopping place. There are events enough in the history of this Republic to make an exposition for almost every community in the land. Like the brook, these demands for Federal assistance will go on forever, because the repeated appropriations from Congress will hardly be accepted as the settled policy of the Government, and then no man will dare to stand and argue against either the wisdom or the propriety of them.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me one minute?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to correct one little phase, not a mistake so much as ignorance, I suppose, on his part. The appropriation for the Charleston Exposition was not to aid it at all. We asked for it. We put it on the same bill with the St. Louis appropriation. The Senate put it in unanimously, and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations at the other end of the Capitol took it by the throat and squeezed it to death.

We had our exposition, such as it was, with not a dollar of help from the Federal Government. But when Buffalo came forward and claimed that the million dollars which had been given her had not only been lost, but that there was $[illegible] additional lost, which was due to contractors and others, and there was a [illegible] deficit, there being a deficit in South Carolina, I asked the Senate to pay the debts of South Carolina's exposition; and all we got was $[illegible]. We never got a cent for holding the exposition; we only got our debts paid.

Mr. ELKINS. But you got $[illegible].

Mr. BAILEY. I was not mistaken about the facts in the case. I perfectly understood them as the Senator from South Carolina has stated them. I only meant to say that even South Carolina and her Senator could be brought to imitate a bad example.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator, however, disclaimed the integrity and honesty of the appropriation. He said it was a steal, and he says so still.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from South Carolina so characterized it.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is my judgment.

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly. The Senator from South Carolina is in the habit of expressing his judgment in very plain words. But I am not willing to call it a steal. I use a milder phrase. I think it is a misappropriation of the public money——

Mr. TILLMAN. Misappropriation.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not say that it is unconstitutional. I am myself inclined to accept, and I have always been inclined to accept, the doctrine laid down by Mr. Monroe in his great message vetoing the Cumberland road bill. I am inclined to think that the power of appropriation is unlimited in the Congress save only that it shall be applied to a general rather than a local purpose; but when you seek to qualify the rule, even as he did in that statement, it becomes impossible to define what is a general and what is a local purpose. That doctrine, as laid down by Mr. Monroe, was afterwards approved by General Jackson in his celebrated message vetoing the Maysville road bill. While the money in the Treasury of the United States I hold that Congress has the right to give it to any purpose that it may deem general rather than local.

I couple with that, however, an insistence upon the other branch of Mr. Monroe's proposition, and that is that it shall be a naked appropriation, unaccompanied by the exercise of any power. Following that, I would prefer—because the money is incomparably less to me than the precedent—to see this money given to the exposition at St. Louis rather than to see Senators standing here wrangling like bank clerks over what is good security.

So far as I am concerned, I believe this money will be paid back; but I would rather give it away than to have the Government become a mere money changer, sending its officers to act as gatekeepers at the doors of an exposition.

The Government's function is to govern and not to engage in private enterprises as a stockholder in private corporations. It may have power to give away the people's money, and in doing so it can do the people no further wrong than to spend their substance, which is a wrong expressed in dollars and cents; but when the Government steps down from its high place as a sovereign to become a mere dealer in securities, a mere lender of money, stipulating its terms at the door of expositions to collect their bill if does not bring, to save the asset, the real promoting the great respect in which the people ought to hold it.

[illegible] I have no doubt of that—beginning with the great one at Philadelphia down to the latest one at Buffalo, I believe. They have all [illegible] tended to a better understanding of the marvelous resources of this country be its power. But it is no part of a government's business to do that. A thousand useful benefactions can be imagined, fit subjects for municipal and corporate enterprise, but wholly beyond the province of government; and that is why I object to this proposition.

Of all those that have been held, excepting only the great one which centralized the intelligence of our whole country, not one appeals to me with such a force as this, celebrating an event connected not only with the region in which I live, but associated with an immortal name whose memory I cherish. I could not wish otherwise than that an exposition celebrating the Louisiana purchase should be a success. But devoutly as I wish it to succeed, I am not willing to see the Government insure its success any more than I would be willing to see the Government insure the success of any other worthy individual or corporate enterprise.

Tell me, Mr. President, if this Government shall loan its funds for expositions in which the people shall view the products of our marvelous energy, our wonderful intelligence, our incomparable soil, what argument shall you successfully urge upon the man who produces this wealth, which constitutes the marvel of all the ages, against the loan of the Government the loan of money to enable them first to produce those goods that are afterwards to be exhibited? There must be production before there can be exhibition. And mark that it is that the Government laughs out of the halls of Congress the man who appears for a loan to produce them, and yet welcomes to its committee room the gentlemen who apply for loans to exhibit them?

If the farmers of the wonderful Mississippi Valley should come here with a petition reaching from the Capitol to St. Louis, asking the Government to loan them money to make these crops that are to be exhibited at St. Louis, we would draw our skirts about us and say, "Here is another scandalous subsidy-grabbing scheme," and yet I am not able to distinguish on principle between the loan of money to a man to make his crop and a loan to another man or corporation to exhibit the crop when made.

I never had any patience with the subsidy scheme, and although at that time it appeared to be universal in certain States and sections I did not scruple to declare that never, under any circumstances, would I vote to make a money lender of the Federal Government. When I was first a candidate for Congress I said frankly to the farmers, who at that time clamored for all such grants in our section, that they must expect to support the subsidy policy. My judgment could not indorse that, and yet it was as fascinating as this. There was no question as to their security. They would have subsidized even my distinguished friend the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS].

The Senator from West Virginia would never have dreamed better security than those farmers offered, because they offered the grain and the cotton that feed and clothe the world.

But we turned them from the door of Congress with the statement that it was no part of the Federal Government's business to be one a money lender. I say so here. I make the same answer to the great St. Louis Exposition that I made to the farmers who advocated the subsidy. It is the business of government to govern, and not the business of government to engage in corporate enterprise or in the loaning of money.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I believe thoroughly in what is known as the principle of the liberal construction of the Constitution. I believe in it by tradition and habit of mind; and I should probably think a business of things [illegible] that the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] would not; but I confess it seems to me for the Government to lend money to a corporate enterprise of this kind is going pretty far.

Moreover, I would much rather see the money given outright. I think it would be more straightforward; I think it would be dealing more fairly with the people and with the Treasury to do it. I did not say that no security was offered. I said poor security was offered; and I think it is poor security. If it was good security the men in this country who have money to lend would be very quick to advance it to the Exposition Company. Those gentlemen come here to borrow money because they can not borrow money on that security anywhere else. Now, the security may turn out to be excellent. It is all a matter of speculation.

The business of having expositions, as I took occasion to say, I think, once before in debate, has developed into an industry. The getting up at various points of expositions or world's fairs has become a branch of industry and with each successive exposition, so far as my observation goes, the profit has grown less. The gaining and losing is very large. There has been much loss to the money planted. I hope the exposition at St. Louis will be the greatest success in the world. It celebrates a very great event. If anything gives us a conception of what I feel it is the purchase of the Louisiana territory. In the same way I think the Lewis and Clark expedition and the taking of the Oregon country have accrued a very great every and deserve celebration. But go wherever you go on there is no place where they can not find some reason for an exposition, and the tendency of the industry has been to refuse the local support more and more and come more and more to the Government. By and by the Government will be expected to build industrial exhibitions at its own expense at certain points in this country from time to time.

It seems to me that that is not a form of Government expenditure on which it is desirable to embark. We have gone very far already. We have begun by making large appropriations for these expositions as they have arisen. I was not a good enough [illegible] to vote against the Chicago exposition, and I did vote for the Lewis and Clark expedition and its expenses were such that it was a great success to the nation. But we have not stopped there. The next step was to go forward and pay the debts of an exposition to which we had already made a contribution.

Now, there is an exposition to which we have made a great contribution of five millions, an out-and-out gift, of which no dollar will ever come back. We are asked now to duplicate that gift, and in my humble opinion we shall be asked to pay some debts on top of it, and I suppose we shall pay them. This I regard as a gift, and I think it would be just as well to say so.

Mr. President, it is going to pass. The point of order upon which the Senate is called on to pass would never be before us if it were not a good vote. It is before us by submission. It has been [illegible] to us by the Chair, and the Senate knows perfectly well that the point of order is well taken; but we are going to [illegible] it. We are going to vote for the appropriation and pass it.

I voted for the original appropriation for St. Louis. I did so with great cheer, [illegible] it and stated at the time that that was all; that there would be no more. I confess I did not expect to see a second demand made quite so soon; but it is here, and it is going to pass.

What I desire to call attention to is this, and it is all that has led me to take part in the debate: We know the condition of the revenues and the expenditures of the Government. We know and we say the best there is probably going to be deficiency for the end of the year. Just what our financial condition is has been very powerfully [illegible] elsewhere in a very strong speech, and the chairman of the Appropriations Committee elsewhere has put it strongly to the country and to Congress that we ought to amend our expenditures. He [illegible] [illegible] as I have no doubt he will be [illegible] [illegible] half of Cuba Treaty in the Senate [illegible] by the House which has returned to that from the statement. Here we are confronted with this condition of the revenues and the expenditures, and we are to be told in the Senate, on every bill that comes up, by the members of the Committee on Appropriations that we have economized, and we do. I suppose we have.

We have been told that there must be [illegible] and battleships, that we have met the revenues this year to pay at [illegible] under that expenditure. I agree with that proposition. We are told that we must have no public buildings for the same reason, and I think the last general public building bill was only a million and a half in amount more than we are now going to pass for a class. I agree that this is not a good time to go into large public building expenditures. Yet there are public buildings needed—I mean absolutely needed—for the conduct of the Government's work a dozen this country. We need a new Department building, a building that will house the Department of Justice, the Department of Commerce and the State Department. We can not have it. The revenues do not justify it. Its [illegible] would not be much greater than the amount we are going to pass for the fair. I agree that this is not the time to do it. We shall be told that we need economy on the army bill when it comes up, on the naval bill when it comes up, on the diplomatic and consular bill, where we have a starved service, and we shall be told that this is not the time to increase expenditures. We shall be told it on the Post-Office bill, and I happen to be a member of the committee having it in charge. We shall meet it on the sundry civil bill. We shall meet it in every direction the injunction that this is a year for economy and that the revenues do not justify great expenditures.

Now, it is quite possible that public buildings are built which are not altogether needed. Some Senators may think we do not need more battle ships, but for my part I think we need them more than anything else, if we are to maintain peace and maintain the Monroe doctrine in this hemisphere. And I might go on with other things. [illegible] to be an [illegible] on the [illegible] or [illegible] the [illegible] of the United States [illegible] and the [illegible] which can be used by all the people of the United States. But in all these directions we must meet the economy, and I [illegible] [illegible] I [illegible] [illegible] country from time to time.

It seems to me that that is not a form of Government expenditure on which it is desirable to embark. We have gone very far already. We have begun by making large appropriations for these expositions as they have arisen. I was not a good enough [illegible] to vote against the Chicago exposition, and I did vote for the Lewis and Clark expedition and its expenses were such that it was a great success to the nation. And I might go on with other things. [illegible] to be an [illegible] on the [illegible] or [illegible] the [illegible] of the great ports of the United States to improve in their present condition. The river and harbor bill is [illegible] to the future, and the impossible because of scarcity of expenditure. There should be economy. We must, nevertheless, [illegible] [illegible] upon business that [illegible] at home.

It may be now that we have [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] maintaining the establishment for the same begun by [illegible] [illegible] from the Secretary of the Navy [illegible] and [illegible] and only the beginning, for [illegible] [illegible] a naval establishment in keeping with our [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] in all the oceans, and for more war [illegible] when we have more ships now than one be [illegible] a Navy [illegible] by Bonaparte [illegible] the fathers ever [illegible] necessary to maintain the Monroe doctrine [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

We shall always maintain the notion that we will prevent any foreign nation from interfering with the respective south of us. A small navy has protected them in the past and our present Navy would do it now if the idea is abandoned which has been recently entered upon of making war expeditions upon these republics. Let us have their hearts and their interests, both personal and commercial, with us, and there is not a nation on the face of the earth that would attack one of them. I am an advocate for a navy sufficient to guard our interests.

But you have entered upon a plan of having as many battleships as Germany, half as many as Great Britain, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] Navy Department have run up from [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] The Navy is getting too heavy; there are too many men, too many actions, too many guns afloat. We have more than enough to protect us and guard all our interests on every sea upon the face of the globe. Let war vessels be [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] and, like the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], I would prefer to make it according to gifts, and then [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Take from war and give the Department of Justice the office home that should be provided for it. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] New York, Baltimore, and the [illegible] of the great ports and be [illegible] or [illegible] [illegible] the great German and English [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] without [illegible] [illegible] or waiting [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] laws in a spirit of perfect [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] up in the country, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] to meet the competition that [illegible] and coming [illegible]

That, Mr. President, seems to me to be the right method of dealing with this question, and it is the one that will bring the greatest prosperity to the country.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, only a moment on this point of order.

I was a little surprised, although I am not certain that anyone ought to be surprised, that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] should find in the point of order or in the speech of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] an adequate text for a purely personal and partisan speech.

I do not think that the Senator from Maryland need have any fear about the safety of the country or the prosperity. He says we have had prosperity for the last few years. He might without any difficulty have been more specific as to dates, and he might easily have developed the fact—which all the country knows—that the prosperity of the country began when the Administration of his party ended.

I think, Mr. President, that there will be a continuance of prosperity. No ship can be on the crest of the wave all the time. There will be, of course, fluctuations. There is no continuity of good times, but the policies of the Republican party, I have and think, will continue to insure to the people of the United States prosperity and adequate revenues which will enable us to do what we ought to do as a government at home and enable us to do what we ought to do as a government in our international relations.

Of course we have a larger Navy than we had in the days of the fathers. This is a larger country than it was in the days of the fathers. I suppose even the conservative Senator from Maryland would not contend that a Navy which would adequately stand for the protection and the conservation of the interests of a nation of 70 or 80 millions would be expected to answer the purpose, with the growth of the world considered, of a nation of 80 or 90 millions.

An adequate Navy does not necessarily mean conquest. It does not necessarily mean a departure from the traditions of the Government of the fathers.

A distinguished gentleman who recently arrived from other shores deprecated the growth of our Navy, saying substantially the expenditure of a hundred and fifty or two hundred and fifty millions [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] that he did not want the flag of the United States to be feared—he wanted it to be loved. The people who love a flag, Mr. President, are the people whose flag it is. The people of other countries are not expected to love any flag but their own.

I should like to have our flag loved there at home. It is loved here at home. That is all we can expect, with here and there a rare exception. What we want is that the flag of the United States shall be loved here at home and respected the world over, and it can only be respected the world over, Mr. President, if it is loved the world over.

By that I do not mean that the nations shall fear it as the flag of a nation, as the flag of a country which is as powerful as the flag of a country which does not exist. What I mean is only that that shall be respected as the flag of a country which is just and generous in its relations with other countries, but which has the power behind it and within it in the last analysis to compel an observance of its rights. I suppose the Senator from Maryland will agree to that.

Now, the Senator's reference to our departure in the matter of conquest from the doctrine of the fathers and to the islands 8,000 miles away seems to me [illegible] from out of the past. I supposed that issue had been laid away. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], the very able and eloquent Senator, made a speech in Omaha not long ago, and if he was correctly reported I announced to him as soon as I read the address that the issue, which was unmistakably for the Democratic party put before the American people in the last campaign, is no longer an issue.

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I interrupt the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Do I understand the Senator to say that I stated at Omaha that that issue was unhappily placed before the country?

Mr. SPOONER. No; that it is no longer an issue. I said it was unhappily placed by the Democratic party before the country, because the Democratic party placed it before the country and was overwhelmingly beaten by the country on it. I take the responsibility of that part of my assertion. Does the Senator from Nevada impeach that part of my statement? I understood you to plead that he stated there that it had been laid away and that it was no longer an issue.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I stated, if the Senator will permit me, that the issue of imperialism had been made in the last campaign and had received presentation of it had been made in the [illegible] and that the appeal to the people had not been [illegible] and that the [illegible] spirit of the country had [illegible] so far as its [illegible] conscience that the issue had been determined, that the constitutional system was now reestablished and on trial, and that whilst I hoped that the Democratic party would never fail to declare itself against the system of colonial possessions against their will, I did not believe that it would be an issue that would gain votes in the coming campaign.

Mr. SPOONER. I pay my profoundest respect to the intelligence and position and wisdom of the Senator from Nevada. He is wiser than some of his colleagues. The splendor of its presentation only intensified the acquiescence of the popular repudiation of it.

I have but an observation to make as to the reply of the Senator from Nevada, or rather his speech, as he states it. I can hardly understand how a Senator of the United States can impute to the people of the United States that their eyes have been closed by dollars to the demands of liberty or the traditions of the Republic.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will say to the Senator that that is what I think.

Mr. SPOONER. It is a very bold thing, Mr. President, for anyone in this country to impeach a majority of the American people in that way. The ideals of the American people and the traditions of the American people belong to them, are cherished by them, Mr. President, more keenly than by any of their representatives, perhaps.

I believe in the American people. I believe the sober second thought of the American people comes as near to the perfection of human wisdom as any standard among men can come; and I think no Senator may safely say to them that they have bartered their traditions and ideals in a blind, heedless pursuit of the dollar.

No, Mr. President—and I did not intend to refer to this when I rose—the traditions of the American people may safely be left to the guardianship of the American people. When the excitement of the campaign has passed away, the American people think, and what they think is right.

Mr. CARMACK. After the campaign is over, I understand?

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, in the excitement of the campaign and in the first blush sometimes orators like my friend from Tennessee, who is very persuasive, may mislead them, but not for long. They get right, Mr. President, and when they get right they stay right.

Mr. CARMACK. That is what I hope.

Mr. SPOONER. No man at this day can find a listening ear among the American people to criticism of President McKinley or of the action of the American Congress in what it has done by and large in the Philippines. I am not at all surprised, Mr. President, war over there having ceased, our Army having been reduced, the great work of education having proceeded with such rapidity, a legislative body about to assemble over there if it has not already, education bearing rich fruitage there, that this issue is no longer to be invoked as one of potency by our friends on the other side.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. Do I understand the Senator from Wisconsin to say that the question of a permanent retention of the Philippines is a settled question?

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I do not say that, and my friend did not understand me to say that.

Mr. CARMACK. I am trying to understand you now.

Mr. SPOONER. I think, Mr. President, the question of the ultimate policy of the United States in the Philippines is a question not for us to settle, but for the American people to settle, and I say again no matter what others may think or say, when the time comes that the people of the Philippines are capable of autonomous government, the people of the United States will [illegible] tions. Mr. President, until the time comes when they can be independent with safety to themselves; and when that time comes, if the American people so think, and they will be generous in their judgment as well as just, I am willing to leave it to the American people.

When that day will come I do not know, nor does the Senator, but I trust the people to decide rightly when the time comes. Will not the Senator condescend to do that, likewise?

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. I have several times [illegible] the American people to decide important questions, and I shall probably so confide and in the future.

But what I wanted to know was, not the information given me by the Senator that the American people would settle this question, which I knew [illegible] Wisconsin, who is a very important part of the American people.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, Mr. President, I am no important part of the American people.

Mr. CARMACK. I think the Senator is.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator will find my opinion stated in too many [illegible]

Mr. CARMACK. That is what I want to know, whether the Senator has changed it or not.

Mr. SPOONER. No; I have not changed it. It is a good thing for the American people, Mr. President—a good thing for civilization—that we took the Philippines. The first development in a practical way of that fact was when our legation was attacked in China, when the men and women who had gone there as missionaries to spread the gospel of peace were praying for rescue—praying, Mr. President, for protection against death and, so far as the women were concerned, against worse than death—it was a happy thing that we had a good navy and [illegible] of China from which we could quickly send two splendid regiments and Reilly's battery to their rescue.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. Does the Senator assume from that that it would be well for us always in the event of future contingencies——

Mr. SPOONER. I have not said that.

Mr. CARMACK. I am asking the Senator.

Mr. SPOONER. We have resisted all efforts on the other side to [illegible] government in the future by improvident pledges. I am willing to leave to the future the settlement of the questions of the future, with the supremest faith that when the time comes the American people will settle the question in harmony with righteousness, in harmony with the principles of liberty, in harmony with the traditions of our Government.

But I have thought sometimes, Mr. President, that God—for I am a believer in God; McKinley loved Him and in his last moments expressed his faith in Him—might have had some providential care for those far away whom he loved and who were serving him in the affairs which we weak human beings here were called upon to participate in. I do not know; the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] does not know; but I do know this, that it was a happy, blessed thing when an exigency came like that which suddenly arose in China that war had given to us a great naval and military base in the Philippines.

I want to say to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] that a naval and coaling station in the Philippine Archipelago with adequate fortifications and accompaniments is needed by the United States in every public interest and from every public standpoint, and is in no wise inconsistent with the traditions of this Republic or with our adherence as a people to the spirit of liberty. It was important in Hawaii. I was opposed to the acquisition and annexation of Hawaii. I was in favor—my friends on this side I unhappily differed from—but I never hesitated in the belief that the interests of the United States demanded that we should fortify Pearl River Harbor, in the Hawaiian Islands, making of it an adequate military and naval base for the United States.

Mr. GORMAN and Mr. CARMACK addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To whom does the Senator from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. SPOONER. To the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. GORMAN. I am always delighted to hear the Senator from Wisconsin, as we all are, but I should like to suggest to him that his answer to the few remarks I made is on an entirely different line from my suggestion.

Mr. SPOONER. I know it is.

Mr. GORMAN. I did not open the discussion as to the right of acquiring or as to the necessity of fortifying and keeping an army in that region, as you have; but what I meant to say, or tried to say, was that while this expenditure is being made because of this new policy you have failed to make provision for [illegible] necessary to our people as are fortifications in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. SPOONER. But, Mr. President, we have duties at home [illegible] Senator from Maryland [illegible] when I am persuaded.

Mr. GORMAN. [illegible]

Mr. SPOONER. [illegible] made his speech on the lines of a sinister attack [illegible] called the "party in power." I am modestly and [illegible] less reluctant [illegible] saying a word on behalf of the party in power. The Republican party and its Administration [illegible] as I know, neglected much, if any, [illegible] time.

Mr. CARMACK. You go to that side for your witnesses.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly. I go to this side for my witnesses. [illegible] I know that I will derive on this side accurate and non-partisan information. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARMACK. I can not, of course, be expected to approve of that.

Mr. SPOONER. That is the safe and wise course.

Mr. CARMACK. Yes; to always appeal to your party.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Maryland speaks about our failure at this session to revise the tariff upon lines, he was careful to add—and I always admire the Senator from Maryland: he is the most adroit and artistic nonpartisan statesman in the world [laughter]—he was careful to add, "on lines which will not interfere with the industries of the country." That is the song of the siren. That is a song which has been sung before; and it was the song of the siren then as it is now. In saying that I speak with due deference to and with the profoundest respect for the Senator from Maryland.

I remember the St. Louis Democratic convention of 1888. I do not know, and never did know, who drew the platform at that convention. It was a wise platform for the Democratic party to adopt; it was one of the most adroit platforms ever [illegible] and [illegible] I have always suspected the Senator from Maryland of having [illegible] It recognized the fact that the industries of the United States had grown up under the protective tariff, that the business of the country was adapted to it, and that a sudden reversal of that policy would bring about confusion and industrial paralysis.

That, Mr. President, was the height of wisdom. But in 1892, when the Democratic party again assembled in convention to adopt a platform upon the subject of the tariff, what was it? I never suspected the Senator from Maryland of having anything whatever to do with that platform, because it was not wise. It declared, Mr. President, a protective tariff to be revolutionary and unconstitutional.

Now, which is to be the platform of the Democratic party this year? The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] says "the reunited Democratic party." Having regard for the truth, I can not at this hour say that.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator not allow us to leave that to the Democratic masses when they meet in convention?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know what Democratic masses will be in the majority in that convention.

Mr. TILLMAN. Neither do we know, if the Senator will permit me, whether Governor Cummins of Iowa, will cut any figure in the Republican convention. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPOONER. I will tell the Senator one thing about the Republican convention—I do not know; it is only prophecy—I do not think that the Republican convention will depart much from the platform on the tariff upon which President McKinley was last elected. I will tell him another thing——

Mr. TILLMAN. What is that?

Mr. SPOONER. I speak only for myself. That platform was in favor of adherence to the protective principle and the making of such changes from time to time in schedules as changed conditions might require.

Mr. TILLMAN. Was there not something about reciprocity in there, and have we seen a solitary scintilla of reciprocity since?

Mr. SPOONER. Well, the only "solitary scintilla" of reciprocity we have had since the Senator voted against.

Mr. TILLMAN. I surely did, for the simple reason that it was the kind of reciprocity which you gentlemen are so much in love with. It destroyed the sugar industry in Louisiana, or tended in that direction. The reciprocity of which you pretend you are in favor is one that reciprocates somebody else's interest, but does not reciprocate the individual's; all the reciprocity that the Republicans have ever proposed looks to somebody else surrendering the advantages offered by protection.

Mr. SPOONER. I decline to be drawn into a discussion of the reciprocity question.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then the Senator must not tantalize us about the tariff.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not tantalize anybody. The trouble with the Senator from South Carolina is that I can not look at him without tantalizing him. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. But you must not speak at him. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] knows perfectly well that the Republican party stand, I assume he does, and I assume that the Democratic party knows the view that I do, although I do not assume to speak for the Republican party—that the Republican party does not intend to enter upon any revision of the tariff at this session of Congress.

Mr. GORMAN. Why not?

Mr. SPOONER. For the reason, Mr. President, in the first place, that a Presidential election is always a very great disturber of business. It has always been so, and it will always be so more or less. I think it will be less so this year than it was in 1896 and 1900, because the Republican party has eliminated from the situation all doubt as to the financial integrity and sanity of the United States.

Mr. President, a Presidential election is necessarily a business disturber, and I do not think—I do not know what the leaders may conclude to do about it—but I do not think in a Presidential year, in the interest of the people, of the industrial enterprises of the country, of the labor of the country, without regard to politics, that the Republican party will project into this campaign a general revision of the tariff. We will attend to that later.

Mr. President, I did not intend to go into these subjects, but I want to speak a word about the point of order that is pending.

I enjoyed the speech of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I always did like it when those lines were taken in the Senate. I listened to him some years ago when he enunciated the phrase "these expositions are becoming an industry." The Senator is a representative of the Committee on Appropriations. I leave to the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to take care of. Nobody in the world is better able to take care of the Committee on Appropriations, or anything else for that matter, than is the Senator from Maine.

But the Senator from Massachusetts says he voted with great pleasure for the Government contribution to the St. Louis Exposition. I voted for it, but I can not say I voted for it with any great pleasure.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] has a peculiar gift, among many, in stating with accuracy and clearness legal and constitutional propositions. I listened with great interest to his speech, and I do not absolutely in all respects find it in my power to dissent from some of the observations which he made. Of course it is the difference between the school of constitutional construction to which the Senator belongs and in which he has been educated and the other school of constitutional construction.

I have voted for many appropriations for the benefit of different sections of our country, some of them in the South, in time of stress and trouble, for which I could have found, from the Senator's standpoint, no justification. Congress has been making such appropriations for many years, supported on that side as well as on this, by one reason and another.

The making of appropriations to these expositions is not a new procession. We began long ago. I had hoped that the end would come to them, but I see no hope of any end to them without the adoption of a constitutional amendment, except that which the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] afforded us to-day, which only is so far as West Virginia is concerned as long as the Senator from West Virginia lives, because he said he would never ask for any exposition allowance or loan for West Virginia without indorsing the paper himself, which means, of course, that he never will ask for any. [Laughter.]

I voted for the South Carolina exposition——

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes, sir. You voted to pay the debts of the South Carolina exposition.

Mr. SPOONER. Did I not vote with you?

Mr. TILLMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. He, and other Senators did vote for the proposition to aid the South Carolina exposition, but then he afterwards voted to let it go out of the bill, because that was absolutely necessary in order that the provision for the exposition at St. Louis might go in.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I voted to let the South Carolina item go out rather than kill a great appropriation bill and starve the Government, but I voted to aid the Charleston Exposition.

Mr. TILLMAN rose.

Mr. SPOONER. I will excuse my friend.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will allow me, I simply want to give him full credit for being liberal and broad minded in that, as he always is. I do not want to even intimate that he has not always done what he believes to be fair and just and right to the South.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not mean that. I voted, Mr. President, to aid the Charleston Exposition, and afterwards I voted to make up its deficit. Neither did I think I was voting for a steal when I cast those votes.

I voted to aid the Buffalo Exposition to help make up its deficit, which, it was said, had been caused, and very justly, it was the truth, by the awful incident, Mr. President, which left me in the assassination there of President McKinley. I voted for it cheerfully and I did not think I was voting for a steal.

I had a peculiar pleasure in voting for the Charleston Exposition, because I wanted the people of Charleston to know that nothing in the history of this Republic was any longer remembered against them, and that we were as willing to aid them in bringing together and assembling there the products of the South as we were willing to aid any Northern city.

I voted for the appropriation for the St. Louis Exposition; and the method proposed by this amendment is in my judgment a much better one and a much better one by which to give the aid of the Government than the original appropriation which was made to St. Louis.

We appropriated $5,000,000 to aid in the great exposition to be held at St. Louis to celebrate the acquisition of the Louisiana purchase, grown into an empire of great States, an empire of empires, splendid in its way. It could not be refused, Mr. President. Upon what theory was it done? It was done with a provision that out of the profits the United States should be reimbursed that $5,000,000, but with a proviso which the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] read, that nothing therein contained should be construed as making the United States Government liable for any of the debts of that exposition.

Why was that put there? I can conceive of no reason except this, that having invested in the exposition—having by law made the United States Government a participant in the profits of the exposition—it might be claimed that the Government was a partner in it and therefore liable for its debts.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from Wisconsin permit me to interrupt him there?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I am sure that the purpose of that was different from what the Senator supposes. If the Government were a partner, it would hardly relieve itself of either the moral or political obligation by a declaration of that kind. I believe the provision was incorporated there to meet the argument that had been made in both Houses of Congress after the New Orleans Exposition and after all the others, that the Government having encouraged—I remember that argument was used—and the Government having invited foreign nations to participate it was in honor bound to make good the premiums to those foreign exhibitors. That was really the reason why the provision to which the Senator has referred was incorporated.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, having placed this language in the act, it rendered it impossible that there should be any moral obligation upon the Government, because it put the whole world upon notice, by solemn act of Congress, that there could be no such liability.

Mr. BAILEY. That was the purpose of it.

Mr. SPOONER. That was the purpose of it; but it deals not only with moral obligations, but legal obligations. Whatever the purpose of it was, it was a wise provision.

Now, Mr. President, this proposition is what? We have paid the $5,000,000. Our participation in the exposition has popularized it all over the world and has been adequate to secure representation from all the peoples and all the governments of the world. Are we not interested in its success? We have a twofold interest in its success. First, we have that principle of noblesse oblige which binds governments as well as men.

We have entered upon it, and Uncle Sam is bound in some way to go along with it like a gentleman, doing whatever can properly be done, conserving the general public interest, to make of it a success. If it were a failure, it would not simply be a humiliation to St. Louis, it would not be simply a humiliation to the Mississippi Valley; it would be sub modo a humiliation to the United States, would it not?

But that is not all. As a mere business proposition, as if this were a "board of directors of a bank," this is a wise appropriation to make. It is a loan. It provides that fortnightly there shall be paid over to the United States Treasury a proportion of the receipts, until the amount of this appropriation or loan has been repaid. It provides that if after a certain time these payments have not discharged this indebtedness—for it is made by the law an indebtedness—the Secretary of the Treasury shall have the right to supervise and impound the gate-receipts of the exposition until the amount has been repaid to the Government.

This loan is made perfectly secure unless some overwhelming calamity shall overtake that great region, and if it overtakes that region it will overtake the country. This loan will be repaid.

This proposition is something more than that, Mr. President. It is a question in a way between success or failure. If we loan this money to that exposition we can help to make a success of it, we not only get back the money we have loan, but we add an infinitely larger chance of getting back out of the profits the money which we have already invested.

So I shall vote, Mr. President, in favor of overruling the point of order. I think it is a proposition by the committee to protect a well-secured loan a $1,000,000 appropriation which the Government has made, and I think it is too late to discuss the question whether we ought or ought not to have made it.

There is something to be said on both sides of this exposition question. It is one thing I am inclined to think—because it has relation to commerce and to commercial companies—to aid in bringing together, according to our place, representatives from all the world to see the products of our farms, our factories, and our industries of every kind, and another thing to pay money to the farmer to buy seed, to plow his field, to harvest his crops. One has relation merely to production; the other has distinct relation to the spread of our business enterprises and of our commerce beyond the seas. But this I only rose to say just——

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. President, I had not the hesitation in voting when the first appropriation for this exposition was made. I have none now since the growth of the exposition. This enterprise, as the country knows and the Senate knows, is rather an investment of all the expenditures of the participants of the Exposition. Our country consists of foreign nations, States, and Territories. All the States will be represented there, and many of them will spend large sums of money. New York, I think, has appropriated $300,000; Massachusetts a hundred thousand; my own State has spent and will more liberally spend money upon its showing at this exposition. Foreign governments have been approached and earnestly beseeched by Commissioner Francis to exhibit there. It now appears that foreign governments want twice the space that has been allotted to them, and I understand that instead of 600 acres, as at Chicago, which was the first contemplated scope of this project, the managers are now prepared to include 1,200 acres, so that foreign nations may have a part of the space which they now demand for their governmental exhibits.

Mr. President, this shows to me that our country has grown so great, that it is now such a world power, that it is the center of such a commercial development in manufacturing, arts, and sciences that all the world will find in this exposition in the twentieth century the culmination of a movement which began in 1851 with the famous Crystal Palace Exposition in England. This will be much larger and more important than any other in the world. Members of the Senate have seen, as I have seen, exhibitions at Vienna, and Paris, and Berlin, and Geneva, and in Budapest, and in other parts of the world since 1851, but no one has seen anywhere in the world an exhibition of such stately proportions as the one at St. Louis will be.

Not only will all the countries of the world, fifty-three nations of the world, exhibit, but there will be exhibits from our States and Territories and our new island possessions. I am informed by gentlemen who know most about these matters that the Philippine Islands will have and fill a space of 40 acres, and they have contributed a sum of $800,000, which, with a couple of hundred thousand from the exhibition itself, will give a million dollars to exhibit the progress of the archipelago on 40 acres, the splendid development of the policy of the present and the last Administration in the Philippine Islands, and will bury beneath the flowers and foliage of the tropics the deceased "paramount issue" of only three years ago.

In the prosperity of the world there has been in four years no such progress as that which will be displayed by the Philippine Islands on 40 acres of exhibits, which shall show their growth, their prosperity, and the peaceful triumph of a splendid policy which has made, as I understand the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] to admit, practically to be a dead issue that which was three years ago "the paramount issue" in American politics.

But I am not here to discuss politics. I am to talk of this exposition.

It will cover double the space of the Chicago fair. It is an exposition—national, insular, and international. In Philadelphia we began this business. We gave a million and a half as a loan, and it came back to us. Nobody then said it was unchristian to be a gate keeper at the great exposition of the progress of the arts and sciences and manufactures and industries of this century. To New Orleans we gave outright a sum. I voted for it, and I never regretted it. In Atlanta we helped the exposition. I was glad to help it, and nobody has ever regretted it. It is true that the making of these expositions is getting to be a national industry.

When we first helped the St. Louis Exposition, then was the time to hesitate, and then I did hesitate. But with the tremendous growth and development of the exposition at St. Louis upon the great plan which, by that able president, Governor Francis, has there been carried out and has won the approval of the country, which has aroused the interest of all the world, I am convinced that now is not the time to stop, not because the Government is bound—the act expressly exonerating the Government from obligation—but because the march of events, the development of affairs, and the unexampled growth of our own country now demand that we see this great project to the end in what promises to be an unparalleled success in the history of the world fairs since 1851 down to 1904.

We have here a proposition which simply sets aside a proportion of the gate receipts and takes it as it comes, in due and orderly fashion, to repay the money now proposed to be loaned, so that they may carry through that which they will carry through with this money, without which they might not, with which they surely will, and all of which money will come back; and it may be that in its success the stockholders at St. Louis and the United States as a stockholder will receive, as those at Chicago received, 20 per cent of the original amount appropriated when we gave the five millions to the exposition. Who can say?

I regard the money, therefore, as entirely safe, and I do not regard it as undignified to lend money safely in this enterprise. The lamented President McKinley well said at Buffalo just before his death that these expositions were the timekeepers of progress; and I do not believe this, the greatest, will be the last. Any barrier, any proviso, any resolution providing that hereafter these projects shall not be aided by Congress would be vain, idle, and impotent. They will come again and again, but, taught by their recurrence, it is our province to see that we begin them slowly, but when we have taken part in making a national and international exhibition like this we must then see that it is worthy of our country, our time, and fairly exhibits the splendid prosperity which this country can show, as no other country ever could show, and as no other country can now show.

I do not believe it is a valid argument which has been urged by the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] that if you can not give this money to the men who produce on the field, in the shop, and in the mines, whose products you exhibit, therefore you should not give money here, because, as he says, production precedes exhibition. Production is encouraged by exhibition. When you take the fruit of the field and the product of the mill, of the loom, and the factory, and the farm and exhibit it all together in our country, contrast the products among the States and in the countries of the world, you encourage the man in the field, in the mine, in the shop to go and do better and to increase his skill.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from Maryland permit me?

Mr. McCOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. Would you not be willing to give him the first encouragement?

Mr. McCOMAS. Surely, Mr. President——

Mr. BAILEY. If you encourage him by exhibiting his product, you would have no objection to giving it to him in the first instance?

Mr. McCOMAS. I never have hesitated to give him the first encouragement in every vote I could cast.

Mr. BAILEY. You would vote to loan him the money with which to produce the commodities just as readily as you would vote to loan the money for an exposition?

Mr. McCOMAS. We encourage him in a more direct and sensible way by our votes, and I wish that my distinguished friend would do it in the same way. We vote to protect his industry in the field and in the mine and in the factory, and we encourage him to produce to the highest limit of his skill and power so that by reason of the protective system, which will find its greatest defensive argument in the exhibition at St. Louis, we have sold to all the workers of this country of ours, "Here is the splendid illustration of the protection which your country has given you for many years, and especially from 1861 down to 1904."

All the world are attempting to imitate it, and Mr. Chamberlain and the people of England, if they come here, will find the greatest vindication of this encouragement and help to the people on the field, in the farm and the factory in the exposition at St. Louis. And while it is an exposition of peace and not an exposition of politics, yet it is the most convincing and compelling argument in favor of first protecting the people in their production and manufacture and then helping them to exhibit the wondrous fruit of their protected industries in the very center and heart of our continent at St. Louis.

Mr. President, a question which is as long as the Mississippi from its mouth to its source, a breadth of many States on the map, covering in the Louisiana purchase nearly half the developed portion of the United States, is as large and general a question that it troubles me not when it is said it is a local question and not general. We appropriate for the floods of the Mississippi. It is a large problem to the people. We appropriate to preserve its banks; to change its courses, its currents, and to prevent its overflow. We appropriate to protect its banks, reaching down to the empire State of the Senator from Texas himself. That great part of the country is celebrating this momentous event, and why should not we appropriate money with the States embraced in that great purchase for an exposition commemorative of the annexation of half of this Union?

Such an exhibition does more for the producer than contrast his skill and toil with another's. It does more for industry than that. It is an industrial college for the working people, who will go there by the thousands on cheap railway fares and on steamboats and from the Lakes. It is an industrial education to our people who go there in showing our resources, our advance in the arts and sciences, our skill and achievement in architecture, as portrayed in the structures at St. Louis, which now are far superior to the beautiful White City of Chicago and all that the world has thus far seen. All these things——

Mr. FAIRBANKS. May I interrupt the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. McCOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I came into the Senate during the progress of this discussion, and therefore I do not know the origin of it. I ask the Senator for information. Is there any opposition to lending this money to the St. Louis Exposition?

Mr. McCOMAS. There seems to be a good deal of opposition.

Mr. GALLINGER. A point of order has been raised against it.

Mr. McCOMAS. We are discussing the merits on a point of order.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I simply rose for information. I will not interrupt the Senator. I am heartily in favor of the report of the committee.

Mr. McCOMAS. Certainly.

My colleague [Mr. GORMAN] spoke of the arts of peace and criticised appropriations for the Navy and Army. My colleague well said, as I caught his phrase, that in the time of Madison and Monroe our Navy was five times smaller than it is to-day and was yet large enough to defend the Monroe doctrine. There are two answers which occur to my mind to that objection. One is that our Navy, gallant as it then was, was five times too small to prevent the British fleet from coming up yonder Chesapeake Bay and its army crossing the country and burning down the Capitol that stood on this hill.

I do not want the time to come again soon when the Navy will be five times too small, so that another fleet can come up the Chesapeake Bay or the Potomac and burn the Capitol on this hill. Far finer is it when the Navy is five times larger than it was in that period, so that our Government is secure in this capital and we may exhibit yonder in the heart of this continent, in the most central spot, St. Louis, the products of all parts of this country and display our advance in naval and war armament along with all those other products which are the triumphs of peace.

And if it be true that the Navy was then five times smaller than it is now, my final answer in behalf of this appropriation, in this triumphant peace made stable by our preparedness for war, in this splendid prosperity of a country whose exports exceed its imports by about five hundred millions, in that if the Navy was five times smaller then than now, we can make this appropriation and know that this exposition will show the country is five hundred times greater than it was in the days of Madison and Monroe.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I simply wish to reply to some observations made by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]

As to indorsing the notes of West Virginia, I want to say in this presence, and let it be recorded for all time, that if West Virginia ever gets $5,000,000 from the Government for an exposition of world's fair and then wants any more money, which I do not think she should want, I, with other citizens of West Virginia, would be willing to indorse the notes to secure the payment of the loan, and that is what I think ought to be done in this instance.

I do not claim any more for my State than I am willing to accord to any other State. We are dealing now in the capacity of trustees for a great Government. It is the people's money, not the money of the Mississippi Valley, where the Senator from Wisconsin resides, and where he in part so ably represents on this floor. And of us who do not live in that immediate locality it should not be said that we are opposing this great exposition. The greatest, perhaps, ever held in the world would be ours if we were willing to run security for the people's money, which is now used in the bill to loan.

Mr. President, I do not exactly remember when the first proposition was asked for the St. Louis Exposition, but there was a good deal of opposition, and it was with great hesitation that many members of the Senate and the House, as I understand it, gave their consent to vote for the $5,000,000, and, if I remember correctly, it was distinctly understood that that was all that would ever be asked for this great exposition. And it seems to me this large sum was enough and for the Government to render even so great and so worthy an undertaking.

Mr. President, I do not want to impede, impair, hinder, delay, or embarrass this great work, in which I feel the deepest interest and of which I am just as proud as the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] can possibly be, but what I wish to insist on is that, with the $5,000,000 the Government has already contributed, and which the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations believes, as I understand him, will be a loss to the Government and end in a mere gift, a bonus, a generous donation to a great and world-wide enterprise, should be all that the Government should be called on to do, and there should be something left in the Treasury. When other Senators and I, from other States, wish some small appropriation for public purposes, we don't want the Committee on Appropriations to say, "We can't grant your requests, we must economize. We must take care of the interests of the Government confided to our care."

This exposition will have gotten out of the Treasury, with the five millions heretofore appropriated, $9,600,000. I want to ask what guaranty have we that we will not be asked for more money to carry on the St. Louis Exposition? There may be a deficit of two or three million dollars, and why should not the nation bear this burden?

Mr. President, what I propose is not to stop the exposition or to embarrass it in the least. This exposition can not and will not stop because this Government insists on proper security for the advance asked, nor for any other reason—failure is impossible to it. We merely want the leaders, the men concerned in and in charge of this great enterprise in the State of Missouri and elsewhere, and the great banks and great corporations and the great railroads and the great institutions in the city of St. Louis who are to be most benefited, either to raise this money themselves or guarantee its payment if advanced by the United States. Five million dollars is enough donation. Let these people come forward, and their great banking institutions, and say we will take the gate receipts, which are ample security to us, and guarantee the United States against any loss in making this advance.

Mr. ALLISON. May I remind the Senator from West Virginia of the fact that it is not a donation, but a loan which is to be returned?

Mr. ELKINS. I know; but they are not to return the $5,000,000. This is already admitted, and the $4,600,000 now asked for by the Appropriations Committee is simply a loan or advance. The question is as to the security for the same. Let me say to the distinguished Senator that he, as our great leader in all these matters and in whom we confide, is confronted with a $43,000,000 deficit next year after wiping out all the surplus now in the Treasury. How is he or his great committee to meet this deficit? Not by giving away $4,600,000 of the people's money without demanding, with interest, of the people ample date and undoubted security. The people can not afford to lose this money, and we should take no risk for them or on their behalf.

Where is the money to come from? Mr. President, it is to come from reducing other appropriations to run the Government, and in no other way.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. ELKINS. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think it ought to go out just now that we are to have a deficit of $43,000,000, for we probably will have no deficit at all.

Mr. ELKINS. I mean for the next fiscal year for which we are now making appropriations, and the Senator understands me, I think. Already the Treasury and the banks are concerned over the immediate payment of $50,000,000 for the canal. I can name the other items—they are very familiar to the Senator; I mean those which will exhaust the two hundred millions now in the Treasury. And now you put on $4,600,000 more of the people's money, depleting the Treasury this much more.

Now, what I am concerned about is where the money is to come from. You can not increase the taxes. It must come out of the Treasury, and if it is taken out of the Treasury, as it will be now, then you will have to cut down the appropriations for running the Government the next fiscal year. You will have to reduce in other directions appropriations which are necessary to carry on the Government. Money will be needed if we want to increase the Navy, if we want to pay the army in the Philippines, which the Senator defends so eloquently and as to which he is always on the alert. We have to do battle with the other side when they oppose our Philippine policy which is wise and good. We are glad we have the Philippines and glad to hold them, and we will hold them. We are not here to say what we are going to do fifty years hence or a hundred years hence about the Philippines. I can not make the confident predictions that my distinguished friend makes, that the American people will do so and so. The American people perhaps will soon forget what we say here and what we do here and will be governed by the situation and the conditions and the environment when these questions come up in the future and the years we shall not see. I am willing to deal with the present and leave to the wisdom of future Congresses to deal with the future. We have enough difficulties now before us.

But this is a digression. It has nothing to do with taking money out of the Treasury for the St. Louis Exposition. We must look to our great leader—the distinguished Senator from Iowa—to stand by the Government in the present perils that threaten us. If you are going to part with this money, get undoubted security for the Government. The first condition which I think should have been insisted on by the committee was security, and said: "Gentlemen, you believe in this enterprise." Governor Francis is at the head of the exposition; he is a great financier; he is at the head of great banks and great moneyed institutions. Let him, together with a dozen other bankers in St. Louis, write their names across an obligation to pay this money back to the Government. With this I would not want gate receipts or any other security. Gate receipts are uncertain; I do not know what calamity may overtake the country and impair the gate receipts. Why do you not give them all? Why 40 per cent? Can you not raise enough money in St. Louis to run the fair after it is started? What do you want with the other 60 per cent?

The showing of the Senator from Missouri about the Chicago Exposition would encourage one to believe that there is a great profit in exposition gate receipts. This Government has lost money in connection with every exposition with which it has had anything to do. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], whom I do not see in his seat, got $250,000 for South Carolina, and we could not help giving it to her. We thought we were clean and clear of that. It was a small affair, but the United States lost a quarter of a million.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator from West Virginia allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ELKINS. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. Suppose the Senator from West Virginia were convinced that the failure to make this loan in aid of the exposition at St. Louis would result in a dismal failure there, would he be willing that the nation—because it would be the nation then—should submit to the humiliation rather than to extend this loan?

Mr. ELKINS. That is a very proper question. It is not going to be a failure if it has the merits Senators say it has. The people of St. Louis, before allowing it to become a failure, will put up this money, as they ought to do, and will not ask the Government for it. I know the people of St. Louis and the State of Missouri; they never fail in any undertaking.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from West Virginia permit me to add to the question of the Senator from Oregon, if he would also fear that it would interfere with the Clark and Lewis Exposition in Oregon?

Mr. MITCHELL. The Lewis and Clark Exposition has nothing to do with the matter. We are discussing the St. Louis proposition. I want to say to the Senator from West Virginia that I am advised that foreign governments have spent between seven and eight million dollars on the ground at St. Louis. Would it not be a great humiliation if the exposition were not a success, and would it not be one that the United States Government ought not to submit to or countenance for a moment?

Mr. ELKINS. Of course it would be a great disaster, but that is not going to happen. I will tell the Senator that Governor Francis and his colleagues and the great Mississippi Valley are not going to allow it to fail. If the Government should not give nor advance a cent beyond the five millions already given, they would not allow this exposition to fail. Of course, if they can get the money from the Government they will do so, but these people will never fail to carry this exposition to a successful conclusion.

Mr. SPOONER. Then we will get our money back.

Mr. ELKINS. Will you guarantee that it will be paid back? You talked to me about my guaranty.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not in the business.

Mr. ELKINS. No, not at all; and you need not be in the business.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not think the Senator from West Virginia is in the business, either.

Mr. ELKINS. Not a bit of it. If you ever give my State $5,000,000, I will agree that there will be no more sums asked, and if we are going on with these expositions, I suppose West Virginia will have one in Wheeling within the next five or ten years, and I will look to my friend the Senator from Missouri to stand up and vote to hand us $5,000,000. But I will guarantee that we will not ask for any more, and if we do we will undoubtedly give good and sufficient names to indemnify and pay it back to the United States.

The only point of difference here is that, being the immediate guardians of the people's money, the Committee on Appropriations should, when they let go $4,600,000 gold dollars as an advance, which we have in the Treasury in spite of the Democratic party, instead of silver dollars, they should see to it that the United States has something to hold in the way of security.

Bankers do not loan money without security, and the gate receipts may not be sufficient security. I have pointed out, and the Senator from Missouri does not challenge it, that if the great banks and trust companies of St. Louis will come forward and guarantee the repayment of this loan of $4,600,000 it will be ample security to the United States, and they can take the gate receipts for their security.

I am not opposed to the exposition. I am proud of St. Louis and of the people of the State of Missouri. I lived there the largest part of my early life. I want this exposition to be a great success, and it can and will be without any further aid from the United States. In the end, the bankers of St. Louis will loan the money asked for and take the gate receipts as security. They believe they are good security, and time money is now only 4 per cent.

But my personal wishes differ from my duties as a Senator of the United States, charged with looking after the interests of the Government. I am astonished to find the ease with which the great Committee on Appropriations give away $4,600,000, when as watchdogs of the Treasury and economists they will refuse a Senator $50,000 for some needed public purpose. And I am astonished at the unanimity that always characterizes the committee when it wants to do something on a large scale of this kind. I do not say something of a doubtful character at all. How quickly each member of the committee comes to the aid of the whole committee. This makes their decision inevitable.

Mr. BAILEY. Reciprocity.

Mr. ELKINS. But it puts the other Senators on notice, on guard, even when four or five of them, not believing in it at all, are going to vote this money out of the Treasury. I see how the distinguished Senator from Maine is trying to hedge this in with some kind of a provision as to security by putting Treasury agents on guard to watch the gate receipts, but whenever the Secretary of the Treasury wants to put some officer to watch the gate receipts, the managers of the exposition will say, "Get out of here; this is a corporation created under the laws of our State; you have no business here, and away with you."

Mr. PERKINS. The Government has a mortgage or lien on it.

Mr. ELKINS. You have not executed it.

Mr. PERKINS. We will as soon as you vote for this measure.

Mr. ELKINS. No, you will not. You will let it stand just as it is, and I am afraid we will all shake hands and say, "Good-bye to the $4,600,000," as we have to the five millions already gone.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. May I interrupt the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. ELKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether an estimate has been furnished the committee as to the probable receipts, and whether that information has been given. I understand that under the amendment the Government is to receive in repayment of the loan 40 per cent of the gross receipts. What I should like to know is whether an estimate was made for the committee of the probable gross receipts from which the Government will be reimbursed.

Mr. HALE rose.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, this is out of my time. The Senator from Indiana did not ask me that question.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will give me two or three minutes, I will answer it.

Mr. ELKINS. Well, I will have to yield, I take it, because I myself should like to hear what the Senator from Maine has to say.

Mr. HALE. I will not say that the Senator from Indiana was unfortunate, but the rest of us were unfortunate in the fact that he was absent.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I was until a few moments ago detained from the Senate, and came in while the debate was in progress.

Mr. HALE. I have no doubt the Senator was well engaged, as he always is.

All of that matter has been gone over. Of course anything that is based upon human events must be a matter of conjectural. No one can promise or guarantee what the receipts of the exposition will be. But taking into account what the receipts of others have been, and the attractiveness to the great exposition it is believed that the receipts from gate receipts and concessions from the 1st of May to the 1st of December, will be considerably more than 40 per cent. It is believed by the committee that the operation of the amendment which is submitted to the bill, the taking of 40 per cent of the receipts, beginning on the 30th of June, will long before the 1st day of December repay this loan to the Government, and that the exposition company will have the balance with which to pay their running expenses after they open to pay the awards and the necessary current liabilities that they will be subjected to. The committee has done all that it could do to secure the Government.

Now, I can not predict or promise the early or the latter rain. I can not guarantee good health in St. Louis. I can not in an affirmative way declare that it will not be found, when the appeal is made to the public, that it is tired of expositions and will not go into the visitation as the public has gone heretofore. But I believe, and the committee believes, that the loan will be repaid, reckoning all these things, taking the chances which all business affairs, all banks, and all trust companies do. Nothing in this mutable world of ours in the domain of human life is absolutely certain. You can not demonstrate in advance. The Senator from Texas is a thoughtful man, and he knows that we can not. But we believe in the light we have had from other expositions that the security is ample. We know that it was the best we could get. It is all we can get. I do not think the Senator or I will be troubled when we come together here next December by finding that any amount of the $4,600,000 has not been paid into the Treasury.

We find fault with these expositions. We do not stick to our text. I recall, as perhaps the Senator from Texas will recall, a debate which took place here at the time when we came to the rescue of the exposition at Buffalo. He and I said then, and other Senators said, and it went nem. con., that after we had got through with that exposition, which was then on foot, never again should there be another exposition. Does the Senator remember that?

Mr. BAILEY. I do.

Mr. HALE. Yet we will find that this does not end it.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator will permit me, here is a bill introduced by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] and already reported, to hold an exposition at Portland, celebrating the Lewis and Clark expedition, and appropriating I think about $2,000,000.

Mr. HALE. That is $2,000,000 to start with. That is only the beginning, and the Senator and I——

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from West Virginia promises one at Wheeling within the next three or four years.

Mr. HALE. We shall find the Senator from West Virginia, when that comes up, voting for the proposition of my friend from Oregon, and afterwards he will find fault with the Committee on Appropriations because it has not done the proper thing in diligently guarding the public interest.

The Committee on Appropriations is a committee more responsive to the wishes and desires and beliefs and principles of the Senate than any other committee in this body. That is its business. It deals with immense sums of money. It would not have a shred to stand on in its influence and reputation in this House if it had not always been conservative in its action. The fault is not with that committee. If there is any fault it is in the Senate. The Senate is determined to carry this thing through. It was so determined from the beginning. It was determined on the appropriation of the $5,000,000; and now, when perhaps bankruptcy would stare this great enterprise in the face, if we did not come to the rescue, the Senator from West Virginia can not get the Senate of the United States to commit itself to his policy. He need not spend his time in hammering the Committee on Appropriations. If he had been a member of the Committee on Appropriations he would have been foremost in this matter, because he would have seen it as we do after full testimony had been taken, and after we gave a patient hearing to everybody who would come, and considered both sides.

The Committee on Appropriations is not to be held by him, by my consent, as responsible for [illegible] or for taking the people's money. The Senate has its [illegible] and the vote will show that it does and more when these other things come [illegible] when the Senate [illegible] has said on the Senate in favor of an exposition at Portland we ask to limit in the space of six months, the Senate will be behind that Senator and [illegible]

Mr. MITCHELL. I hope so.

Mr. HALE. If the Committee on Appropriations undertakes to hold in and restrain it and [illegible] it will not be able to do it. The Senate knows what he is about.

Mr. MITCHELL. I hope the Senator from Maine will consent by the time that bill comes up to stand in with the majority of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I do not know but that I will.

Mr. MITCHELL. I hope so.

Mr. HALE. I am not by any means fond of leading a procession alone. I claim no superior virtue to any Senator. But I do claim in this regard the Committee on Appropriations has been duly careful, that it has been conservative, that it is proposing a measure here that is for the good not only of this exposition, but of the entire country, and that it can not afford to see this great enterprise go awry in its current and become a nonfulfillment.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. ELKINS. I yielded to the Senator from Maine. He made a speech, and I not [illegible] and so did the Senator from Indiana. I hope to call the Chair's attention to that fact.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HALE. I said I was speaking by the leave of the Senator from West Virginia. He yielded to the Senator from Indiana, who asked me a question, which I tried in a feeble way to answer.

Mr. ELKINS. And the Senator from Maine defended the Committee on Appropriations, which, [illegible] as he does about this matter, was a delightful understanding for him, I know.

Mr. BAILEY. Now that it is evident this matter can not be disposed of this afternoon, would it suit the Senator from West Virginia better to go on in the morning?

Mr. ELKINS. I want to add only a few words and then conclude. I do not want to be put in the attitude of even embarrassing this great exposition, much less causing it to become a failure. I have no idea that if we were to refuse to pay this $5,000,000 it would be a failure. This exposition is going on and will be a splendid success. If I were a St. Louisian, if I were at the head of this great exposition, if I were a citizen of Missouri, I feel I would try to get all the money that a generous and kindly Government would give, and in this way save the citizens from carrying their share and burden of this great work.

Now, the Senator from Maine, who has an antagonism to expositions, I will not say that it [illegible] but an antagonism that is passing and amiable—says it is proposed this is good security. If it is good security to the United States, I ask him to tell me why it is not good security to the banks of St. Louis for a loan of six months? Why should not the banks take the same security that the managers of the exposition say is good and want the United States to take?

Mr. HALE. Now, the Senator is a good business man. To begin with, the banks of St. Louis, the trust companies of St. Louis, the banks of New York, and all the other great [illegible] and financial emporiums of the country are not in the enterprise. They are not already embarked in it. They know nothing about it. It is not in their way. I can understand how the [illegible] if they would lend so and so to the enterprise as they do to any other private concern, would lend them $1 on the place to save their [illegible]. The banks would do that just what the Government is doing now. That is the history of banks; I venture to say it is the history of banks the Senator is connected with, that if they get into a concern and loan to a certain extent they afterwards continue to loan in order not to lose their first loan and in order that their customers shall not fall into bankruptcy. That is the reason why this concern can not go to the banks.

Mr. ELKINS. No, Mr. President, it is conceded that we will never see or get anything of the $5,000,000. I do not want to save that $5,000,000. That is gone [illegible]. We will never hear of it any more. What I want is to save this $4,000,000, and we must save it; it is the people's money.

Mr. President, I think the Senator believes confidently that this is good security. He so stated, did he not?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. ELKINS. Very well. If it is good security to the United States, is it not good security to the people in St. Louis, who are the direct beneficiaries of this great undertaking?

Mr. HALE. They have put in $10,000,000 already.

Mr. ELKINS. This is not putting it in. The banks would give it on the gate receipts—as they say, good security. If the managers of the exposition should say, "We will give you these gate receipts as security," having $4,000,000 in hand as they state, they would loan the money at 4 per cent.

If this security is good, as the distinguished chairman of the [illegible], as the distinguished Senator from Missouri believes, and as the Senator from Maine believes, why do they not [illegible] to the banks and say, "This is good enough for the Government; it is good enough for you." The Government risks nothing by loaning money. The United States is not in the business of loaning money. We are charged with raising funds and appropriating them to pay the current expenses of the Government. That [illegible] and [illegible].

The Senator from Missouri believes and the chairman of the committee believes that the gate receipts are good security to the Government. The banks and trust companies of St. Louis have $50,000,000 in their vaults and are willing to loan it to-day on the same good security. Governor Francis is the president of the largest trust company in the West. That trust company is able to take these gate receipts and advance this money. That is your largest loan. I suppose a combination of trust companies. These great trust companies and bankers are in the business of loaning money.

Here is a good opportunity with good security, according to Governor Francis.

Why does not the Appropriations Committee say, "Gentlemen, yes, that is an admirable security; we believe in it; now let these banks make the loan." We have given $5,000,000 of the people's money to have this exposition go on. We are willing to give it, and let it go for ever and ever. Now, let the trust companies and banks of St. Louis take this loan at 4 per cent. Don't ask the Government to loan its money. They can afford to take it at 2 or 3 per cent, as the Senator from Maine says, and let me paraphrase his language, which is always—

Mr. GALLINGER. Classic.

Mr. ELKINS. Classic, precise, euphonious, and accurate, and uttered with positive deliberation.

Mr. HALE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ELKINS. Now, Mr. President, the Senator is a good business man. I am willing to say this after a long and cherished acquaintance with him, and I am sure he thinks the banks of St. Louis, feeling the gate receipts are good security, should make this loan.

There is no getting away from this proposition unless you just simply want to take the risk. I am glad, if we are going to give this $5,000,000, as it appears we are, that we have got the [illegible], but I would rather let that go to the banks whose business it is to loan money. I know something of the St. Louis banks. There are upward of $50,000,000 there on deposit to be loaned. Now, why come to us for an advance? The manly thing would be to say, "There we want $5,000,000 out of the Government, we have got $5,000,000; now give us $4,000,000 more." That is the way to state this proposition. It is too much to ask.

We never got a cent back from the Chicago fair. I believe—not one cent—and how eloquent was the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] on that proposition; just like the Senator from Maine [illegible] about all the matter of paying the Government and paying back the advance.

Mr. GALLINGER. What are the Chicago figures?

Mr. ELKINS. About $5,400,000 was advanced. I have the figures here before me. Not any of the money that we advanced—$5,400,000—ever found its way back to the Treasury of the United States. [illegible] the gate receipts.

Mr. CULLOM. Not [illegible].

Mr. ELKINS. Very well.

Mr. HALE. There was no security given.

Mr. ALLISON. There was no understanding as respects repayment.

Mr. ELKINS. Was there not as to the $2,384,000?

Mr. ALLISON. Not a dollar.

Mr. ELKINS. I thought you had a promise that it would be paid back.

Mr. HALE. We hoped so, but had no security.

Mr. ELKINS. I [illegible] a promise.

Mr. ALLISON. It was [illegible].

Mr. CULLOM. I have said nothing about it because I do not remember definitely as to each proposition, but if this debate runs along a little further I shall have time to look it up and give the exact facts.

Mr. ELKINS. The Senator will allow me to suggest that I do not think if he should look up the facts he would be able to find that Congress ever got back one dollar.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not quite understand the Senator's suggestion about the business of private affairs in connection with the State of Illinois.

Mr. ELKINS. Will you let me explain?

Mr. CULLOM. There is nothing pertaining to the State of Illinois or to Congress in the exposition that is not in every way creditable to Congress and the State of Illinois. After the exposition is over the Government takes the buildings, under the leadership of Illinois. It takes them in the name [illegible] and gives them to the people. The Government gets back its money [illegible] and [illegible] together.

Mr. ELKINS. I do not think the Senator can make the transaction [illegible].

Mr. CULLOM. I think I can.

Mr. ELKINS. Then I will give the Senator an opportunity to [illegible] and that is what I am referring to.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator should be a little careful in referring to a State in that way.

Mr. ELKINS. I do not say that the State of Illinois has anything to do with it. I [illegible] the State of Illinois and the city of Chicago except as I have stated. After [illegible].

Mr. CULLOM. Nobody disputes that.

Mr. ELKINS. The Senator himself does not dispute that.

Now, Mr. President, I close my proposition. I do not suppose it is going to find favor, but I say that the banks of St. Louis are able to guarantee this loan and take the gate receipts as good security, and let the United States, if it loses its $5,000,000 which has already gone, not put $4,000,000 in jeopardy, because there must be doubt about the security if the banks of St. Louis will not advance the money on it.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 4, 1904, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 3, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SPIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar House resolution No. 181 and recommit it to the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that House resolution No. [illegible] on the Private Calendar be taken from the Calendar and recommitted to the Committee on War Claims. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BRIDGE ACROSS MONONGAHELA RIVER.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill, and, Mr. Speaker, if consent be given, then I ask unanimous consent that the substitute be read instead of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to consider a bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

To authorize H. K. Smith to construct the reconstruction of a bridge across the Monongahela River in the State of Pennsylvania by the Eastern Railroad Company.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. DALZELL. I ask that the reading of the bill be omitted and that the amendment in the nature of a substitute be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section 4 of an act approved February 18, 1903, entitled "An act to authorize the reconstruction of a bridge across the Monongahela River in the [illegible] Railroad Company," be, and the [illegible]

The amendment was [illegible], and agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. With [illegible] objection, the title will be amended.

There was no objection.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11287, the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill; and, pending that, I [illegible] that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE] and I be allowed to control the time in general debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, and, pending that, he asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be under control of himself and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. LACEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of Union for the further consideration of House bill 11287, the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from Arkansas about how much time his side will require for general debate?

Mr. DINSMORE. I last conferred with the chairman of the committee, and he seemed to be anxious for time, and I think there will be considerable time desired upon this side.

Mr. HITT. One hour or two hours?

Mr. DINSMORE. I think even more than that; I think about three hours. I suggest that we can probably reach an agreement about the time later in the day.

Mr. HITT. Very well, we will go on, and agree as we proceed. I now yield to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SPERRY].

Mr. SPERRY. Mr. Chairman, on Monday last our friend from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER], in his speech upon the Panama matter, referred to a petition from New Haven, which he stated went to the Senate as a petition from the representative men of Yale. The gentleman was [illegible] from Massachusetts, and, perhaps, [illegible] some of the professors of Yale, but a very few in number. I am quite sure that my friend from Massachusetts does not wish to inflict a wrong upon any members of Yale, that being the college from which he graduated, and therefore he must take a little pride in that institution.

As I have already said, that petition, containing twenty names, more or less, was sent to the Senate and presented to that body by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. HOAR. But there was another petition, also from citizens of New Haven, sent to the Senator from Connecticut, Mr. PLATT, signed by nearly ten men nearly all of them connected with the institution to which the gentleman from Massachusetts refers. I do not wish to see an injustice done to any person, especially in my own district, or to have them misrepresented. I do not think that my friend from Massachusetts intended to misrepresent, but he left a false impression upon the Members of the House.

I wish at this time to send to the Clerk's desk the petition which I have just referred to as the one sent to the Senator from Connecticut, that the same may be read. I want the names read, also their profession or business, and when read I wish to make it a part of my remarks, that these names may be published in the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

WE, the undersigned citizens of New Haven County, without distinction of party, believe that the Panama Canal treaty was duly passed by a large majority of the Senate of the United States, and has been approved by most of the great powers of the civilized world.

WE believe the interests of the United States and of the world would be best served by the speedy completion of the canal, and we therefore petition your honorable body for the ratification of the Hay-Varilla treaty.

Signers of Merchants from New York, New Haven and Hartford [illegible] New York, New Haven, Hartford [illegible]

[illegible]

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPERRY. One moment, please, until I get through with my remarks. Then I shall be glad to accommodate the gentleman. Mr. Chairman, that petition is not a political one. It contains the names of men of all parties, and at least a third of them are Democrats. My friend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER] the other day asked what Democratic papers favored the Panama treaty.

Mr. THAYER. Not "Democratic"—"influential." I did not say Democratic.

Mr. SPERRY. "Influential," then. Very well. I want to say that one of the signers of this petition is the owner and controller of the New Haven Register, a Democratic paper. I refer to the name of Mr. John D. Jackson.

So far as I can observe, there is not a single national office-holder upon the petition. I present this petition in justice to the people of my district, some of whom think that the speech of my distinguished friend from Massachusetts did not present the matter in its true light and gave a false impression of the sentiments prevalent at Yale University upon this subject. I wish to add that in the columns of the New Haven Register only a day or two afterwards of the signers expressed himself upon the subject. I will read an extract taken from that paper:

[illegible]

This is from one of the gentlemen whose names have just been read at the desk. I sincerely hope, Mr. Chairman, that this petition will be treated as it ought to be treated, and treated as the real petition from Yale University. The one to which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER] referred was a petition simply of about twenty names, and there were only a few names of Yale professors on it.

I will also read, before I close, an extract taken from the Hartford Daily Times, a Democratic paper, under the heading "Stop this nonsense:"

If the Roosevelt Administration has erred in this business, is that any reason why the Democratic party should [illegible] the Senate of the United States, [illegible] of the Senate are going to make the very worst possible use of it.

[Applause.]

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to make a reply to what has been said by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SPERRY]. I listened with attention and interest to what he read—the petition from his constituents and the excerpts from a newspaper—upon the subject of the ratification of the treaty with Panama. I merely want to call attention to the fact that it does not make any difference whether Republicans or Democrats join in such a request of Congress. Unfortunately there are some Democrats who are influenced by the same motives that influence all the Republican party—that of selfishness and greed and a desire to get something, no matter by what means it is obtained. I regret it very much myself, and other patriotic citizens regret it. The only thing in which I find great comfort is the fact that the Democratic party as a party does not do such things.

I notice that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SPERRY], in reading the extract from the paper, dwelt with peculiar emphasis upon one portion of it in which Prof. Charles H. Smith, of Yale, is credited with having said that there was a strong moral reason why the treaty with Panama should be ratified. Of course we have nothing to do here with the ratification of the treaty. Nevertheless, Members of this House have a right to their own opinions and to the expression of them upon questions of as great importance as is that. But, Mr. Chairman, instead of hearing statements read from newspapers, which the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, Mr. GROSVENOR, were upon this side of the House he would characterize as platitudes, it is not attempted that we can not get the information upon the subject which shows that there is a moral obligation upon us to ratify that treaty.

The distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] has characterized what has been said upon this side in the House as platitudes. Of course there were no platitudes in his speech which he made on Saturday. It was a platitude for the gentleman from Ohio to say that the most brilliant star in the galaxy of the present President of the United States is his conduct in the Panama affair. That is not a platitude that is received an unanimity, I [illegible] [illegible] applause on the Democratic side.] That is all there is to that. When I rose, however, Mr. Chairman, all I desired to say was that it was very much better to give a body like this, which men are assembled for the purpose of taking into their care and keeping the interests of a great government, instead of declaiming of the kind which has just been read, something which is said to the human intelligence, something that may please our constituents. Of course I know that the gentleman from Ohio has a peculiar aversion to platitudes, but I will say that we upon this side do not like platitudes either, especially when it comes to dealing with a question of as serious importance as is this.

Names have been read by the gentleman from Connecticut of people who think that this treaty ought to be ratified. Why, Mr. Chairman, in my own part of the country there are people who say that the treaty ought to be ratified because "we ought to have the canal; we have got to have it." Why, Mr. Chairman, I have had a constituent of mine say to me he is a director of a bank, and I observe that the greater part of these names upon the list read this morning by the Clerk of the House in the paper sent up by the gentleman from Connecticut, are the names of [illegible] gentleman, a director of a bank, said to me, "I am glad the President did it; it was a masterly sort of a thing to do; but I am glad he did it, because we want the canal." I said, "Yes; I may need the money that you have in your vaults but you would hardly justify me in taking a pistol and coming and going and breaking open your safe and taking out that money." It seems to me as if the action of the Government in this matter, if for no other reason than as I have just described, was [illegible] and not defensible.

This is all I desire to say. I yield now a few minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES].

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, at the beginning of the Fifty-eighth Congress I [illegible] the Extradition [illegible] which I proposed. I desire the Clerk to read [illegible] upon the subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

[illegible]

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, that there is a necessity for such law in aid of the states in matters of extradition and from one State to another there will be no dispute. The conditions in the States, I may say, of this Union [illegible] necessary that such legislation should be [illegible] to look. The Constitution of the United States, section 2, of section 4, provides:

[illegible]

Mr. CHAIRMAN. [illegible]

Mr. JAMES. [illegible] the right to demand the fugitive that violates its law and [illegible] the right to demand the fugitive from justice, if a [illegible] the right to put himself up the trial courts, to [illegible] the public [illegible] of the accused. [illegible] to say that a sister State of this Union [illegible] of a [illegible] population [illegible] then the [illegible] was greatly [illegible] when they [illegible]

If a [illegible] of the Supreme Court [illegible] the right to [illegible] to be [illegible] the [illegible] State of the Union [illegible] of the law in the Republic [illegible] riot. [illegible] upon the [illegible] can be [illegible] with [illegible] from the vengeance of the law [illegible] of a single State.

I know of no reason, Mr. Chairman, why we should [illegible] to place between the sister States of the Union [illegible] law that will enable the proper [illegible] of the Constitution, I [illegible] section 1 of Article IV [illegible]

[illegible]

This bill that I introduced offers a remedy for these [illegible] It provides what effect the power of the Federal Government in a state shall have, that in case the governor refuses a [illegible] made then the governor of the State demanding the fugitive can proceed to obtain custody of the person by filing a copy of the requisition, so made and refused and then it becomes the imperative duty of the judge of the United States Circuit or District court to issue his warrant for the arrest of the fugitive, and then the sole question, of which he shall be the judge is the identity of the fugitive and if he is found to be the one demanded, he shall then issue an order delivering over such prisoner to the authorities of the State from which he fled.

This section 1 of Article IV, which immediately precedes the section in regard to fugitives and their surrender, evidently was passed for the express purpose of giving Congress the power to pass such laws as would make it impossible for a State to become the hiding place of violators of the law. It is also provided by the Constitution, clause 18 of section 8, Article I, that—

[illegible]

Now, by the Supreme Court, [illegible] the power [illegible] of Congress [illegible] Matter of [illegible] Fed. [illegible]

[illegible]

Now, Mr. Chairman, if Congress has this power—and it is evi- [illegible] the law to the State in [illegible] Would it not greatly tend to [illegible]

[illegible]

In the case in point it would be a remedy for one person who had [illegible] citizen, violated her law, and fled from her [illegible]

Mr. [illegible]

[illegible] in St. Louis:

[illegible] where a corrupt man, fleeing from his country, can rest in peace [illegible]

[illegible]

Accomplishment of this Commonwealth! What should we do [illegible] who is [illegible] and has been for some [illegible] a Republican governor who is the dead [illegible] and upon the awful crime of murder? What should we say of such a one, who was [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible] Rough Rider himself? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

We see in this late instance as Roosevelt, the governor, trampling upon the laws of extradition, violating the [illegible] of States, [illegible] for the great crime of murder protection from Kentucky courts.

The Albany Argus of May 28, 1900, said:

Taylor's flight is nothing but the logical outcome of his whole previous career. It is the act of the cowardly bully driven to bay. He is the logical [illegible] in Kentucky. It is a pity that New York is not his chosen refuge, in consideration of our [illegible] to pass judgment on Governor Roosevelt's offer to shield a fugitive from justice.

The Indianapolis Sentinel of April 24, 1900, said:

And now it is reported that Governor Roosevelt will not surrender Taylor. [illegible] We may think that political [illegible]

In his message the President says that these bribe givers and [illegible] ought to cross the [illegible] a marshal's [illegible] the law. I say, very well [illegible] but let us cross the Ohio River first and bring the murderer back to Kentucky before you do that. [Applause.] Why, Mr. Chairman, I believe this message was in reality given to Congress [illegible]

I notice he talks so much about the violators of the law in Missouri and wants to cross the rolling sea to bring them back. I read only day before yesterday that Odell, governor of his own State, the master of his political fortunes in New York, gave protection [illegible] Mr. Ziegler, charged with bribery and [illegible] from the Missouri courts, and denied the requisition of Governor Dockery.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the message of Mr. Roosevelt, in wanting to reach out for criminals and violators of the law across [illegible] in the face of an [illegible] and a [illegible] the Republic an [illegible] of New York and Indiana they can be protected [illegible] [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

No such [illegible] as being an exile from home can be visited [illegible] a man in [illegible] to take the life of a Democrat. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

So, when I contemplate the anomalous position of Roosevelt the governor and Roosevelt the President, I am forced to decide [illegible] greater than R. Louis Stevenson would have to [illegible] to properly characterize a greater than Dr. Jekyll or Mr. Hyde [illegible] Durbin, the man to-day, giving protection to this violator of [illegible] that Kentucky, through her grand jury has in- [illegible] more than three long years denied the right of the sovereign Commonwealth of Kentucky to bring that man back and let him stand his trial before a [illegible] of her law. And I notice that when Durbin comes to [illegible] upon ex- [illegible] the right to give to the waiting and anxious world the news that "HANNA can run for the Presidency if he wants to." [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

And when we all read that we again said, "The king can do no wrong," and as Durbin starts back to Indiana from his confiden- [illegible] we hear him say amid the applause of [illegible] the land, as he speaks of his own State or Indiana, saying of it:

> Here, here is the land, of every land the pride,
> Beloved by fugitives, O'er every land beside.

Mr. Chairman, their excuse for not honoring this requisition [illegible] have a fair trial. Let us see whether [illegible] test. What did Taylor say before [illegible] was returned, when he heard an indefinite rumor [illegible] to same? I have his own signed statement here, that [illegible] to the world, and in it he does not say that he could not [illegible] a fair trial in that Commonwealth. He does not say that [illegible] corrupt. He does not say that courts are politicized. But listen to Taylor himself before he had heard that certain confessions had been made, that certain witnesses had been called before the grand jury, that the "cat was out of the bag."

Let us see what he says when he felt secure, little dreaming that the world would ever know that he offered $2,500 as a [illegible] a human life: that he said, "Goebel has but twenty- [illegible] to live," and with the wisdom of a prophet this awful [illegible] became a reality: that he said, "You must act first and then I will call out the militia," and the wounded man had not been carried from the place of his fall until the tramp of the mi- [illegible] upon the [illegible] grounds: that he had a [illegible] before conviction: that he was the home and sinew and moving factor in the procurement of Goebel's death.

Here is what he said then, on April 7, 1900, and gave it to the Associated Press bearing his own signature, and it went through [illegible] the States in the American Union:

> Once for all I desire to say neither directly nor indirectly had I any con- [illegible] from justice. Whenever indicted, if such an outrage should ever be committed—

Does he say, "I will flee to Indiana and seek the protecting ægis of a Republican governor in the name of politics?" No; but he says:

> I shall appear for trial [illegible] of my innocence and of the ultimate triumph of right and justice.
> W. S. TAYLOR.

There was nothing said then that he could not obtain a fair trial, but what happened? Why, sir, in less than two weeks from that time we heard of him in Washington, and in three days of that time we heard of him in New York, in consultation with Governor Roosevelt and what occurs? Does he come back to Kentucky? Does he stand true to his declaration that he would never be a fugitive from justice? No, indeed. All this [illegible] statement had faded away as his own guilty conscience commenced to tell him that the crime of the deed as well as the small was subject to the truth of that inexorable axiom, "Murder will out."

I say spurred on by this he sought the State of Indiana, and in the name of Republicanism he begged its protection. And notwithstanding four years ago this day one of the bravest and, as we believe, the bravest and knightliest of all that fought for the common people, died from a wound that the indictment of our court said Taylor procured by offering $2,500 and a pardon to the man who fired the fatal shot, he has been protected walking as a free man almost in sight of the blue grass under which his victim sleeps.

What does Bradley say—the leader of their party, Taylor's confidential friend, his attorney in the contest, exgovernor of his State? Here is what he said on April 23, 1900, that is published in the Louisville Commercial, the Republican organ of that State:

> [From the Louisville Commercial (Republican), April 23, 1900.]

That was issued by William O. Bradley. I know that it has been said, in order to excuse this outrage that is daily being perpetrated, that he could not obtain a fair trial. But, sir, Kentuckians are no cowards, their history of one hundred years tells them tell in tones too loud that this statement is false. You protected him because you said the courts of Kentucky were corrupt.

Taylor fled to the State of Indiana about May 15, 1900, and it was from Indiana that he made his triumphal tour to the Republican national convention, where the public press told us that he received an ovation second only to that of Roosevelt, and there in the State of Indiana he has since remained.

On January 1, 1901, the Republican party obtained control of the court of appeals, which court is the court of last appeal in all criminal and civil cases in our State. They retained this control of that court till January 1, 1903. Upon that bench were Guffey, Durelle, O'Rear, and Burnham, four Republicans out of the seven judges that constituted that court.

Do you tell me that he could not obtain a fair trial where his own party controlled the court to which he had the right to appeal his case? The chief justice of that court was Guffey, his old law partner, and this court of appeals would have had the right, if this case against Taylor was a persecution instead of a prosecution, was one of falsity rather than of truth, one without evidence to sustain the verdict of the jury, one procured by corruption, to have reversed the case and remanded it to the lower court with directions to dismiss the indictment, which would have been and remained the law of the case.

And yet, Mr. Chairman, with this condition existing in Kentucky, the Constitution of the United States, providing that "full faith and credit shall be given to the acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other State," was being trampled upon. The provision of the Constitution providing that the governor should surrender a fugitive upon demand of the executive was being grossly violated. With this court Republican, the demand being made for his extradition, Durbin refused to surrender him to the authorities of the State of Kentucky because he said Taylor could not obtain a fair trial.

Notwithstanding, if all he said be true, it was in the power of the Republican court to have directed the dismissal of the indictment and let him go as free as the lark that sings in the sky. Why, my friends, take this matter home to yourselves. Suppose that the murderer of McKinley had been able to flee after he had committed that awful crime. Suppose he had come to Kentucky and the governor of Kentucky had as little respect for his oath, for the Constitution, and for the laws of his country as Durbin had. Czolgosz would to-day be walking Kentucky's soil, breathing her pure air, and the nation mourning the death of one of the greatest of her Presidents.

Is that proper? Do you want to make that possible in our magnificent country? Suppose when you came to us and told us that you wanted to return him, so that he might have a trial for taking the life of your greatest leader, McKinley, the man who lifted you to the mountain range of popular favor, and suppose we should have said that you shall not have him for trial until the United States Government had brought about a condition which will compel a State to return to us our citizen, who took the life of one we loved, no less than you did your leader. Your indignation would have known no bounds. Retaliation would have met with indignation at your hands. Congress would have been assembled in extraordinary session, and a law immediately placed upon the statute-books such as I propose here.

Mr. Chairman, the conduct of Governor Durbin, viewed under every searchlight, measured by every yardstick, weighed in every balance, is such as contrite as to properly characterize it the poverty of the English language must stand admitted. [Applause on Democratic side.]

The greatest right that a State can have is the right to try those who have violated its law and fled from its dominion. It is an enlargement of State rights. It is the very sovereignty of the State itself.

I know, sir, that many epithets have been hurled at the courts of Kentucky, but I stand here to defend them, though they need no defense at my hands. Their decisions have been quoted and approved the world around. The jurisprudence of these United States has been made richer, wiser, and greater by their contributions. Equity and justice have both alike welcomed their decisions as examples of their teaching. Innocence in rags, justice without a friend, weakness without a staff, all in full and rounded measure proclaim in tones that defy partisan rancor, and political malice, of their incorruptibility. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

And, sir, when murderers shall find no longer an Indiana of refuge, when requisitions shall no longer be dishonored, when those who laid the miserable plot and took the life of William Goebel shall have been gathered by that dark messenger that needs no requisition, when those who protected them shall live only in memory, Kentucky courts—God bless them—will still live, administering the law in its strength and justice in its purity. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I believe that whether this Congress acts or not, whether Kentuckians may assemble the day a year hence around the grave to place flowers upon it in sweet remembrance of the murdered dead, knowing the chief conspirator is yet unmanacled by the law, pronouncing the wrong perpetrated by the protection of his murderers—I say whether that would occur or not, in my judgment Taylor will come to find another place of refuge, because the engaged people of Indiana will rise up in their might and repudiate the Republican perjury by electing a Democratic governor in that Commonwealth. [Great and continued applause.]

Mr. HUFF. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] such time as he may desire.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave for the gentleman from Kentucky to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that his colleague may extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JAMES. I yield back to the gentleman from Arkansas such time as there may be remaining to me.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with regret and amazement to the remarkable address of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] and his unwarranted and ill-tempered attack upon the governor of the State of Indiana. I am not here to defend the action of the governor of my State. He needs no defense among people who are acquainted with his high character and distinguished ability, and with the history of the election in the State of Kentucky in the year 1899 and the events succeeding the assassination of Mr. Goebel, and the proceedings and trials following that lamentable affair.

In 1899 Hon. William S. Taylor was as honestly and fairly elected governor of the State of Kentucky by the votes of the sovereign citizens of that State as any man was ever elected governor in any State. [Applause on the Republican side.] He was then unseated and deposed by the Democratic State election board, appointed under what is popularly known as the "infamous Goebel law."

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I would like to disabuse the gentleman's mind. The fact is that the election of the governor and lieutenant-governor was to be decided, as it is in every State I know of, by the legislature of Kentucky.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The election was canvassed and certified by the State election board appointed under the Goebel law, as I understand it, composed of a majority of Goebel Democrats. They certified to the election of William S. Taylor as governor and Caleb Powers as secretary of state, and a large portion of the Democratic party, a large share of the Democratic press in that State, acknowledged and admitted the right of Governor Taylor and Mr. Powers to the offices to which the people of the State had chosen them.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Is not that just as true of every Democrat that has come to this House and been thrown out by a Republican contest? Do they not come with a certificate of election?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am glad the gentleman asked that question. We try contested-election cases here, and there is no one who is acquainted with the habits and temperament of this body that believes for a moment that it has the spirit and capacity to administer justice where political questions are involved. This body passes upon the election and qualifications of its own Members in response to the fundamental principle that it must be absolutely independent of outside control. It is a fundamental safeguard to the independence and integrity of the House, and that overmastering principle is greater and more important than the right of any individual to membership. After the election in Kentucky in 1899 William Goebel contested the right of his successful opponent to the office of governor, and under the laws of that State the contest had to be taken before the State legislature, a body that was essentially partisan, a body that everybody knew in advance would decide according to its partisan majority. The people of Kentucky felt that popular government was at stake, and their indignation over an undisguised purpose to deprive them of the right to select their own governor and State officers was aroused from one end of the Commonwealth to the other. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I understand the gentleman makes a thrust now at the body that tried the contests for governor and lieutenant-governor in Kentucky.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman may so construe my remarks.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. You say the legislature was partisan and incompetent to try a contest. How many States in this Union are there that have any other contest boards for governor and lieutenant-governor?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. There is not one.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. There is no such procedure in the State of Kentucky. That State provides for no legislative contest of the election of governor. The courts and not legislatures are the proper forums in which to contest elections for all executive and ministerial offices.

The contest for the governorship in the State legislature involved the fairness of the election in over a third of the State of Kentucky. The supporters of Mr. Goebel claimed [illegible] upon paper so thin that the mark of the [illegible] could be seen through the ballot. The [illegible] and did prove that in nearly every [illegible] and supporters of Mr. Goebel for governor.

The committee selected to hear the contest made a general report to the legislature recommending the seating of Mr. Goebel. [illegible] the city of Louisville.

[illegible] the assassination of the Commonwealth by the fiat of the governor of Indiana to surrender Governor Taylor to the Kentucky authorities for trial for the murder of Mr. Goebel. Who are the real assassins of the Commonwealth in the State of Kentucky? Are they not the men who [illegible] overturned the elections in [illegible] unseated from office men who were honestly and fairly chosen and put in their places men who were repudiated by the voters at the polls? The [illegible] at the very foundation of republican institutions and [illegible] upon that [illegible] are doubtless [illegible] government. The gang of [illegible] collected in Frankfort in the winter of [illegible] and conspired to cheat the people of the State of Kentucky of their fundamental right to choose their own officers were the assassins of the Commonwealth. Public officers charged with the administration of justice who filled the jury boxes with the tools of partisan Democrats for the purpose of trying men accused of a political crime, were assassins of the Commonwealth.

What greater crime than the prostitution of courts to partisan ends could be committed against any civilization? I do not claim that the institutions and citizenship of the State of Kentucky are not in ordinary matters of as high a standard as those of any other State in the country. That State has a splendid history and a brave and chivalrous citizenship, but notwithstanding conditions have been such since the election in 1899, in relation to the result of that election and the contest following, that the public mind in the State of Kentucky has been and still is absolutely unfit to deal with the question of the guilt of those indicted for the murder of Mr. Goebel with any degree of fairness or justice. This condition may not exist in all parts of the State of Kentucky, but that it does exist in Scott and Bourbon counties—counties from which the juries were drawn—is true beyond a cavil of a doubt.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman may.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Suppose Taylor was elected, suppose there was a contest, and suppose that Goebel was declared elected; suppose that sentiment was aroused; does that justify assassination?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am not here, Mr. Chairman, to justify assassination. No provocation justifies a crime so foul and dastardly, but I do propose to submit some reasons in explanation of the attitude of the governors of the State of Indiana—Governor Durbin and his distinguished predecessor, Governor Mount—in refusing to recognize the requisition of the governor of the State of Kentucky for the return of Mr. Taylor, to be tried in the Kentucky courts under conditions then existing. I expect to show that Governor Taylor was not a fugitive from justice, but a fugitive from injustice, oppression, and tyranny.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman one other question, if he will permit. I would ask whether he himself doubts that Mr. Goebel was assassinated for political reasons?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, I do not know that that has anything to do with the question before the committee. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] What I may feel or think about the character of the assassination has nothing to do with the question now under discussion. Everybody admits that it was an execrable crime. During the period of intense excitement in the State of Kentucky immediately following the institution of the contest Republicans and Democrats from all parts of the State met at the State capitol to insist that the will of the people should be carried out, that honest elections should be respected, that unscrupulous political buccaneers should not be permitted to take away from the people of the State the right to choose their own officers, and in the white heat of partisan feeling unfortunately somebody shot and killed Mr. Goebel, the contestant.

I am not here to justify that act. It was a crime, a crime against humanity, a crime against civilization, a crime detested in every State in this country. Immediately proceedings were set on foot to hunt out the perpetrators. The political machinery in the State of Kentucky was in the hands of the Goebel Democrats. A hundred thousand dollars was voted by the legislature to discover and convict the criminals. Indictments were returned by partisan grand juries against the Republican governor and secretary of state, amongst others, charging them with the crime. All, I believe, of the candidates on the Republican State ticket, all of the men who were elected by the suffrages of the people to State offices, were included in the indictments, charged with complicity to murder or with being accessories before the fact.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, do I understand the gentleman to say that all of the gentlemen who were on the Republican State ticket were included in the indictments?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I may have included too many. I said all. There were too many. The governor and the secretary of the State I know were indicted.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. And that is all.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes, and the secretary of state was tried and tried again, and tried a third time, and respectable Democrats and Democratic papers all over the State of Kentucky denounced the prosecution of the trials and convictions as infamous.

Mr. STANLEY. Can the gentleman name one respectable Democratic paper that ever did that?

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Oh, there are few respectable Democratic papers in that State. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. STANLEY. May I ask the gentleman if that is the spirit in which he proposes to denounce partisanship, by saying that there is not a respectable Democratic paper in the State of Kentucky?

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. That is the spirit the gentleman is manifesting in this controversy this morning. The gentleman is not showing a judicial spirit.

Mr. DINSMORE. Well, the gentleman from Michigan is. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Yes; he always does.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY]?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I prefer not to now. The organization of the court and jury and the conduct of the trials in the Powers case was condemned by honest-minded, cool-headed Democrats, I will say, and by newspapers that had theretofore been known as Democratic papers, throughout the State of Kentucky. Goebelism came to be a political issue in that State. Governors and State officers were elected and defeated on that issue. Candidates for seats in this body were elected and defeated upon the issue of Goebelism. Many will remember that distinguished Kentuckian, Colonel Berry, who was a Member of the House in the Fifty-fourth, Fifty-fifth, and Fifty-sixth Congresses. He was an anti-Goebel Democrat, and that was his undoing—he is no longer here.

In the empaneling of the juries in the trials of Caleb Powers they were packed by his bitter political opponents. At none of the trials was there a friend of his—a political friend—or an honest representative of his party on the jury.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will yield now.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that he is misstating the case grossly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, let us see.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. As a matter of fact, on the first jury that tried Caleb Powers there were six anti-Goebel people. Half the jury were anti-Goebel. There were four anti-Goebel Democrats and two straight Republicans, and he could not be convicted without the verdict of every member of the jury.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. In the first trial the jury was composed of eleven Democrats and one alleged Republican school-teacher, who depended upon local Democratic officers for employment—a lick-spittle who was worse than any honest Democrat could have been. That is my information of the situation.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I beg, in a most respectful and emphatic way, to protest against the statement of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] as being absolutely without foundation.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Is it not true that one of the jurymen in the first trial was heralded over the country as a Republican school-teacher? And is it not true that he was employed by Democratic school officers in the county in which he lived?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I did not understand the first part of the gentleman's question. Will he repeat it?

Mr. STANLEY. There are few Republicans in Kentucky who can teach a school. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is very evident that there is something the matter with Kentucky. Nobody seems to have been teaching very effectively down there. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. If the gentleman desires an answer to his question and will repeat it, I will try to answer it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I understand the gentleman claims that in the first organization of the Powers jury there were six Goebelites, four anti-Goebel Democrats, and two Republicans. I say there were eleven Democrats and one Goebel Republican.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I deny that statement most emphatically; and I wish to make the statement further that that gentleman was deliberately assisted Mr. Goebel, went into the jury box with a decided impression that Mr. Powers was an innocent man, but after hearing the evidence and getting into the jury room, I understand he was the first to suggest that the jury find Mr. Powers guilty.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; and he was employed to teach for another year, and I think he had his salary increased. [Laughter.]

Mr. JAMES rose.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Constant interruptions practically destroy the continuity of my argument, but I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JAMES. The gentleman is proceeding on the idea of assailing the jurors down there. In order that justice may be done upon the question he is raising here as to the selection of the jury, I ask him whether in the first trial and in each of those trials the question was not raised before a Republican court, and not a single time did the Republican court of appeals of Kentucky sustain the contention that the gentleman is now making here. [Applause.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The question was raised before the local courts; and on the second trial of Mr. Powers affidavits were filed by several people of the county setting out the fact that the names selected by the jury commissioners were all Democrats and Goebelites except, I think, four or five; and the court was asked to set aside the panel and order the selection of a new list of names.

In a county that was nearly evenly divided in politics, there were [illegible] Democratic names in the jury box, and four or possibly five Republican names.

The State had five peremptory challenges, so that not a single Republican was allowed to sit on the jury. The case had become intensely political; it entered into the politics of every township, county, and Congressional district in the State of Kentucky. Powers was on trial for a political crime before a jury composed entirely of his political opponents. Think of such a trial in the twentieth century! The conduct of Judge Cantrill, and the record he made in that case, considering the advanced standards of men, [illegible] the [illegible] presided over by bloody Jeffreys on the Tarentum circuit eminently respectable. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SHERLEY. I want to ask the gentleman whether he considers that when a man is being tried for murder it is a political question that is on trial?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It may be under some circumstances.

Mr. SHERLEY. It seems to be so under some circumstances.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It was made a political question in the State of Kentucky. The question of the fault of Governor Taylor and Caleb Powers was the Democratic question at elections. It was [illegible] in the Democratic State platforms, and was [illegible] Every man who voted the Democratic ticket voted Taylor and Powers guilty of the crime that overshadowed every thing else in State politics, and the judge that presided over the proceedings of that kind of a court. It was a political trial, and the process, manner and conclusion demonstrated that the crime should be apportioned divided between the two political parties in the county in which the cases were tried.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does not the gentleman know as a matter of law that the question of the political affiliations of a juror is not a question that can be brought before the court in the selection of a jury in the first place?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is true enough, and that is the reason the court of appeals failed to take cognizance of that question when presented on appeal, but it can be brought before the jury commissioners, and they can be prevented from packing a jury for the purpose of convicting a man whether he is guilty or not. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SHERLEY. And the evidence in support of that is no greater than the statement of just such men as the distinguished gentleman who is writing without regard to the facts to give a distorted version. It is not true that the juries of the State of Kentucky have been packed to convict men.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not charge it as a general proposition.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is not true as a special proposition.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I charge it in relation to the trial of those indicted for the assassination of Goebel, and I can go to the State of Kentucky and produce sentiment and respectable witnesses in the hanged, aye, by the thousand, who will justify the statement I make here.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman put the proof in charge of that in the RECORD when he publishes his speech?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will. I have newspaper extracts and letters by the dozens, and I shall ask the privilege of publishing some of them in my speech.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Oh, what newspaper extracts?

Mr. JAMES. You say juries were packed with partisan Democrats for the purpose of convicting those indicted for taking Goebel's life?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is the statement.

Mr. JAMES. Now tell me how it was that a jury that was packed as you say tried Captain Ripley and acquitted him, and tried Berry Howard and acquitted him of the murder of William Goebel? How was that if they were juries that were packed for the purpose of convicting anybody or everybody? How was it that those juries [illegible]?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. These two gentlemen were [illegible] in politics and society. The State of Kentucky [illegible] that it would be an insult to the Democratic party to lead them to the penitentiary or on the gallows. [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side.] And it is quite probable that some evidence of guilt, a scintilla of evidence, is required to convict even before the juries I have described.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I beg to suggest to the gentleman that Captain Ripley is a man in as good standing as any man on the Republican State ticket in 1889.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I say this, that in the second trial of Powers in a county where the political parties were nearly evenly divided, every man on the jury was a Goebelite. It was a political trial, I reassert, and Powers had no chance whatever for his life or liberty. That is the proposition I assert here. In the name of common fairness and common decency why was not the jury divided politically? Why were there not three or four real genuine Republicans on the jury? In the third trial the jury that tried Powers was composed of eleven Goebel Democrats and one Goebel Republican. The Goebel Republican, the evidence showed, had voted for Goebel for governor, and had his picture framed hanging up in the drawing room of his home.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. McDERMOTT. The governor of every State in the Union is supposed to be under the State and Federal Constitution. Does the gentleman consider that a requisition being made upon the governor of any State in this Union to surrender one charged with the crime of murder he has the right to consider the question of whether or not the man so charged will receive a fair or an unfair trial if he is returned to the State from which the requisition came?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. He always has considered that question, and it is his duty to prevent that if possible and see that justice will be administered fairly. He has a right to act upon that presumption. He ought to act upon it, and I concede the vital importance under our system of government, in the administration of the laws, that State authorities should respect reasonable and proper presumptions [illegible] that where facts are brought to the notice of the governor of a State, where he is informed in advance, that in a condition of affairs, that such a condition of public excitement prevails that it is [illegible] to turn the accused over to the authorities of another State for trial, then the governor is not only justified, but, in my judgment, it is his duty to deny the requisition.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I beg to suggest this to the gentleman: That even if it was demonstrated to the governor of a State that if the man for whom a requisition had been issued would be so tried that his trial would amount to absolute assassination, [illegible] under the Federal Constitution to consider the question of method of procedure or probable result of trial.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is fortunate that the gentleman is not the governor of any State.

Mr. McDERMOTT. I challenge the gentleman to find a writer on political economy in this country. I challenge the gentleman to find a writer on our constitutions, Federal or State, who will support the proposition by one single sentence that any governor is allowed to consider what kind of a trial a man will have if he is returned to the State where he is indicted. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, if a leader of a mob in a State should apply to the governor of a sister State for the custody of a man that he might be tried by Judge Lynch, be tried by a frenzied mob, the gentleman will not pretend that it is the duty of the governor of that State to surrender a fugitive under those circumstances. If the governor of the State is satisfied that public sentiment is in such a pitch of excitement that while the court may preserve the form and procedure of law it is moved by the spirit of the mob, I say that the governor is justified in refusing that requisition upon principles of common humanity.

Mr. McDERMOTT. If the governor is regulated by the Constitution, if he is regulated by law, any governor has the right to make up such determination as the gentleman [illegible].

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I hope the gentleman will respect the rules of debate and not undertake to make a speech in the time [illegible].

Mr. JAMES. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The Supreme Court of the United States has decided squarely that the governor of a State can not be compelled to grant a requisition made by the governor of a sister State, that the question is discretionary with the governor whether he grants it or not.

Mr. JAMES. I would like to ask the gentleman a question about what he says, frankly, about the courts. I want his judgment upon this, as to whether Governor Taylor could not trust the court from 1900 to 1903, during which time the Republican party had control of the court of appeals, the court of last resort.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I most assuredly say so. I firmly believe it. The governors of Indiana, both Governor Mount and Governor Durbin, entertained that belief. Subsequent developments have vindicated their judgment. There were three trials of Caleb Powers. I do not think that the result of a single one of the trials is entitled to the respect of fair-minded men in this country.

Mr. JAMES. Does he not believe that his statement is unfair, if not entirely unjust, an injustice piled upon four of the most distinguished Republicans that are in his party in Kentucky?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I assume the gentleman to be a lawyer, and he knows that while certain questions can be presented to the Kentucky court of appeals, I presume that court is organized like the courts of final resort in other States. As a rule, questions of fact are not reviewable there on appeal.

Mr. JAMES. If the court was of the opinion that the trial was an unfair one and one that is an assault upon this man, or that the verdict was not sustained by the evidence or was an outrage, your party, who were in majority in that court, would have the right to have the case remanded back to the court below, saying that it was an unfair trial, that there was not evidence to justify the verdict, and instructing the county attorney to dismiss the case.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The court of appeals reversed two of the judgments convicting Powers because he was not fairly tried.

Mr. JAMES. Not for the reasons that you have suggested.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. For the reason that they were not fair trials—they were not an honest administration of justice.

Mr. JAMES. Not at all. Out of 875 exceptions taken on the trial only three were sustained by the Republican court and in a [illegible] Democratic court.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The reversals must have been for material [illegible] that prevented the defendant from receiving a fair trial. During the appeals the judge who presided at the trial was running a canvass of the State for a seat in the United States Senate on the ground that he had sent Powers to the penitentiary for the murder of Goebel.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman this question.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SHERLEY. Do you consider that that opinion of the court of appeals reversing that case is such a statement of judicial misconduct in that State as to warrant the governor of Indiana in disregarding the requisition?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Not by any manner of means. I am not complaining of the conduct of the court of appeals, but of the conduct of the local court, composed of Judge Cantrill and a Goebel jury.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman's own statement shows the court of appeals reviewed the case and reversed it because there had been, as the gentleman says, not a fair trial, but what was in fact not a trial of——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It would not make any difference, Mr. Chairman, if the court of appeals had affirmed the judgment. I do not believe any fair-minded man in this country can truthfully say that the three successive trials of Caleb Powers were fair and honest trials. It was a political prosecution brought on by political adversaries——

Mr. SHERLEY. I claim to be a fair and——

Mr. CRUMPACKER (continuing). And under the control of a man who was making a canvass for the United States Senate on the ground that he was engaged in convicting the assassins of William Goebel.

Mr. SHERLEY. I claim to be a fair and honest man and I am willing to stand on the floor of the House of Representatives and say to the gentleman from Indiana that there has not been a man convicted of the murder of William Goebel who, in my humble judgment, both as a citizen and a lawyer, is not guilty of that offense. That is the opinion of the best lawyers and the best men of the State of Kentucky. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman may have the benefit of his statement and he is entitled to anything he can get out of it.

Mr. BREAZEALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield time for a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I yield to the amiable gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. BREAZEALE. I thank you. Just now you stated your belief was that a packed jury convicted these people. Have you any evidence upon which you base that belief or is it merely an impression from loose-jointed statements in newspapers?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have been trying to state, if the gentleman pleases, the reasons for my opinion——

Mr. BREAZEALE. I know——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Take this one proposition: A county where the political parties are nearly evenly divided has a political trial of absorbing interest and the jury is made up almost half of men of one of those parties to the defendant. Would it not be a strange case if it be not that the actors of the jury had been selected?

Mr. BREAZEALE. I admit you are [illegible] in the supposition, but is that evidence; is that sworn testimony of packing a jury, but a mere inference and suspicion when you might have?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Now, that is one suspicion; we do not rest our case on one suspicion alone, but upon a dozen circumstances, and upon testimony of honest Kentucky Democrats, which I said a moment ago I will submit, if I am permitted to print it in the RECORD.

Mr. BREAZEALE. Is that testimony or mere opinion and suspicion?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is the honest opinion of men who were well acquainted with conditions.

Mr. BREAZEALE. An honest opinion, but not evidence.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. BREAZEALE. It is not a serious statement of facts upon which you can base a statement that——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, the technical refining of the gentleman from Louisiana is too [illegible] for practical purposes. We have the prominent facts that Taylor was fairly elected governor; that his political adversaries contested him from that office and had him indicted for the assassination of Goebel, along with the secretary of state and others; that the secretary of state was tried three times before juries made up of men who were as bitter partisan adversaries, that they convicted him and the court of appeals reversed the judgment, they convicted him again and the court of appeals again reversed the judgment, they convicted him a third time, and for a third time the case is pending before the court of appeals of the State awaiting a decision.

Mr. BREAZEALE. Now, may I ask the gentleman one more question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. These are some of the facts upon which my opinion is founded.

Mr. BREAZEALE. Is not flight evidence of consciousness of guilt?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It depends upon the circumstances. It is evidence of good sense and prudence on the part of those who were charged with the assassination of Mr. Goebel.

If Mr. Powers had pursued that policy he would have stood a better chance for his life than he does to-day. I have known him for fifteen years. He was educated in the town in which I live, graduating from Valparaiso College, and no one in that community was more respected or stood higher as a student or a citizen than he. We do not believe he is guilty of the crime for which he was convicted.

Mr. JAMES. Does the gentleman know from what college Guiteau graduated?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not.

Mr. JAMES. The fact that a man graduated from a college, then, is no evidence that he is not a criminal. Now, the gentleman seeks to justify the governor of Indiana in refusing to honor the requisition of the governor of Kentucky by the results of the Caleb Powers trial. Was not the requisition refused before Caleb Powers had ever been tried; and now is it that he knew in advance how the trial would be conducted?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, Governor Mount was a man of accurate and reliable instincts. [Laughter.] He was well informed as to the local conditions surrounding the court, and subsequent developments show that he made no mistake. He knew what he was doing. Governor Mount refused the requisition. The voters of the State of Indiana in the election of 1900 fully approved of the action of Governor Mount, and they will stand by Governor Durbin as long as conditions remain as they now are.

Mr. JAMES. Did the same instinct prompt Taylor to issue a pardon to Caleb Powers before he had ever been charged or tried? [Laughter.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Conditions sometimes, when political questions greatly agitate the public mind, are such as to take away all sense of fairness and justice from an otherwise honest and upright people. During the second trial of the honourable member of Kansas City for what appeared to be an unprovoked murder a witness on trial at the State was asked on cross-examination if he had not voted for a Republican candidate for Congress. Objection was made to the question. It was urged on the ground that it tended to impeach the credibility of the witness and the presiding judge, a gentleman of distinction, admitted the question, stating that the jury had a right to take into consideration the fact that the witness had voted for a Republican candidate for Congress as bearing upon his credibility. [Laughter.]

That is in the record in the Tillman case. It may be that conditions down in South Carolina are such as to justify that ruling of the court. I am not complaining about the result of that trial, but I am complaining about the results of trials in the State of Kentucky. I admit, for that as a rule it is the duty of governors of the several States to assist in the extradition of fugitives from justice. It is necessary that there may be a proper administration of the criminal laws of the country; but where life and liberty are involved and a combination of public sentiment exists in a State such that the courts are unable to conduct fair and impartial trials, it is the solemn and humane duty of a governor to refuse a requisition from that State until reason has resumed its sway and the excitement has abated.

That the discretion of the chief executive officer can not be controlled is a corollary of the old doctrine of States rights. You can not compel the chief executive officer of a State to exercise a discretion this way or that without controlling or embarrassing the administration of State affairs. That is Democratic doctrine. Now, Mr. Chairman, Governor Durbin was elected to the high office he now occupies by a majority of nearly 30,000 of the voters of the State of Indiana. My recollection is that in the State platform in the campaign of 1900 the Republicans of Indiana indorsed unqualifiedly the administration of Governor Mount, including his refusal to surrender Governor Taylor to the Kentucky authorities under the then existing circumstances. Governor Durbin has the reputation in Indiana and throughout this country of being not only a law-abiding but a vigilant law-enforcing governor. As chief magistrate he has used the power at his command to arrest and disperse mob after mob in the State of Indiana. In my judgment, he has done more in enforcing the criminal laws of the State and protecting life and property against violence and lawlessness than any other governor that has honored the position he occupies since the days of the great Morton.

Governor Mount refused the first requisition, and he was prompted in his action in some degree by the sincere belief that Taylor had been lawfully elected governor of the State of Kentucky; that he had been ousted from the office by the high-handed and revolutionary proceedings of his political adversaries, and that it would be a recognition of the validity of the contest to surrender the real governor of the State to the one who had unlawfully usurped his seat.

Besides this, before Governor Mount had had an opportunity to act upon the request of Governor Beckham, claiming to be the chief executive of the State of Kentucky, Governor Beckham had arbitrarily refused to recognize a requisition issued by Governor Mount for a fugitive then in the State of Kentucky. A number of days before the request was made upon Governor Mount to surrender Governor Taylor to the Kentucky authorities he made a requisition upon the governor of Kentucky for the arrest and surrender of Rudolph Gossman, a convict who was about to be released from the Frankfort Penitentiary and who was under indictment for a crime in Floyd County, in the State of Indiana. Beckham, in a letter that implied at least an insult to the governor of Indiana, responded to the requisition as follows:

Hon. JAMES H. MOUNT,
Governor of Indiana, Indianapolis, Ind.

A requisition from you for the arrest of one Gossman, wanted in Floyd County, Ind., has been presented to me. I would gladly honor it if you will first assure me that any requisition issued by me as governor upon you will also be honored. I ask this courtesy as desired because of certain expressions attributed to you in the press.

J. C. W. BECKHAM,
Governor of Kentucky.

Upon receipt of this letter from Governor Beckham, Governor Mount wrote him declining to enter into any bargain or compact respecting the question of extradition of criminals between the two States, but insisted that it was the duty of a governor to decide the merits of each application when it was presented to him for action. Governor Mount's letter I will now read.

Hon. J. C. W. BECKHAM, Frankfort, Ky.

JAMES H. MOUNT,
Governor of Indiana.

In the face of this record, Mr. Chairman, what have gentlemen to say respecting the conduct of the acting governor of the State of Kentucky in arbitrarily refusing to honor a requisition by the governor of the State of Indiana for a fugitive criminal? The action of Governor Beckham was based entirely, as he says, upon gossip. He had not as yet called upon Governor Mount to surrender the alleged fugitive, but before he would surrender a fugitive from justice from the State of Indiana upon the requisition of the governor of that State in order that he might be tried under an indictment regularly returned, he insisted upon a bargain that the governor of Indiana would in the future when called upon honor requisitions from the governor of Kentucky, which agreement the governor of Indiana properly and in a dignified way refused to make. Was Governor Beckham justified in refusing to respect the request of the State of Indiana for the surrender of Gossman? Did he violate the Constitution of the United States and the fundamental ethics between the States in so acting? When Governor Mount subsequently refused to surrender Governor Taylor to the Kentucky authorities he had before him this recent precedent of the governor of the State of Kentucky.

Governor Durbin simply followed the precedent set by his lamented and highly respected predecessor, but before final action he took pains to fully inform himself respecting the real situation surrounding the court in which the indictment against Governor Taylor was pending. He ascertained to his own satisfaction that such a condition of excitement existed and such an intense political hatred against Governor Taylor pervaded the functionaries in control of the administration of justice there that it would be impossible for him to have a fair and impartial trial. He spent much time in making the investigation and reached the conclusion I have stated. I will let him state in his own way the grounds upon which he refused to honor the requisition of the governor of the State of Kentucky. Here is what he said:

For the second time requisitions have been presented to the governor of this Commonwealth, issued by your authority, asking for the extradition of William S. Taylor and Charles Finley, alleged fugitives from justice from the State of Kentucky, and at this time residing in the State of Indiana. The instrument presented charges these men with conspiracy now before the fact to the wilful murder of William Goebel. I respectfully decline to honor the requisitions.

The reasons given for a similar action on the part of my predecessor, the lamented ex-Governor Mount, which, though in a personal and private way, he has since confessed as fixed, are no doubt fixed have suffered since that time, which only tend to establish the conviction, to those who have impartial and exact justice under the law to all men that the time has not yet arrived within the environments of this prosecution whereby an unprejudiced and impartial hearing of a fugitive could be had. I choose to make use of the right and the duty of the executive of the Commonwealth to exercise a discretionary power of refusal to the end that the purposes of persecution which seems to be the conspicuous feature of the prosecution may not force these men before a court partisan to the very extreme of violent excitement and a jury organized for conviction in the partisan and inflammatory.

The assassination of the late William Goebel was a monstrous crime, deplored as I believe, by every citizen of Indiana and of the Republic. The spirit of assassination is the twin of anarchy. If allowed to go unpunished there could be no more serious crime than that a citizen of a State, [illegible] official representative of the Commonwealth in some capacity, should be foully murdered as the result of conspiracy or as an individual act.

I have given careful and conscientious consideration to the evidence produced in the case by leaders of the persons accused of conspiracy in the murder of William Goebel so far as you have placed in my hands by the attorneys for the prosecution, and I unhesitatingly affirm that convictions based upon such a mass of self-evident perjury cast on the prosecuting witnesses of a court and jury not strong here [illegible] that were these requisitions honored I would be only adding the determination of the prosecution to convict these men without any reference to law, justice or the facts.

I am not a man from whom the presumption of innocence should never be stripped except by legal methods, to be subjected to the rapine of political persecution. Kentucky is a Commonwealth renowned for its high sense of justice and honor. Prosecutors by the representatives of the commonwealth some of the ablest lawyers of the nation, it has historic representations in the Supreme Bench. It was the birthplace of Abraham Lincoln, the emancipator of a race, who dedicated his life to securing the rights of and protection of the law. It is a State wherein very generally justice has been sought to be administered in the purest and purposes of courts, and this notwithstanding [illegible] compromises in comparison the odious acts which in the trial court of Jessamine County have been perpetrated in the name of law where the [illegible] of [illegible] have taken place. Can a fair trial be had [illegible] in the [illegible] of the suspected murderers of William Goebel? Does not the evidence demonstrate that a portion of this sum has been paid for perjury? In the recent trial of Caleb Powers was special counsel [illegible] authorized in the refusal of Judge Cantrill, [illegible] hearing. Why should a party of twelve partisans of the late Mr. Goebel be selected to try the accused?

By striking contrast to the extra partisanship of the Kentucky judge and jury, I present an example of the [illegible] in Indiana shortly after the war, when party spirit was at its [illegible]. The Democratic sheriff of Jennings County was on trial [illegible] Democratic and Republican persons [illegible] Mr. Hendricks [illegible] Democratic [illegible] Mr. Cleveland [illegible] Democratic [illegible] Mr. Cleveland [illegible] Democratic [illegible] Mr. Cleveland the fact that there were thirteen hundred white Republican voters in Scott County, or in the county where the jury were summoned at the time, and that they were men of average intelligence and respectability—that they measured up to the common standard in the county.

No amount of assertion, no amount of sophistry will convince the American people that it was possible for [illegible] accused of the assassination of Mr. Goebel to be tried fairly when the jury commissioners filled the jury box with names so that the jury drawn for the trial must be composed entirely of Democrats. It is contrary to human nature to expect a fair and impartial result of such a case before such a tribunal and the trials of Caleb Powers were travesties upon justice and are not entitled to the respect of any just [illegible] citizen.

The court in appointing commissioners of both Republicans and Democrats prior to the last election [illegible] from the commissioners in the Powers case [illegible] were composed upon a party division of that high court. The men composing that court were without doubt men of high character and above the political prejudice growing out of the Goebel affair so pronounced [illegible] in the State of Kentucky that no one was free from its virus. When the supreme court of the State in itself, in substance decided the case according to the party necessity of its members, it is too much to expect that an ordinary jury would rise above partisanship and try the cases according to the law and evidence.

The packing of the juries in those cases with political enemies of the accused was an outrage against justice that can never be forgiven.

I make no criticism of the State of Kentucky or any other State, North or South, in relation to the administration of justice as a general proposition. I have no doubt that the sense of fairness and right in the State of Kentucky is as high and pure as it is in the State of Indiana, but I am sufficiently well acquainted with human nature and with the operations of political passions in times of intense excitement to know that a jury made up of the party of one party or the other could not possibly do justice between the State and the accused, even if it were disposed to try to do so. If the jury had been composed entirely of Republicans who is there that will say that there would have been a conviction, regardless of what the evidence might have proved? Human nature is Kentucky I assume is about the same as it is in Indiana. To try a person for his life and send him to the gallows by courts and juries organized and surrounded as the courts and juries were that tried Caleb Powers the last time is [illegible] judicial assassination. Is the governor of a State bound to surrender an alleged fugitive to be tried under such conditions, knowing at the same time that he will have no chance whatever for a fair trial? Would I have done the same thing at any time afterwards?

I regret greatly the necessity for saying these things about the administration of justice in the State of Kentucky under the extraordinary conditions that surround the Goebel trials. The debate was not of my seeking. It was precipitated upon the House by the impassioned and vituperative denunciation of the honored and respected governor of the State of Indiana by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON]. I will not remove in my soul and permit the name and standing of my state and her distinguished governor to be unjustly attacked and vilified without offering a word in response. I sincerely hope that in the future elections will be conducted with such fairness in all of the States of the country that no further conditions like those existing in Kentucky after the election in 1899 will never again occur. I have now finished my remarks. [Applause on the Republican side.]

[Extract from Louisville Courier-Journal, August 1, 1900.]

JUSTICE AND PARTISANSHIP.

The curtain was rung down on the third act of a legal farce—or, rather, tragedy—entitled "An attempt to hang Taylor and damn the Republican party."

[illegible]

[illegible] Democrats prior to the last election, and [illegible] from the commissioners in the Powers case [illegible] were composed upon a party division of that high court. The men composing that court were without doubt men of high character and above the political prejudice growing out of the Goebel affair so pronounced [illegible] in the State of Kentucky that no one was free from its virus. When the supreme court of the State in itself, in substance decided the case according to the party necessity of its members, it is too much to expect that an ordinary jury would rise above partisanship and try the cases according to the law and evidence.

The packing of the juries in those cases with political enemies of the accused was an outrage against justice that can never be forgiven.

I make no criticism of the State of Kentucky or any other State, North or South, in relation to the administration of justice as a general proposition. I have no doubt that the sense of fairness and right in the State of Kentucky is as high and pure as it is in the State of Indiana, but I am sufficiently well acquainted with human nature and with the operations of political passions in times of intense excitement to know that a jury made up of the party of one party or the other could not possibly do justice between the State and the accused, even if it were disposed to try to do so. If the jury had been composed entirely of Republicans who is there that will say that there would have been a conviction, regardless of what the evidence might have proved? Human nature in the governor of the State of Indiana. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

When William M Kinley was struck down there was not a Democratic mother in a household in this broad land that did not feel weighed down by sorrow. There was not a Democrat anywhere that did not feel it. In my own little town we held our meeting and when I spoke to my people about it tears were in the eyes of a great many of them. [illegible] a little bit further. He has at least a [illegible] political assassination, and I hope [illegible] he decides to answer in the negative my question where I asked him if he did not feel [illegible] political assassination.

He now admits that he had to deal and bargain and [illegible] been assassinated. And [illegible] political purposes. [illegible] that the Republican party in Indiana [illegible] sunk to a level of partisan rancor so low that they contend that there was a justification for a [illegible] a political assassination—of a Democratic governor in Kentucky as a political question to Indiana. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The gentleman says that [illegible] and yet there is no man here who does not know that every [illegible] the Republican leader for other reasons and not for that reason. But in the [illegible] Congressional [illegible] as brave men and with as sweet home loving women as the world ever saw, the people decided that question as a political issue, as I decided, by an equally large majority, that, in their opinion, it was assassination, a political assassination, and yet more, that the political assassin, convicted, caged and to be hanged, and that his colleagues in crime ought to be returned to the State of Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I yield to the gentleman such time as he desires.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Just a word. I want to say this in closing, Mr. Chairman. I am on [illegible] I am not Democratic or otherwise [illegible] I am nothing and never have been. My personal feelings do not enter into my politics and my politics do not enter into my personal relations. I say that we have come to a strange state of things in these United States of America when to protect a foul assassin who stands charged to answer for that crime the governor of a State has failed to do his duty in honoring the requisition of a sister State, and even [illegible] by [illegible] argument the reply that there was "bad politics" in the [illegible] States and where indictments grew out of it justify the failure to surrender the alleged criminal on the ground that murder is a political question. The Republican governor of the adjoining State pretends to feel justified in refusing to obey the spirit of the constitutional mandate which gives "full credence" to the courts and proceedings of the adjoining State on such a pretext.

My God, Mr. Chairman, if we have [illegible] must be assumed to be corrupt, capable of bribery, capable of subornation, capable of assassination through [illegible] because they are Democrats, or because they are Republicans, or because they are Kentuckians, and the gentleman has [illegible] Union to stand [illegible] better for us to [illegible] States, founded upon mutual respect and mutual credence, and to elect or in somehow or other to manage to give the power to some good and good man who could manage the country in a fatherly way. [illegible]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? How does the gentleman explain the fact that in the three trials of Caleb Powers the juries were made up in every instance almost unanimously of ardent political friends of the late Goebel—Goebel Democrats?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I explain it by simply saying the gentleman is misinformed as to the facts. [Applause on the Democratic side.] In the very first trial of that case—I do not know about these matters in detail—but in the very first trial of that case there were six Goebel Democrats, four anti-Goebel Democrats, and two Republicans, one of whom the gentleman from Indiana says was a Goebel Republican, about which I know nothing.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let me ask the gentleman another question. If I am correct, then, in my facts, the gentleman will admit that the indictment that I have made against the State of Kentucky in this particular instance and for this particular occasion is well founded?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I will not.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Ah!

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And I will not admit it for a reason that is patent and obvious to all men. Was not [illegible] the jurors who sat upon the jury who tried the assassin of William McKinley? I do not know yet whether they were all Republicans or all Democrats. It was not a case of politics, it was a case of murder; and if the gentleman came into the State of Wisconsin, and he said, [illegible] simple addition and multiplication and interest—these are prerequisites upon which we impanel jurors there—he will find juries [illegible] day trying the case of a Republican suitor upon which there [illegible] Republican. It is not a political question, [illegible] men who are [illegible] jury to try a [illegible] murder, according to the [illegible] are corrupt and [illegible] to try it not upon the law and the evidence, but upon the [illegible] of the case. The assassination is not only not well taken, but it is unjust to any [illegible] American people, [illegible] in Kentucky or Indiana, and I [illegible] not [illegible] a [illegible] Democrat [illegible] times since this Government was founded.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Not only that—not only was it the crime of taking a [illegible] to a tribunal provided for the laws of hospitality [illegible] in a land of the Sassenach [illegible] a grand [illegible] them at any rate, that very same tribunal—to wit, the legislature of the State—is provided for exactly that same sort of [illegible] election case. The gentleman might [illegible] that because the gentleman from [illegible] Democratic side, was [illegible] by a committee a majority of whom were Republicans, and [illegible] his opinion was [illegible] with resentment by [illegible] the chairman of the Committee on Contested Elections or the contestant, that [illegible] in extenuation of murder.

Mr. POU. Will the gentleman yield to the gentleman a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. POU. I would like to know of the gentleman, inasmuch as platforms are made generally to get votes, if he knows of any other State in the Union where either political party has sunk so low as to put a plank in the platform for the purpose of getting votes which assumes that jurors and judges of the highest courts in a sister State have committed perjury in advance of the trial in the courts?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The answer to that question is so obvious that it needs no answer. Of course I do not.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Did not the gentleman say that it was—no, it was the gentleman who preceded him—that in the State of Kentucky that was the issue?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That was not the issue.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. The gentleman referred to something that I said.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman did not say so. The gentleman did not [illegible] the question. The question of the gentleman from North Carolina was this: Whether I knew of any State that had made a political question out of the refusal beforehand of the governor to give credence to a court in a sister State, on the assumption on the part of that governor that the population of the sister State was degraded, and that its judges and judges, therefore—for it could only be therefore—were corrupt, and to that I answered, "No." In Kentucky your own party attempted to make an issue of the prosecution of the murderers, and the Democracy met the issue because your people made it first in the very State where it occurred. You [illegible] it like grain before the scythe, and they are going down [illegible] regardless of the political questions in Kentucky as long as they dare flaunt their banner of assassination and murder as a political issue. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] propounded some questions to me a short time ago which I did not at that time have an opportunity to answer, but I will now undertake to answer in as plain, frank, and candid a manner as I am able. I am reasonably familiar, I think, Mr. Chairman, with the entire Goebel matter, if it may be designated as such. I have never been inclined to [illegible] upon the time of this House for the purpose of [illegible] tion here, because I have thought that the people of Kentucky—Democrats, Republicans, Populists, and Prohibitionists—are fully competent to settle all phases of the matter in the proper forum of that great Commonwealth.

Now, Mr. Chairman, since the matter is before the House, I desire to say, in response to the questions of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY], that in the campaign of 1899 the Republican party was represented at every precinct in that State, so far as I know, by two members on the precinct election board. That was the law then and had been for very many years before that in Kentucky. The precinct officers [illegible] to the county board, which in turn ascertained the result in the entire county by adding the votes as certified by the precinct boards. The county board certified the result in the county to the State board.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Chairman, did I understand the gentleman from [illegible] were Prohibitionists in Kentucky?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Oh, yes, a good many of them. If it will be any satisfaction to the gentleman, I will say to him that nearly [illegible] the territory of Kentucky is under prohibition. We have [illegible] down there not so [illegible] the gentleman, which was that the State canvassing board had issued a certificate of election to Governor Taylor and his colleagues [illegible]

[illegible] board made up of three members, whose duties are merely mechanical—that is, to add up the returns from the various counties, ascertain who upon the face of the returns have received a majority of the votes cast and issue certificates of election to them. That is what happened in this case. On the State election board of Kentucky in 1899 were W. S. Pryor, ex-chief justice of the State; W. T. [illegible] three terms a Member of this House, and C. B. Poyntz, of city of Maysville. These gentlemen stand as high and possess as excellent moral characters as any men in Kentucky or elsewhere.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I agree with the gentleman that they were conscientious, strictly [illegible] men, and issued the right kind of a certificate.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Let me answer further that this board was asked to question the validity of a large number of ballots in certain counties when the matter came before them, but upon a full consideration they determined that their functions were solely to cast up the votes that had been [illegible] to them by various county [illegible] and issue certificates to those prima facie entitled thereto.

So I apprehend, Mr. Chairman, it is in every State in this Union, that there is what we call a canvassing board to ascertain who upon the face of the returns [illegible] and that there is also a board for contest purposes, if a contest is desired by any party to the election.

Now, in Kentucky we have had from time immemorial a provision in our State constitution requiring the contest for governor and lieutenant-governor to be tried by the State legislature. I know that nearly all States in the Union have similar provisions, either in their constitutions or statutes. There may be some States that do not recognize the right of contest, but Kentucky Kans are too just, honorable, and intelligent to tolerate a system under which fraud and corruption could not be [illegible] in the ascertainment of even the commonest right of one of her citizens.

Therefore, any man who was a candidate for governor or lieutenant-governor may go before the [illegible] and contest the right of him to whom the certificate of election has been awarded. I don't know whether our sister State of Indiana has any provision for contest or not. I apprehend from the statement of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] that he does not believe that a man ought to have the right to contest the election of a State officer.

If that is his view, all well and good. I do not participate in any such opinion myself. I believe that when a man is wronged in a political race there ought to be a tribunal before whom he can seek redress. Now, then, coming to the prosecution of Powers and others, I want to say that in my humble judgment the men who have been charged with and tried for the assassination of William Goebel have had as fair and impartial trials as any men or set of men ever charged with crime in any State in the Union.

Powers was indicted in Franklin County and took a change of venue to Scott County. The first and second juries were selected from the latter, and had tried from Franklin County. The first jury was composed of four anti-Goebel Democrats, two straight Republicans, and six straight Democrats, and returned a verdict of guilty within an hour's time, or thereabouts. On the third jury there was one straight Republican, and no verdict was returned [illegible] by a vote of nine [illegible] so that the jury [illegible] of an innocent man as much as of a guilty one.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Will the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE] extend my time?

Mr. DINSMORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I desire to say to this House and to the country that on the second jury that tried him Caleb Powers had an old schoolmate and boyhood friend; and you gentlemen understand better than I can describe the strong [illegible] that [illegible] to another. Any man who declares that the [illegible] the gentleman [illegible] political prejudice to inflict the verdict of death or life imprisonment upon one whom he had been [illegible] as his schoolmate in past years does not understand Kentucky character, does not understand Kentucky manhood, and does not appreciate the strength, the force, the breadth, and depth of Kentucky [illegible]

I believe that that schoolmate of Caleb Powers, Democratic in politics as he was, would sooner have suffered his good right arm to be stricken from his body than to have [illegible] a verdict against that man had not the evidence shown his guilt beyond a doubt.

Just now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to answer further a point made by the gentleman from Indiana and which I was about to overlook. He referred to the fact that there had been a great reward fund offered by the Commonwealth of Kentucky for the arrest and conviction of the assassin of William Goebel. I want to say to him, in answer to that, that out of the hundred thousand dollars [illegible] in the [illegible] I do not personally assert it to be a fact—has been [illegible] and bringing to court the witnesses for the [illegible]

[illegible] about Mr. Campbell, intimated [illegible] with Mr. Campbell.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I did not mean to refer to the gentleman personally, but only to his party.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I understand the gentleman meant [illegible] I am informed that Mr. Campbell was employed by the brothers of the deceased William Goebel and looked to them wholly and entirely for his compensation in the case.

Mr. JAMES. Allow me to ask the gentleman whether it is not true that Mr. Campbell [illegible] Goebel [illegible] was a Republican and was an elector at large for the State of Ohio on the electoral ticket [illegible]

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. That is my information, that he was in politics a Republican, and that he was an elector at large for that State at the time mentioned by my colleague.

Mr. BOWIE. Allow me to ask whether there was a single American on the jury that tried Caleb Powers for the murder of President McKinley?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I do not suppose there was; at least I hope there was not.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in these matters I am one of those who do not desire to see any innocent man suffer. If I know myself aright. I would be as far from convicting William S. Taylor or Charles Finley or Caleb Powers, if I did not believe them to be guilty, as any man within the Union.

Mr. JAMES. Will my friend tell the House whether or not there was a single witness of Democratic faith and belief who testified to a single material fact against Caleb Powers, whether it is not true that every material fact that was proved against Caleb Powers was proved by Republicans and those who voted for William S. Taylor for governor?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I [illegible] to that proposition. It is a fact that the men who have been [illegible] persons of Mr. Taylor were [illegible] Republicans.

[illegible] but active and many of them, officeholders under Republicans under the last Republican administration of Kentucky.

Mr. JAMES. Is it not true that William O. Bradley, ex-governor of the State of Kentucky, [illegible] the statehouse grounds during the [illegible] that Taylor said to him, [illegible] ex-governor Bradley [illegible]

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. [illegible] there was a body in the [illegible] Republicans [illegible] it was composed.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Well, I am not able to speak about that [illegible] from [illegible] Governor Taylor [illegible] It is true that [illegible] after the ballot was [illegible] It is true that immediately after the ballot was fired the State guard, or his militia, had surrounded the statehouse and refused to permit any civil officer to enter to make search for the assassin.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if it is not true that Caleb Powers said to Youtsey, who had been convicted of being a conspirator in assisting Goebel's slayer, that he wanted Youtsey to give him a written statement that he never knew a word, by speaking or by a gesture, about any man who was contemplating killing Goebel, and if it is not true that Youtsey did write such a statement and that Powers said to Youtsey, "Now, I want you to have one more chance to save your life; I want you to sign this statement; I want you to swear to it; I want you to have one more chance to save your life," and if it was not after that that Youtsey made his confession, and that was brought out upon the trial, that paper signed by Powers himself?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. That is correct.

Mr. PAYNE. May the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. I wanted to know if it was true that the average juror in Kentucky, when the party is compared with the average citizen, is peculiarly good and impartial and intelligent as the members of the Kentucky delegation on this floor seem to be [illegible]

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I do not [illegible] as a question of fact, and taking the statements of opposing witnesses, some of whom he did not know at all, I do not understand that any man rank and file of men in our land such intelligence and qualities as those of us who live upon the Kentucky side. That is the answer I have to make to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I [illegible] the gentleman a question. The gentleman says there is no doubt but that we have had a fair trial now, and that we are [illegible] and that we are [illegible] the special session.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. [illegible] [Applause on the Democratic side.] [illegible] Kentucky has been knocking at your door for four years, asking for the surrender of these fugitives.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The last question. In view of the fact that there was such a [illegible] the defendant and the evidence furnished before the men to be prosecuted by Republicans, would it not have been good policy to put one or two Republicans upon the jury, just for appearance's sake?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. They were on it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If you had a safe case, why would it not have been wise to do that?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. The gentleman, not content with Republicans, wants Republican juries.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Put half and half, say.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I want to say to gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber that I would not absolutely have been [illegible] it would have been impossible [illegible] —in any state of this Union [illegible] the evidence.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If there had been half a dozen, there would not have been any such question as we are now considering.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. We [illegible] men on the jury, and [illegible] guilty. We [illegible] had two [illegible] on the jury, and they found Powers guilty, and one Republican [illegible] Republican [illegible]

Mr. JAMES. [illegible] Indiana, as to the trial of Youtsey, if it is not true when Youtsey was [illegible] paper in Kentucky and all their papers [illegible] the campaign which was then [illegible] wards, when Youtsey was tried [illegible] after that Youtsey had confessed and Youtsey's confession was [illegible] at Youtsey was a liar? I would like to remind [illegible] that fact.

Mr. [illegible] Was not Youtsey a liar?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I think that so far as his feigned insanity was concerned he lied. I do not think there is any perjury in Youtsey's confession.

Mr. TRAVER. Was he an elected Republican?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Yes; a Republican officeholder.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I [illegible] from Kentucky what he thinks [illegible] in this country if, after the rendition of the decision [illegible]

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. That would have [illegible] resolution [illegible] country if [illegible] governor of any State in this Union had sought [illegible]

[illegible] of any [illegible] governor of any State [illegible] assassin or [illegible] n of one man and a different rule for another.

A MEMBER. A Democrat.

Mr. [illegible] That may be a [illegible] ification for [illegible] I believe that there ought [illegible] jury of Franklin County [illegible] in the murder of William Goebel. [illegible] a [illegible] law of the land.

Now, if he may refuse in this case, why may not the governor of any other State do it in any other case? It will not do to say [illegible] Why, sir, [illegible] from serving as governor, and in the very first [illegible] convention held in Kentucky after the [illegible] nation the party leaders of that State indorsed the course of William S. Taylor and his colleagues and brought the matter into politics in Kentucky.

As I said in answer to a question earlier in the day, the Republican leaders of Kentucky made the speech of Caleb Powers in his defense, before the last jury which tried him, practically a campaign speech, their campaign book in the last election. Whenever they have thrown down the gauntlet upon this proposition the brave and courageous Democrats of Kentucky have stood ready to accept the challenge, as they ever will.

We are ready, if it must be fought out before the people, as Democrats of Kentucky, believing in law, order, and tranquillity—a cheerful submission to the constituted authority—to fight it out before the plain people and let them return the verdict. If the verdict of a Scott County jury or a Bourbon County jury is not sufficient to convince, we are willing to submit it to the honest, just, and intelligent citizenship of Kentucky.

Now, then, I wish to say briefly in conclusion that in my judgment this Congress can do no wiser thing than to add a supplemental provision enabling the States from which a criminal or alleged criminal has fled to recover the fugitive and bring him to trial. Why, sir, if Mr. Taylor is brought back to Kentucky, I have no doubt he can get an entirely fair trial.

There was a time when he could have come back, had a trial, and if he had not received fair treatment in the lower court the majority of members on the supreme court of the State were his political friends who were able and competent to have pardoned him. Then why did he not return? He [illegible] I [illegible] a criminal and he would not be a fugitive, but he turned out not only to be a fugitive but as clearly a criminal, and in that he is protected by the governor of a neighboring State.

Mr. BRICK. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Yes, sir; I will.

Mr. BRICK. Does the supreme court of Kentucky try the merits of a case upon the facts?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. No, sir.

Mr. BRICK. Then how could the supreme court of Kentucky protect a man from a jury of a court below?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. [illegible] the authority [illegible] sufficient evidence to warrant a conviction to direct a dismissal of the indictment in the lower court. That is the authority and the jurisdiction of the court of appeals of Kentucky.

Mr. JAMES. And is not that held to be the law in the case?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. JAMES. And was it not so held in the Caleb Powers case?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Yes, sir; a rule once made in a case is there, as it is elsewhere, held to be the law of the particular case, although in some other case it may have been held subsequently to have been unsound.

Mr. JAMES. That is right.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. That is the law. William Goebel was a brave and able advocate of popular rights as against corporate aggression, and no man in Kentucky was ever so hated by special interests or so loved by the plain people as he. But in conclusion, let me ask Republicans, Can you personally or as a party afford to uphold the governor of Indiana in his course of lawlessness, his course of ignoring the provisions of the Federal Constitution? Can you afford as a great party in this country, which you are, to indorse the course of ex-Governor Mount and present Governor Durbin in ignoring the plainest mandate of the Federal Constitution?

Can you afford to take that position either as a party or as citizens of Indiana? Can you afford to take the chances of making your Commonwealth an asylum for criminals from every quarter of [illegible] I believe the great masses of Indiana are too [illegible] the action of Governor Durbin. I shall be disappointed in my high ideals of Indiana citizenship if the public sentiment does not soon compel Governor Durbin and his party to do that which ought long ago to have been done—surrender Taylor. I thank the committee. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HEPBURN having taken the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. [illegible] announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 10421. An act to provide for the removal of snow and ice from the sidewalks of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8688. An act to transfer jurisdiction of reservation No. 82, in the city of Washington, D. C.;

H. R. 8686. An act to amend section 895 of the code of law for the District of Columbia; and

H. R. 4344. An act for the relief of Vincenzo Gerardi, of Washington, D. C.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the Senate concurrent resolution No. 4.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 10089) to regulate the issue of licenses for Turkish, Russian, or medicated baths in the District of Columbia.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HITT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY].

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to go into the [illegible] Kentucky matter, but the [illegible] that the man whom they seem to think was elected governor of Kentucky was assassinated, I do not believe anybody knows by whom. There was great excitement all over the State of Kentucky, and the Democratic party insists on [illegible] excitement, on working themselves up to a high pitch, which I believe makes it unfair for the governor of Indiana to send ex-Governor Taylor down into Kentucky for trial.

I do not care whether it is in Kentucky, New York, Indiana, or Ohio, or any other State in the Union, crimes growing out of [illegible] less of politics enter into it. I say it is a fact [illegible] gentlemen on the other side were so excited I should dislike to be tried by them. Now, if I were charged with a crime I would be willing to have a jury made up of the Kentucky delegation, for I know I should be treated fairly; but I [illegible] want to be [illegible] a jury. [Laughter.] I should rather be a Democrat if I were going to be tried in the State of Kentucky. But my friends on the other side feel very deeply about this matter.

Now, I put the question a while ago, "Has not Youtsey made [illegible] never came back from [illegible] 'No.'" They know he is a confessed liar. The people of the United States know it. Every man who has read the newspapers published the report of the Kentucky trials knows that Youtsey is a confessed liar; that he lied over and over and over again. And yet they say [illegible] was guilty. I am free to confess that I do not know whether he is guilty or not. I only have the impression that I get from reading the newspapers.

Mr. KEHOE. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HEMENWAY. No; I can not yield.

Mr. KEHOE. Hasn't Taylor made more than one statement?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Possibly he has. I have not followed it very carefully. Now, in Indiana this has never been an issue. We never heard of it in the campaign. We indorsed the position of Governor Mount and Governor Durbin, and we believe it would not be right at this time, with the excitement that prevails, to send Taylor back to Kentucky for trial. I remember that I was in the governor's room when Mr. Goebel came there and wanted to argue the question with the governor, and did argue the question with him. And Governor Durbin received him with all courtesy.

I remember one of the questions the governor put to him was this: The governor had before him a list of the men elected as jurors in one county where Taylor was supposed to be tried if he was sent back. Every name on the list with the exception of two were Democrats. The governor had before him the statement of men of high character that he could rely upon, who informed him that those men were Democrats, and he put the question to Mr. Goebel, "Do you believe it is fair for me to send Taylor back to Kentucky to be tried by a jury composed of these men?" And Goebel answered, "Yes."

Now, you gentlemen upon that side, as well as upon this side, know that it is not true you know that there could not be a fair trial in times of such political excitement, unless the jury were divided politically. In fact, there ought not to be any trial of a man charged with a political crime until the people have cooled off and can give him a fair trial. I sincerely hope, great God, that some day in the future we will ascertain who killed Mr. Goebel. [illegible] I hope for the good name of Kentucky—and Kentucky has always borne a good name, and I hope she always will in the future—they will find out who killed Goebel, and that the man will be punished for killing him. I [illegible] that if under the unusual excitement which Kentucky has conveyed Powers, if the State allows him to hang, the time will come in the history of that State when everyone will regret it; when you will wish that you could tear one page out of your history.

Get away from your political prejudices and excitement; look at this as the people of the United States look at it—because you [illegible]

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, wait a [illegible]

Mr. HOWELL. W[illegible] this case differs from the [illegible]

Mr. PAYNE. Go ahead.

Mr. PAYNE. And a little while afterwards a requisition was made [illegible] Republic [illegible] day to [illegible] governor of Ohio [illegible] the governor that it was not [illegible]

Mr. HITT. I now yield to [illegible] Mr. CUNEEN, a very eminent lawyer of [illegible] on the [illegible] and the Pr[illegible] I were [illegible] I [illegible], no matter how good a [illegible] with the murder of Mr. Goebel, and it was [illegible] the shot was fired [illegible] out or in. I would not want [illegible] Kentucky delegation, fair-minded as they are. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHIRLEY of Kentucky. Or [illegible]

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I would like to [illegible] gentleman this question. Suppose he had been in the service of duty and said to the [illegible] having the militia already in arms, "You act first, and then I will call out the militia;" and suppose he had had that militia waiting there for an hour ready to [illegible] that order, whenever the shot was fired to take the life of that man, should he not be indicted for murder?

Mr. PAYNE. If any man said that to save his own skin, and went before that jury and swore it was true, and I knew it was absolutely false and [illegible] before that jury, still I will say I would not want to risk my life before a jury from Kentucky having the feeling of the gentlemen who sit on the other side of this Chamber.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Why does not Governor Taylor [illegible] of some [illegible]

Mr. PAYNE. I am not Governor Taylor's counsel, and I could not tell the gentleman.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I now yield fifteen minutes to the [illegible] [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I think I will [illegible] a very good office if I address the House on a subject [illegible] may serve as a sort of buffer between those who have been [illegible] in this excited debate, and restore the House to that state [illegible] it is generally found when I address it on [illegible]

Mr. Chairman, [illegible] are often ac[illegible] inflict upon the [illegible] I am [illegible] full extent of [illegible]

[illegible] and urgent reasons that I have advanced in its support [illegible]

[illegible] Governor Odell [illegible] in St. Louis, in [illegible]

[illegible] of this kind have been, as I have [illegible] body for several sessions of different Co[illegible] has often got so far as to be reported [illegible] in Foreign Affairs and to be placed on the [illegible] impossible of reconciliation between the two different [illegible]

[illegible] principal basis that is sought in this reorganization is first [illegible] for duty. But against this the political objection has arisen, and I may venture to say that as a fact the Democratic party [illegible] absolutely [illegible] to give its sanction to this feature of the [illegible]

[illegible] of diversion [illegible] are they with the necessity of some [illegible] I, that they are now pre[illegible] to compr[illegible] and to see whether we can not agree upon [illegible] shall in part remedy the evils that now exist in [illegible] service.

I am [illegible] nel of our [illegible] There are [illegible] parties in our consular service as exist in that of any other country. But it is the law and the system which I attack, and so long as [illegible] no real [illegible]

[illegible] all which is the work of a national [illegible] e, of which Mr. Henry A. Garfield, the son of the late [illegible] t, is the chairman, representing all the boards of trade and [illegible] commerce of our [illegible]

[illegible] or. I met Mr. [illegible] adelphia last Satur[illegible] and he placed this measure in my [illegible]

Much as I am interested in the bill which I have been agitating for so many years, I am very glad to abandon it when in the judgment of so many of my colleagues it is pronounced impossible to pass it. Therefore I am ready to fall back on this much smaller measure, which I hope will be a stepping stone and ultimately the foundation for placing the service on the conditions which we all desire.

My object in speaking to-day is to call attention to this bill. I [illegible] Member will read it. In doing so he will find that it [illegible] relating to the service. The first is one which should, I think, appeal to the fairness of every man present.

It is that the service should be classified, the salaries more nearly equalized, and the compensation of all put on a fair footing. As the [illegible] now stands, the compensation is most unequal.

Some officers of the consular service make to-day I do not know [illegible] are paid the magnificent compensation of $1,000 a year, a salary which in my judgment is a disgrace to a country so able as ours to pay to the men who represent it abroad.

It can easily be seen that it is impossible for any man to support himself, much less his family, on this salary and at the same time live in the condition which every representative of the United States—over whose door stands the shield of his country, and who, wherever he goes, is recognized as the official representative of his country, and who is expected to maintain that dignity—has a right to [illegible]

The object of classifying the service, then, is to equalize the [illegible] ation, and so on down the list.

[illegible] re of this bill is that all the fees official and [illegible] be turned [illegible] of [illegible]

[illegible] this will remove the [illegible] the legal rate; this [illegible] of the [illegible] and all those who [illegible] have been sub[illegible] s will remove the [illegible] or [illegible] the com[illegible]

[illegible] UDDER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a [illegible]

Mr. ADAMS of Pen[illegible] Yes.

Mr. SCUDDER. Is it not true that the Democratic party has in substance—that is, that the Democratic members of the Com[illegible] n Foreign Affairs have in substance—offered to report a [illegible] ng the lines which the gentleman now suggests, that they [illegible]

[illegible] due to the fact that it would fasten [illegible] service the [illegible] ss and the [illegible] es now attached to [illegible] who are largely there, if not entirely there, as the result of [illegible] system of appointments, which, of course, have been [illegible] ations?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I frankly admit the first part of the gentleman's statement. I could hardly be expected to admit the second half of the gentleman's statement. I have already [illegible] ar it is the system that I think is responsible for the [illegible] conditions and not a political party.

Mr. SCUDDER. But it is the system which has resulted in the appointment of men whom the gentleman himself concedes should [illegible] in the service by the fact that he introduces a bill to reorganize the service.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I will answer the gentleman by [illegible] that in my opening remarks I said I brought no charge [illegible] the personnel of the service. I think it is as good as is possible under the present political system of our country and un[illegible] the law as it stands to-day.

Mr. SCUDDER. Will the gentleman yield for another question? As the law stands to-day, I ask him, is it not entirely [illegible] province of the President to appoint the very best men, and only the best man to each place, and is there any excuse for the appointment of any bad men, if the President will rise above and superior to party considerations and appoint good men?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I will answer the gentleman by saying that I am trying to keep party politics out of this discussion. [illegible] I am trying to meet the views of the gentlemen on that [illegible] the Chamber, and I do not want to drag in past history. I can only answer him in a way that I am loath to do.

He says he holds the present Administration responsible, because they ought to do better. I do not know how far back his [illegible] me into power, to an extent that had never been done be[illegible] much so that it was one of the things that reflected most [illegible] y on that Administration.

[illegible] our [illegible] cratic, can rise superior to existing conditions. There is a political pressure that nobody can resist under our system. I stand here myself as earnest and honest an advocate as any man can be on this question.

It was brought home to me by personal experience in South A[illegible] long before I came to Congress, and I have been work[illegible] writing and speaking and trying to legislate ever since for the improvement of this system; and yet I confess to the gentleman that on one occasion sufficient pressure was brought to hear upon myself, loth as I was, to force me to recommend a man who, in my judgment, was not fully equal to the service.

Under the present system you can not resist that pressure, and that is the reason that the people who are earnestly in favor of the improvement of the system want the law changed, so that that pressure can not be brought to bear. When that is done conditions will chan[illegible]

Mr. SCUDDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. [illegible]

Mr. SCUDDER. I should like to say to the gentleman that he himself, if I understood him correctly, interjected a pointed atmosphere into this discussion by stating that on this side of the House we were opposed to a reorganization of the consular system. If [illegible] rectly. I think [illegible] the early part of his speech.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. In reply to the gentleman I stated as a fact, which I said was not [illegible] a fact which I think [illegible]

Mr. SCUDDER. I [illegible] man whether or not this tenure of office which [illegible] not a [illegible] means the Republican of the men who are [illegible] ere, instead of opening the door to all who might wish to [illegible]

Mr. ADAM[illegible] the bill that I [illegible] of politics, to the men in th[illegible] r to the applicants who are competent [illegible] ter [illegible]

Mr. SCUDDER. Is not that w[illegible] do?

[illegible] This is not my bill. This bill comes from the national committee representing the business interests of the country.

[illegible] DDER. I would ask the gentleman if the Democrats [illegible] ered to report a bill favoring the classification of the [illegible] there, and thereby [illegible] service, without fastening upon the service the mossbacks and the barnacles that are there now?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. The gentleman offered to support that kind of a bill; but answering him frankly I myself [illegible] in favor of the bill we had before us at [illegible] velopment continues, and I have not changed my opinion in a single degree. I have reinforced it in my remarks, and the gentleman has reinforced it also by his [illegible]

Mr. SCUDDER. Will the gentleman yield to me for another question?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I can not yield any more. I have answered your point.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HITT. I yield the gentleman five m[illegible] more.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Now, Mr. Chairman, to conclude in a genera[illegible] stated in fifteen minutes, and sen[illegible] details and illustrate the evils that now exist in our system.

But I wish to impress upon the House the important relations that this branch of service bears to the [illegible] and manufacturers should have [illegible] tistics of the nation of the [illegible] y can possibly have.

All the movements of our [illegible] cial ex[illegible] peo[illegible] The [illegible] to be [illegible] tending toward development of our trade. The [illegible] by unusual wisdom and great foresight, has kept the door in the East open [illegible] all the m[illegible] s that have been placed [illegible] it.

[illegible] y man engaged in business in this country the al[illegible] sity that you shall have [illegible] in for[illegible] m the men who are to gather [illegible]

How can men gather statistics and give us [illegible] if as [illegible] n as they have become capable to fill the [illegible] They oc[illegible] and entire [illegible] fill their places?

How can a man gather information if he can not read the public documents and newspapers and the other [illegible] places to which he is accredited and report them to his Government?

Why, he may have all the energy of the American people, for which we are noted; he may have [illegible] ness of the American people; but if he is handicapped, if he can not read the information that lies at his door, if he can not speak the language of the country to which he is accredited, if he can not gather the statistics in governmental reports and send them on to the country in our own language. How can you get your information, and how can it be accurate, how can it be reliable?

It is that but one thought that the best interest men in our country in this hour of our peace should receive more attention. I wish to say further that this branch is unique in its character. There is no branch of the service equal to these engineers and architects all the places that have the character of the men in these positions.

We should have men that would represent us with dignity as well as with ability. We should have men, sir, where our country is represented by Congressmen [illegible] that they should possess those qualifications and attributes in their wants.

We would have men whom we would regard the standing of American gentlemen [illegible] the earth, because it comes from [illegible] and we should have men who [illegible] do full justice in a way that should [illegible] our country.

Mr. CHAIRMAN, this bill will be a benefit to the country. I believe [illegible] of those who are interested in this subject will support the proposition.

[illegible] that [illegible] for the [illegible] that we at last can take [illegible] toward the demands of the commercial, [illegible] our country in the great [illegible] their [illegible] but shall extend to the uttermost [illegible]. [Applause.]

Mr. HITT. As I do [illegible] to whom I expected [illegible] I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [illegible].

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Chairman, I was [illegible] the [illegible] [Mr. CRUMPACKER]. I was astonished at the utterances of my genial friend [illegible] from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY]. [illegible] way to contumely [illegible] and low [illegible] will [illegible] regard [illegible] after his kind. [illegible] world who does [illegible] not an [illegible] who [illegible] in those who [illegible] him.

[illegible] part [illegible] Mr. [illegible] CROWLEY [illegible] Mr. [illegible] that [illegible] ment, no [illegible] of his [illegible] to be [illegible]

What would [illegible] at Buffalo [illegible] of [illegible] I Lin [illegible] was a [illegible]

I [illegible] tion. I do [illegible] my [illegible] under a [illegible]

Mr. BEPBURN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. STANLEY. Why [illegible]

Mr. BEPBURN. I [illegible] upon whom you have d[illegible] liver[illegible] ate a man?

Mr. STANLEY. [illegible]

Mr. BEPBURN. I [illegible] ask the fact.

Mr. STANLEY. I [illegible] sir.

Mr. BEPBURN. Will the gentleman answer me?

Mr. STANLEY. Yes, sir. I am answering you now. This man was as brave as Taylor is cowardly——

Mr. HEPBURN. Will you answer my question?

Mr. STANLEY. Yes, sir; and those who slew him as cowardly and false——

Mr. HEPBURN. Will you answer the question?

Mr. STANLEY. Yes, sir: I am answering you. He imbued his hand in the blood of his fellow-man, in defense of his person and in defense of his sacred honor, under the clear skies, in the presence of all men in the open street.

Mr. HEPBURN. And he found an asylum in Kentucky after he did it, did he not?

Mr. STANLEY. No, sir; he found a defense——

Mr. GOOCH. After he was shot.

Mr. STANLEY (continuing). He found a defense in the court which will give to Taylor a fair trial. No jury, however partisan, Democrat or Republican, from that day to this has ever believed [illegible] Wilson County [illegible] upon his [illegible] the wound of a pistol bullet from the hand of the gamest man and the best shot in Kentucky.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to make one suggestion in that connection. Did not Goebel in that case positively [illegible] the governor of Kentucky?

Mr. STANLEY. Yes.

Mr. KEHOE. A Republican governor?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. No.

Mr. STANLEY. [illegible] that he would not, unless he were grossly misinformed [illegible] his voice is to be heard in all [illegible], recognizing as I do his prominence and his power, he would not stoop in order to shield this man Taylor to belittle and [illegible] mear with a charge absolutely false the grave of Kentucky's [illegible] dead. I wish to say to you, sir, that the man whom he [illegible] first assailed him in character, first maligned him in [illegible] print.

I saw that same William Goebel at Augusta stand mute but fearless under the [illegible] of this same man. He had persecuted [illegible] for years. He met him on the streets in Covington; he asked [illegible] him in the side, which he carried to his death. [illegible] then fired at his opponent. There were only two shots fired; and if you will tell me how a man can shoot another after [illegible] brain, then I will tell you [illegible].

Sanford [illegible] in his brain—through the center of the forehead [illegible] was found afterwards, torn and bleeding by [illegible] had plowed its way around his body. You can [illegible] that way. There was no window there; [illegible] there; there was no Marlin rifle [illegible] was no peering there. He shot him in the city of [illegible], where his (Goebel's) most powerful opponents were.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. STANLEY. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that I may [illegible].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will yield to the gentleman my time.

Mr. HITT. I will yield to the gentleman [illegible]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman, did not Goebel stand trial by a Kentucky jury?

Mr. STANLEY. Yes. Now, I wish to say that the only Republican [illegible] who ever was and who ever will be governor of my [illegible] old be the first to refute that charge because he was the [illegible] minum on the [illegible] I was there [illegible] there was [illegible] in any party or any set of people, not even among his bitterest enemies, a living [illegible] that dared to charge that he was an [illegible] ever [illegible] was thought that to stand before the fire [illegible] death. Such was the man who determined to silence W[illegible] and to remove him from the political [illegible]

[illegible] was the first to admit, the first to recognize [illegible] and first to praise the manliness and courage of William [illegible].

[illegible] and western Kentucky. There may be a disregard, as some see it, for human life, but in Kentucky they look each other in the eye when they fire. In all my life, living in and around Lexington and western Kentucky, in that part known as the "blue-grass" region and the [illegible] I have never known a man of standing to be even [illegible] tion of the country.

It is for that reason that we feel this anger now; it is for that reason that we feel this resentment now; it is for that reason that when this question is again discussed and when the bloody garments of William Goebel are unveiled before you, and when his memory is assailed by every species of slander, malignity, and hate, when falsehood does the work that assassination left incomplete—it is then that every Kentuckian, not only within the halls of Congress, but within the confines of my native State, feels the blood mount to his cheek and is ready at all times and under all circumstances, with his life if need be, to defend the memory of [illegible] martyred dead. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HITT. I now yield a minute to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, in refutation of the [illegible] [Mr. CRUMPACKER], I desire to refer the committee to the sixty-fifth United States Reports, in the leading case of the governor of the State of Kentucky against the governor of the State of Ohio. I read from the pertinent sections of the syllabus of the case:

[illegible] m. [illegible] rial, and he had no [illegible] power as to the nature or character of the [illegible] in which the duty was to [illegible].

So it will be seen that it is a matter of "duty" and not a matter of "discretion," as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] wrongly stated the law.

[illegible] tute were intended to prevent the exercise of this right of might [illegible] ways the governor of one State has the right to visit on a sister State or States.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a few remarks upon a subject that appears to interest the Northwest particularly. In a speech delivered some time ago by my distinguished friend from [illegible] [Mr. LIND] he took [illegible] with my friend. I used to belong to his Congressional [illegible] he represented with so [illegible] Minnesota. I followed his [illegible] with a great deal of pleasure. I would like to be able [illegible] him now. I know that he is supported by [illegible] whose favor I [illegible] this is a subject to which I have given [illegible] and I feel that he is wrong, though his ear[illegible] made has been very impressive. And while it [illegible] one who is better known and whose utterances would carry more weight [illegible] this House for a few moments while I give my ideas on the subject.

In the speech I refer to my friend [Mr. LIND] took occasion to say that [illegible] when the price of wheat, a commodity of which we export millions upon millions of bushels. This is the [illegible] our [illegible] by the price in the so-called world's market, or the Liverpool market. This is not true to the extent generally contended. If the doctrine is true, [illegible] of wheat in Minneapolis is the price at [illegible] charges and expenses for placing it there. [illegible]

Let us see if that is true. Compare the cash price at Minneapolis with the price at Chicago and you will seldom find it more than 1 or 2 cents higher at the latter than at the former place. This is true, though Chicago is by rail (the only mode of transportation [illegible] a water) about 400 miles nearer to Liverpool than Minneapolis, and has [illegible]

Then, again, compare Minneapolis price with New York prices and you will often find only a slight difference, usually much less than the cost of transportation, not to mention other handling charges. This shows that the relative price at Minneapolis is much higher than at New York. The New York price is quite largely influenced by the Liverpool price, though even that is quite often as high as the Liverpool price. As to freight charges, James J. Hill, president of the Great Northern Railway Company, said in a recent speech that the freight charge from Minneapolis to New York [illegible] a hundred, or 15 [illegible] Lind says the way [illegible] New York has been [illegible] York to Liverpool rate from 8 to 6 cents per [illegible] a total freight charge of from 14 to 15 cents per [illegible] during insurance, elevator, or other charges. [illegible] to find wheat only from 5 to 8 cents higher in Liverpool than in Minneapolis and [illegible] Test this question again in this way: Almost every [illegible] report from Minneapolis will show cash wheat and [illegible] the same crop for future delivery [illegible] market where the demand [illegible] wheat to be [illegible] few weeks prices for May delivery at New York and Minneapolis have been within 2 or 3 cents of each other, and I [illegible] Minneapolis Journal that prices [illegible] less than in Minneapolis [illegible] by Kansas City to place its wheat up in the [illegible] ket is less than that paid by Minneapolis [illegible] market at this time to be from 10 [illegible]

This situation has been [illegible] by the [illegible] The [illegible] to an [illegible] when on this side of the Canadian border. I quote from [illegible] in the N[illegible] in late years, the [illegible] cult to supply these [illegible]

Then again they say:

In [illegible] ing it in paying premiums for [illegible]

This situation exists to-day. The great banking house of Henry Clews & Co., of New York, in its review of trade conditions, December 19, [illegible] m of securing an adequate [illegible]

The Chamber of Commerce of Milwaukee, in its report for 1902-3, has a similar complaint. No one at all familiar with the subject can deny the fact. The [illegible] league [Mr. LIND]. He says it is [illegible] average has generally been 4 to 5 cents higher than the general [illegible]

There are [illegible] south of the Great Lakes and [illegible] is there where [illegible] try, a bu[illegible] ana, Illinois, and Ohio—that p[illegible] above con[illegible] million. It [illegible]

[illegible] territory, b[illegible] is at a disadvantage in competing with the Northwest [illegible] American market, which I have just described. [illegible] flour made from wheat raised in the Northwest [illegible] tation for excellence of quality that [illegible] and [illegible] enjoys an exceptionally low freight rate over the lines of railways [illegible]

[illegible] determine [illegible] demand for wheat in the Northwest. The [illegible] that competition inside the American market has been so keen in years past as to materially raise the price, a fact generally conceded by [illegible]

Mr. LIND. Would it embarrass my colleague if I should ask him a question?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No, [illegible]

Mr. LIND. [illegible] whether in his [illegible] that [illegible] Minnesota [illegible]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. [illegible] just what I [illegible] in which it is [illegible]

Mr. LIND. You approve of the condition of affairs that makes the [illegible]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I approve of it, and I will explain later why I [illegible]

Mr. LIND. [illegible]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. [illegible]

Mr. LIND. [illegible] the Northwest [illegible] Canada. [illegible]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. [illegible] every bushel of it. I am [illegible] in this country unless they pay the tariff, and they can not as the law stands.

Mr. LIND. Will the gentleman yield to another question?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. [illegible]

Mr. LIND. Do you not believe that so long as the United States [illegible] barrel of flour, and the wheat [illegible] that comes from Canada and is ground at Minneapolis [illegible] another barrel of flour or wheat [illegible] country? In other words, is not this true, that every barrel of flour manufactured in the Minneapolis [illegible] export of another barrel of flour [illegible] country—practically another barrel? The ultimate question is [illegible] effect upon the foreign trade.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No, sir. Canadian flour left in our market will depress prices here and satisfy the intense local demand, which is [illegible] than Minneapolis [illegible] Northwest [illegible] be removed [illegible] an [illegible] tariff [illegible] tariff on wheat is of some value to them it is [illegible] and destroy the value of this market, and if the tariff on wheat can not be repealed, to change the law in regard to shipping in bond, so that wheat can be ground here for reshipment, but allowing the [illegible] tariff [illegible] Labor [illegible] a living profit. [illegible] wheat. [illegible] against the tariff upon wheat as of no value [illegible] Northwest. Let me apply the logic of that sheet to the argument against the steel schedule. My colleague says that schedule is unnecessary, as we produce a surplus of steel goods almost as [illegible] schedule [illegible] prices. [illegible] prices, but the raise can no more be me[illegible] one case than the other. The [illegible] American market for the farm or factory.

Mr. LIND. But is it not true, [illegible] that we import steel? We are an [illegible] iron is concerned, but we are an exporting country so far as wheat and agricultural products are concerned.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. We import [illegible] gram. The relative differences between the [illegible] of wheat as compared with [illegible] is not so very great.

I shall pass by as worthy of pra[illegible] the contention that it would help the Americ[illegible] Canadian wheat come into this country, so that it could be offered in European markets as part of our crop instead of having it offered by the Canadians in competition with ours. There is no law which prevents the Americans from purchasing [illegible] free of duty through the United States to f[illegible] bushel of Canadian wheat. Then, again, our crop is not offered as one crop. Hundreds of dealers are offering [illegible] crops. It it the visible supply which has the largest effect upon the foreign markets, whether that supply be on this side of the line or in Canada.

It is claimed that there is no difference in the character of the people or in the industrial conditions of the United States and Canada that requires a tariff to shut out Canadian products. In this claim I believe my colleague is grossly mistaken. I believe there is a vast difference, which not only justifies but requires a protective tariff. In the first place, Canada produces no agricultural products that we do not also produce in sufficient quantities for home consumption. I would [illegible] agricultural product that we need to import from Canada. The importation from Canada of any agricultural product [illegible] takes away from the American farmer an opportunity to sell for consumption the same article.

Canada is essentially an agricultural country. It has very few cities, and what cities it has are readily supplied from the local territory surrounding them. The situation on this side of the line is vastly different. Along the Great Lakes and in the Northeast Atlantic States are, as I have said, 20 [illegible] people dependent in a large measure for their subsistence upon the agriculture of distant States. Canada can see south of her, moving along upon the Great Lakes and railway systems, hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of agricultural products seeking a market in the great industrial centers of this country. It is [illegible] that the demand in [illegible]

but one result. The people of this country will not be satisfied by [illegible] will demand the [illegible] and there will be [illegible] Instead of a [illegible] will spring up a demand for Canadian [illegible] This is the market where the highest and best grades can [illegible] be sold. This [illegible] would take the place of our [illegible] in America, and the farmer is getting an extra price on that account. The proposition is to largely deprive him of this market. Do you think the farmers [illegible] the Northwest are ready to do this without a murmur? To do it would be [illegible] cents per bushel to place their wheat on the Liverpool market, and [illegible] to secure a market nearer home. To that end they [illegible] to a tariff on lumber, coal, and a thousand other articles [illegible] and now [illegible] wheat is of some value to them it is [illegible] and destroy the value of this market, and if the tariff on wheat can not be repealed, to change the law in regard to shipping in bond, so that wheat can be ground here for reshipment, but allowing the [illegible] tariff [illegible] labor [illegible] a living profit. [illegible] wheat. [illegible] against the tariff upon wheat as of no value [illegible] Northwest. Let me apply the logic of that sheet to the argument against the steel schedule. My colleague says that schedule is unnecessary, as we produce a surplus of steel goods almost as [illegible] schedule [illegible] prices. [illegible] prices, but the raise can no more be me[illegible] one case than the other. The [illegible] American market for the farm or factory.

Mr. LIND. But is it not true, [illegible] that we import steel? We are an [illegible] iron is concerned, but we are an exporting country so far as wheat and agricultural products are concerned.

Along the Great Lakes and in the Northeast Atlantic States are, as I have said, 20 [illegible] people dependent in a large measure for their subsistence upon the agriculture of distant States. Canada can see south of her, moving along upon the Great Lakes and railway systems, hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of agricultural products seeking a market in the great industrial centers of this country. It is, as I have said, one of the greatest markets in the world. It is this market that I desire to preserve for the farmers of the Northwest. Canada has nothing like it, to offer. The proposition made is to trade this immense market for what? For [illegible] So would certainly be the height of folly. Canada has nothing to offer that could even in a slight degree compensate us for [illegible] to withdraw protection to her factories. Canada has a surplus for export of oats, barley, rye, hay, butter, [illegible] cheese, and is in a position to rapidly and [illegible] these items, no one can [illegible] portion of the total produce which we export would show that the tariff is ineffectual.

To give some idea of the vast importance of [illegible] call your attention to a few facts. [illegible] a [illegible] bushels of oats annually. About [illegible] enter the channels of trade. Chicago alone [illegible] bushels in 1901. Canada could supply a large [illegible] that. We produce about [illegible] Minnesota, and [illegible] a surplus a[illegible] Northwest [illegible] butter is [illegible] In [illegible] the demand than could the [illegible] the Great Lakes [illegible] the United States. Most of the wheat which reaches Minneapolis, Duluth, and Superior is raised on land worth [illegible] that of Canada will almost equal 10 cents a bushel on wheat.

By an economic law the price of a product naturally tends [illegible] of an article. We have a [illegible] country of the effect of this law. The East was originally agricultural like the West. Its lands were worth as much and generally more than western lands are at present, but the development of the West [illegible] farmers [illegible] of farms were greatly increased. The [illegible] of the western lands made it possible for the West to [illegible] compete with the East despite the handicap in [illegible] It is claimed that the land in Canada has the same [illegible] over our western land. Are we going to repeat the experiment? I tell you, sir, I have no ambition to build up Canada, and I am not going to do it at the expense of this country. Open the markets of this country to the Canadian agricultural products and that country will build up very rapidly. People will go there by thousands and sets of thousands where they now go by hundreds. They would increase exports of agricultural products very rapidly; but leave them alone and let them build their own markets as we have been compelled to do, and we will retain our own people, avoid ruinous competition, and help develop this country. We do not owe Canada anything, she pays no taxes, owes us no obligation, and there is no reason why she should be favored. All appeals for sympathy with Canada appear unnecessary. My sympathy is with this country.

It is perfectly evident that the question of free trade in wheat is not local in character, but one that affects agriculture through the whole country. Turn, if you please, to the statistics on agriculture, and you will find in the years past that whenever the price of corn or wheat has been low there has in the years follow-

[illegible] this House much longer than I ought to, and must make amends by losing in a few minutes.

This is not a question of Canadian reciprocity, though I find it is called such by persons who are anxious to conceal the real issue. It is an effort on the part of local interests to hide under the name of reciprocity their demand for free trade for certain Canadian products, and I find Liberals wielding the party lash with great vigor, evidently to prevent discussion.

I notice in the St. Paul Dispatch, one of the largest Republican [illegible] which it [illegible] editorially. It [illegible] that I am [illegible] fend my farmer [illegible] which the late Hon. [illegible] K. Davis [illegible] Canada in case the tariff was removed. This paper [illegible] reads me out of the Republican party if I oppose what it [illegible] "Changing [illegible]" and [illegible] is as hard above. I have the temerity to oppose it. I am [illegible] to be driven. In the discharge of my duties I am [illegible] to allow the St. Paul Dispatch to dictate my [illegible] In this very remarkable editorial the paper clearly shows its [illegible] not only of my attitude but also of the real question [illegible] It argues that all the protection the tariff affords the [illegible] is one-fourth of 1 cent per bushel. This one-fourth of 1 cent is what is paid for the privilege of milling in bond for foreign export, and has nothing whatever to do with importation of wheat for home consumption. It is well aware that there is a duty of 25 cents per bushel imposed on wheat imported for home consumption and that it is against this duty that [illegible] are complaining. No one objects to [illegible] grain come through the American market or to [illegible] provided it is exported to foreign countries [illegible] have it brought [illegible] our own people, and it is not fair to mislead the public as to the real issue.

The St. Paul Dispatch does not determine what is Republican doctrine in Minnesota. No Republican convention has ever declared for unrestricted reciprocity. When this question was submitted to the last Republican convention in this State, which, by the way, was [illegible] Republican, it refused to [illegible] and I [illegible] have [illegible] it. The State as a [illegible] Its cities and villages depend for their growth and for their prosperity [illegible] Canada. They [illegible] from Canada [illegible] ments or manufactures [illegible] Canada does not supply its [illegible] Canada [illegible] for free lumber and [illegible] I do not believe any duty should be levied upon these articles. Lumber is now cheap and [illegible] per thousand feet than ten years ago, though the saw logs pay [illegible] a thousand. Coal is largely [illegible] year's experience [illegible] But I am not going to discuss the tariff at this time. [illegible] with Canada [illegible] had that will afford fair treatment to all [illegible] I shall be glad to support it at any time. If [illegible] I believe in the preliminary of Blaine and M[illegible] goods, but not in reciprocity in [illegible] which is simply free trade. I believe in the [illegible] which this country [illegible] I do not want that market [illegible] for the benefit of the milling and jobbing interests of a few cities on the lakes. To take from the farmer this [illegible] anything in return, as is proposed, is [illegible]

I may want to thank the House for the kind indulgence it has shown me. [Applause.]

Mr. DINSMORE. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for a few minutes' [illegible] at this time a subject which is somewhat germane to the [illegible] and consular appropriation bill. I refer to the insulting treatment by the Empire of Russia of American citizens who are Hebrews and who come to that Empire with American passports.

Now, I have asked for but a brief time in which to discuss this subject, not because I fail to recognize the importance and gravity of the subject, but because it will be presented to you later in this [illegible] section, with much more ability and much more eloquence than I can summon, by my distinguished colleague, Mr. GOLDFOGLE. [illegible] Foreign Affairs and which I wish to incorporate in my remarks. For that purpose I should like to have it read by the clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

[illegible]

Mr. HARRISON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think we can all see that there is here no question of partisanship. I think, further, that this is not a question of race or of religion, but simply a question of Americanism. It has always been so regarded and [illegible] by the Administrations, both Democratic and Republican, which have taken up this question in the past with more or less energy.

I have no desire to criticise the present administration in the State Department upon this subject. Nor do I believe that the Hebrews of this country have [illegible] gratitude for the courtesy and attention that they have received when bringing this subject before the Department; but, at the same time, to an American citizen who applies at our State Department for a passport to journey in Russia it is a striking thing to be confronted with a circular, of which I am going to read one clause:

The laws of Russia also exclude from Russian territory [illegible]

That is a very weak admission on the part of a sovereign power, the United States of America, that they can not secure equal recognition for all of their citizens while traveling abroad.

[illegible] pressed his willingness to aid as well as he can in the solution of this vexatious problem. But we might as well wait for an iceberg to drift complacently across the equator or for the bear to change his bland and child-like nature as to wait until Russia shall take the initiative in a foreign policy entirely contrary to the internal administration of that empire.

What we need is another example of the new diplomacy—the American diplomacy which always tells the truth; goes straight ahead and gets what it wants.

I would like to read a [illegible] all the Russias in 1832:

ARTICLE I.

There shall be between the territories of the high contracting parties a [illegible] navigation, and particularly to the regulations in force concerning commerce.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether anyone in the Government at the time of the negotiation of this treaty knew [illegible] of the Empire of Russia. I [illegible] down to us [illegible] a good-natured but erratic kinsman, John Randolph of Roanoke. Some two years before this treaty was negotiated he was sent as minister to Russia, but after he had spent three weeks there he came home in disgust, [illegible] as he [illegible] the people on the streets of St. Petersburg [illegible] I suppose he had as much love as he always had at that time in America of the imperial subjects of the Emperor of Russia.

Moreover, we had at that time no considerable body of Jews living in the United States as American citizens who could safeguard the interests of that race in the treaty. Since that date [illegible] have changed very much, and we know now, if we did not know then, that in Russia the Jew is not a citizen; that he only exists; that he is not allowed to live except in certain circumscribed places; that he is not permitted to enter into [illegible] in occupations; that he is not allowed to have his children educated, except to a very small proportion of such [illegible].

We know that they are crowded among the border in poverty and abject distress in many places. In spite of all that I believe the treatment of this unhappy race is due to fear on the part of Russia that if they were to have the Jews [illegible] the body politic, assimilate them into their Empire and render them a portion of their population, within two generations the Jews would be the owners of all the Russias.

Now, it is not my purpose to enter into a discussion of the whole Jewish question here. That is entirely extraneous to the subject of the remarks that I wish to make. But I wish to merely say that I have personally visited a good deal in Russia, and I have [illegible] to know Russian [illegible]. I have myself been engaged in discussions as to which the Jews of the United States of America were concerned. I have myself [illegible] without seeing those sections which stirred and filled the civilized world with horror.

I refer to the massacres at Kishenef—outrages upon the Jews—where men were stricken down before their families, where women were violated and torn to pieces, and where babes were dashed against the [illegible] of doorways [illegible] were Jews and had [illegible] of the established Christianity of Russia. I do not refer to these [illegible] and strained feeling between the two countries, but simply to eliminate the fact that under the treaty which now exists American citizens of the Hebrew faith in Russia have no more protection in the law than those people who suffer at the massacres at Kishenef. If they have any protection at all it is from a little company [illegible] Army and Navy, [illegible] I [illegible] for the [illegible] of America, and that is all so far as the law is concerned.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is almost impossible to realize that here in the twentieth century a man [illegible] from the land [illegible] equipped with a passport [illegible] upon the [illegible] of the Government of [illegible] and when he goes to the borders of Russia, a nation with which we are at peace and [illegible] we have a traditional friendship, he is stopped, he is questioned, he is [illegible] and in all, practically he is treated as a criminal [illegible]

[illegible] been his reasons for going there, whether a [illegible] for his fatherland or a desire to [illegible] which the Russian Empire or whatever his circumstances [illegible] whether he be of American stock which took part in the Revolutionary war or whether he be the proud possessor [illegible] he is an American citizen and we ought to be ashamed that he receive equal recognition with all other American citizens when they reach the Russian Empire. [Applause.]

I have said, Mr. Chairman, that this is not a matter of partisanship. I wish to [illegible] as I believe it is the [illegible] party that has [illegible] the most favorable and equal treatment to its citizens when they [illegible] and [illegible] country. Everywhere the devoted Thomas Jefferson [illegible] liberty in this country we have been [illegible] the cause of humanity [illegible] the simple monument under which lies the body of Thomas Jefferson, containing a few plain words on it summing up his career in life.

The chief among those, I believe, he himself would have considered [illegible] lesson of patriotism, industry or economy or [illegible].

And that is why, Mr. Chairman, I hope that the resolution, which is now before the Committee on Foreign Affairs, if it [illegible] Mr. GOLDFOGLE, [illegible] Member of the House of Representatives, irrespective of what religions belief he personally may have, will unite upon the common ground that American citizens, whatever their religion, whatever their race, whatever their creed, are entitled to equal representation and the protection wherever abroad. [Applause.]

Mr. GOLLIDEN. Mr. Chairman, the report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs including appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service is in such a form that I shall not say anything on this subject.

On this occasion, however, I desire to [illegible] a few words on the subject of pensions. I have heard several speeches [illegible] the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. [illegible]], Indiana [Mr. MIERS], and other States, on the management of the Bureau of Pensions. While I admit there are grounds for the same, I am forced, in

[illegible] justice to the present Commissioner of Pensions, to differ from [illegible]

In [illegible] more than a year, and with a large number of [illegible] I have had [illegible] a pleasure which [illegible] [illegible] to be the [illegible] and I [illegible] to [illegible] charges [illegible] to secure fiscal [illegible] of pension [illegible]

I have desired [illegible] to the head of the Bureau and Pensions [illegible] of the War [illegible] and efficient manner in which the public business of that office has been [illegible]

Now, a few [illegible] the matter of pensions. [illegible] from the [illegible] who [illegible] that [illegible] is [illegible] a great and [illegible] [illegible] in [illegible] [illegible] the same as for the retirement of officers of the Army and Navy. Perhaps the age of 62 would be better.

In my judgment the time of which President Cleveland spoke some years since has arrived for action. The [illegible] soldiers of the [illegible] war are thinning rapidly. A few years more and their numbers will be largely decreased. Fifty thousand died last year—almost 1,000 a week.

Now is the time for such action. Let Congress act now and do its duty to the old soldier. Now [illegible] be lost if the brave men who are left are to receive [illegible]

I desire to read an editorial from the National Tribune, of Washington, bearing on this subject and to have it printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LACEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had under consideration the bill (H. R. [illegible]), and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. SNAPP was granted leave of absence for two weeks, on account of important business.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. HITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that permission be granted for five days to those Members who have [illegible] diplomatic appropriation bill to extend [illegible]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman modifies his request, and asks that leave to print be extended to the membership of the House to print remarks upon the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill for five legislative days.

Mr. HITT. Can we agree upon the time when general debate shall close?

Mr. DINSMORE. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I shall want two hours more on this side. We could not anticipate the discussion that we got into this morning.

Mr. HITT. Then we will try and agree upon that in the morning.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, we have hitherto several times had confusion when the word "days" was used by [illegible]

The SPEAKER. "Legislative days" is the way the request was put.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I am not particular about it, Mr. Speaker, but I want it put one way or the other.

Mr. HITT. Is it not true that when a motion is put for so many days it is construed as legislative days and not calendar days?

The SPEAKER. That is a mooted question, but the House [illegible] legislative days.

Mr. WILLIAMS of [illegible] Mr. Speaker, I would like to modify the request, making [illegible] dar days. If I can be indulged in a moment, I want to say that I have a [illegible]

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Fisheries, to whom was referred the bill (S. 907) to establish on the coast of the State of California a station for the investigation of problems connected with the marine fishery interests of that region, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MALLORY, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3456) to distinctively designate parcels of land in the District of Columbia for the purposes of assessment and taxation, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS AT PORTSMOUTH, N. H.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2916) fixing the salary of the collector of customs at Portsmouth, N. H., to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. As it is a bill that it will take but a moment to consider, and it is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 2659 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out in lines the words "to the collector for the district of Portsmouth, N. H., 4 per cent."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend section 2659 of the Revised Statutes, relating to compensation of collectors of customs."

CENSUS STATISTICS OF MANUFACTURES.

Mr. QUARLES. The Committee on the Census authorize me to make a favorable report on the joint resolution (S. R. 39) directing the Director of the Census to cooperate with the secretary of state of the State of Michigan in taking the census of manufactures; and in view of the importance of speedy action, the committee having reported a bill as a substitute, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill so reported by the committee.

The bill (S. 4122) to direct the Director of the Census to cooperate with the secretary of state of the State of Michigan in taking the census of manufactures, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:
